LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Morral v. Sutton.

Construction of bequest—Inconsistent clauses—Rules of interpretation—Intention.

The rules by which inconsistent clauses of a will are construed or rejected, should be governed by the intention of the testator, apparent upon consideration of the whole will.

Diversity of opinion amongst the judges.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls upon the construction of the will of Edward Lloyd, after two arguments. The Lord Chancellor had called to his assistance Mr. Baron Parke and Mr. Justice Coleridge, and those two learned judges having differed, his lordship gave the parties time to consider whether they would re-argue the case before his lordship and two other common law judges, or whether they would prefer his lord ship's immediate decision.

The testator, after giving to three persons for life all his leasehold estate in Gloucestershire, held under the dean and chapter of Bristol, subject to certain annuities charged thereon; after their decease "gave all his said leasehold estate to Sarah Calcot, the younger, if she should be then living, her executors, administrators, and assigns, subject to the said annuities charged thereon, during the time of her natural life." And if the said S. C. the younger, should die in the lifetime of the three tenants for life, leaving any lawful issue of her body, the testator gave the said leasehold premises to such issue as tenants in common. But in the event of the death of S. C. in the lifetime of the tenants for life without issue, then the leasehold premises were given over. Sarah Calcot survived the three tenants for life, and then died, leaving issue; and the question was, whether, under the will, she had an absolute interest, or only a life estate in these leaseholds.

The following is the substance of the opinions delivered by the two learned judges.

Parke, B. after regretting that a difference of opinion existed between himself and Mr. Justice Coleridge, and stating the clause of the will on which the doubt arose, to the effect above set forth, said, The question is, whether Sarah Calcot took an absolute estate, or only a life interest in the leasehold property. In ascertaining this, we must look at the rules of construction in cases of this sort, and apply them so far as they are applicable to construing this inaccurate will. One rule of construction is, that technical words are, as far as possible, to be understood in their proper technical sense. Another is, that an endeavour must be made to give every expression contained in the will some effect. If two somewhat inconsistent modes of expression appear, that interpretation must be given which will prevent an intestacy; but if they are absolutely inconsistent, and cannot stand together, then the last must prevail. The testator must be taken to have expressed his meaning in the last bequest. It was argued that this rule of construction applied only to wills wherein separate clauses were inconsistent, not where the inconsistent expressions were in the same sentence; and Doe v. Leicester (2 Taunton, 113) was cited; but I think that rule is equally applicable when the repugnant expressions are contained in the same sentence. In applying the rule that technical words are to be used in a technical sense, the counsel of both parties contended that both clauses were strictly technical, and each contended that his own interpretation best carried out the testator's intention. The appellants contended that an absolute interest in terms was given to Sarah Calcot by the first part of the bequest, and that the subsequent words, "during the term of her natural life," referred to the annuities which were mentioned in the parenthesis immediately preceding those words. The respondents contend either that the last words qualify the former absolute gift, or that the effect of the first absolute gift was to give the legatee the legal estate, for the purpose of enabling her to renew the leases, when necessary; but there are difficulties in either construction.

For the appellant it was said that an absolute interest was intended to be given to Sarah Calcot; because it appears from that which immediately follows, that if she should die in the lifetime of certain persons, leaving issue, her issue shall take the property, which shews an intention to provide for the issue of Sarah Calcot, and that by giving her an absolute interest she is enabled to provide for her issue. If I could find in the context of the will any intention to provide for her issue, I might, in favour of that intention, reject such words of the will as would be inconsistent. But I find no indication of any intention to provide for the issue of Sarah Calcot generally, but only in the event of her death during the lifetime of the tenants for life. There is an express provision by which the benefit to the issue is made dependent upon Sarah Calcot dying in the lifetime of the tenants for life. It was suggested that the words "her executors, administrators," &c. slipped into the will by accident and through the inadvertence of the person who prepared it; and that is the most plausible construction, and most consistent with the other parts of the will. I shall not go through the cases which were cited, in some of which the last of two inconsistent clauses in a will was rejected; but I will mention some of them. In Reece v. Steele (2 Simons, 233) a clear estate tail was given, and the Court rejected a few inconsistent words. In Doe v. Stenlake (12 East, 515) there was really no difficulty. Smith v. Pybus (9 Ves. 566) is more like the present; and in Boon v. Cornforth (2 Ves. 277) words were necessarily rejected. Here there is no such necessity. There is another class of cases in which "or" has been construed "and," collected in 1 Jarman on Wills, 453.

Nor is the argument derived from a supposed intestacy, in case Sarah Calcot be held to have only a life estate, of any weight, for there is no intestacy. There is a plain residuary bequest, though remote. Under these circumstances, I must decide on the construction of this will according to established rules. The two parts of the bequest being repugnant, the last must prevail, and Sarah Calcot, therefore, took only a life interest under the will.

Coleridge, J. regretted that he was obliged to differ both from Mr. Baron Parke and the Master of the Rolls, as to the true construction of this will, but said there was no substantial difference between those learned judges and himself on principle, as to the rules by which wills are to be construed. And having stated the terms of the gift, said—I concur with Baron Parke that no satisfactory [...] suggested at the bar, by which the repugnant parts of this will can be reconciled. Then, if they cannot be reconciled, I must reject one, and that one must be rejected which does not express the intention of the testator; and in ascertaining which is to be rejected, I must shew what is the subject-matter of the bequest, and I shall shew also that the technical rules of construction which have been referred to have no bearing on the present case. It is necessary to adopt a wider construction, and in so doing I must reject the last clause and prefer the first. Whatever may be the technical rules for construing wills, whenever the general intention can be discerned, it is clearly established that no rule shall clash with that intention of the testator, but that which is inconsistent with the general purpose of his will, whether it stand first or last, must be rejected. The rule of construction is not merely an arbitrary one that in a deed you must adopt the first, and in a will the last, of two inconsistent clauses. It is no departure from the original rule to reject either the first or the last in favour of the intention. This has been done where the repugnancy was in the same sentence, as in Doe v. Biggs (2 Taunt. 309) and Boon v. Cornforth (2 Ves. 277). If I apply the rule of rejecting the first expression, contained in the same sentence, I must suppose the testator to have altered his intention while writing the same sentence, but it is much more reasonable to presume that he altered his words rather than his intention. Mr. Jarman, in the 15th chapter of his book on wills, has well stated the question, and I use his expressions:—"It is clear that words and passages in a will which are irreconcilable with the general context, may be rejected, whatever may be the local position which they happen to occupy; for the rule which gives effect to the posterior of several inconsistent clauses, must not be so applied as in any degree to clash or interfere with the doctrine which teaches us to look for the intention of a testator in the general tenor of the instrument, and to sacrifice to the scheme of disposition so disclosed any incongruous words and phrases which have found a place therein." Up to this point there is no material difference between myself and the other judges. The question is, whether the rule of taking the last expression is to be applied to this case; whether there is evidence of an alteration of intention by the testator when he used the last expression; whether there is a sufficient amount of evidence to take this clause out of the will. Now, if he has shewn an intention to provide for the children of Sarah Calcot, I must retain the words which give effect to that intention, and reject those which would defeat it. It was argued that no inference of intention can be drawn from the will it it is expressed. But that is putting the construction upon narrow ground. If a testator has provided for four contingencies, and there is a fifth contingency clearly within the scope of his general intention, that is a warrant for rejecting an inconsistent clause. All the words he has used are large enough, whether the first be taken or rejected. A mere guess, it is true, ought not to influence the decision. But it cannot be said that there is any rule of construction so strict as to bind me to reject the first of these clauses, where I see a general intention expressed in other parts of the will which is not consistent with the rejection of that clause. There is enough in this will to shew that the general tenor of the context is opposed to the rejection of the first part of the bequest.

There is a class of cases closely analogous, which shews that in order to do these strong acts, it is not necessary that there should be an inevitable cogency; it is sufficient if there is only a high degree of probability as to the intention, to be consistent with the rejection of the last clause. (Soulle v. Gerard, Cro. Eliz. 525; White v. Barber, 5 Burr. 2703, S.C. Ambler.) A posthumous child was held to take under the will, though against the words, on the presumed intention arising out of the whole context. To apply this to the present case, what is the evidence of intention? His object is plainly to limit the property to Sarah Calcot and her issue; and on the other hand, in a certain event there would be an intestacy as to this large property. Though there is a residuary clause, it is enough to say that he has shewn it was not intention that should operate to the prejudice of the issue of Sarah Calcot. His object was to preserve the estate; he anxiously provides for the renewal of the lease. Sarah Calcot and her issue are the objects of his bounty, and limitations in favour of her issue are expressly inserted, in the event of her death during the lifetime of the tenants for life. If she survived the tenants for life, she would take the absolute interest, and so could provide for her issue. The remainder-man was only to take in default of her issue. To apply the reasoning of the Court in White v. Barber to this case, it is obvious the construction above indicated will prevail. Why should the remainder-man be provided for in the one case and not in the other? It is said we cannot infer conclusions, but that is not correct; I cannot take one construction to be reasonable, the other the reverse, solely because he is to be taken to have changed his intention before he had written the same sentence. I am of opinion that Sarah Calcot took an absolute interest in the lease-hold estates in Gloucestershire given by the testator's will.

This case has been mentioned several subsequent times, and has stood over, in consequence of negotiations for a compro[illegible] stated by counsel to have been in progress.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Thursday, Feb. 13.

BROWN v. COLE.

Mortgage—Under what circumstances the Court will refuse a mortgagor to redeem before the day mentioned in the mortgage-deed, upon payment of principal and interest up to the day of redemption.

The plaintiff B demised to the defendant C certain leasehold property to secure to him the repayment of 1,000l. subject to the following proviso for redemption, viz. that "if B, his heirs, executors, or administrators, should well and truly pay or cause to be paid to the said C, his executors, administrators, or assigns, the said principal sum of 1,000l. on the 1st day of April, 1845, and also interest thereon in the meantime, without any deduction or abatement whatever, together with all costs and expenses which the said C, his executors, administrators, or assigns, might have incurred on account of the thereby demised premises, or in carrying the therein-mentioned trusts into effect, then and immediately after such payment the said C, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would, at the request, costs, and charges of the person making such payment, assign and assure the said premises thereby demised unto the person making such payment, &c."

B, being desirous of paying off the mortgage-money with interest before the time mentioned in the mortgage deed for redemption, viz. 1st of April, 1845, applied to C for that purpose, offering to pay, in addition to the principal sum, and interest up to the 1st of April, 1845, all costs, charges, and expenses which might be incurred in so doing, and a draft release was accordingly submitted to C for that purpose. This C refused to comply with.

Held, upon a demurrer, that B, the mortgagor, could not compel C to receive his money, and interest in advance, before the time mentioned in the mortgage deed.

The bill [illegible] that the plaintiff, b[illegible] possessed of cert[illegible] leaseh[illegible] dw[illegible]lling [illegible]uses and pieces of land situate in th[illegible] parish of L[illegible]eth, in the county of Surrey, and ha[illegible] occasion for a sum of money, applied to the defe[illegible]ant, Edmund Cole, to lend him the same. Whereupon, by a certain indenture of assignment by way of mortgage, bearing date the 1st of April, 1844, and made between W. West therein described of the first part, the plaintiff of the second part, and the defendant of the third part, reciting a certain indenture of mortgage, 16th March, 1844, for s[illegible] W. W[illegible] the sum of 1,200l.; and furt[illegible] reciting that the p[illegible] having occasion for the s[illegible] of 1,000l. had applied to the said defendant t[illegible] lend him the same, and that it was intended that the [illegible] sum of 1,000l. should be paid to the said W. We[illegible] part disc[illegible] of the said mortgage of 1,200l. h[illegible] pl[illegible]iff, by the direction of the said W. We[illegible] therein mentioned, demised, and the s[illegible] W. We[illegible] did demise and confirm unto the said defendant, his [illegible]cutors administrators, and assigns, all th[illegible] pie[illegible] parcel of ground and messuages thereon [illegible] with [illegible] th the said W. West [illegible] and assigns and [illegible] for th[illegible] b[illegible]ing, to hold unto th[illegible] defendant [illegible] administra-tors [illegible] day of the date thereof, for the [illegible] of [illegible] years wanting twe[illegible] lease granted less one d[illegible] in contained. And [illegible] April 1844. prov[illegible] said plaintiff, or either [illegible] his heirs, execu-tors [illegible] well and truly pay, [illegible] said defendant, his exec[illegible] the said prin-cipal [illegible] money, on the 1st d[illegible] there in the [illegible] per annum by [illegible] of July, the 1st [illegible] and the 1st d[illegible] together wi[illegible] said defendant, his ex[illegible] assigns might hav[illegible] be thereby de-mi[illegible] in afore-sai[illegible] immediately after such [illegible] executors, ad[illegible] request, cost[illegible] person or persons so mak[illegible] his or their exe-cut[illegible] assign and assure the s[illegible] unto the person or per[illegible] aforesaid, his or the[illegible] assigns, or as he [illegible] however, to such equity of redemption as should for the time being be subsisting therein under or by virtue of the said indenture of 16th day of March, 1844, and particularly to the lien, claim, or demand, if any, of the said W. West, his executors, administrators, or assigns thereon in respect of the remainder of the said mortgage debt of 1,200l. or the interest thereof, or any part thereof respectively, or otherwise.

On or about the 18th of November, 1844, the plaintiff having paid off to W. West the whole of the mortgage-money and interest; the said W. West, by an indenture of that date, released the property from all claim in respect of the same.

The plaintiff being desirous of granting a lease of part of the mortgaged estate, applied to the defendant to concur with him therein, which he agreed to do upon having 250l. part of the purchase-money for the said lease, paid to him in part discharge of his mortgage of 1,000l. In consequence of which a lease was, on the 29th of November following, granted by the plaintiff and defendant, to one James Smith, from the 29th of September, then past, for the term of 78¾ years wanting twenty-one days, at a yearly rent therein mentioned.

All interest in respect of the sum of 1,000l. so secured to be paid to the defendant as before mentioned, was duly paid by the plaintiff to the defendant down to the 1st of October, 1844, and all interest in respect of the sum of 250l. part of the said principal sum of 1,000l. was duly paid by the plaintiff to the defendant down to the day of payment of the said sum of 250l. as before mentioned.

The principal sum of 750l. only, with interest thereon from the 1st of October, 1844, remained due from the plaintiff to the defendant by virtue of the [in]denture of mortgage of the 1st of April, 1844.

The plaintiff being desirous of having the estate and premises discharged from the mortgage of 1,000l. and interest, proposed to the defendant to pay him the principal sum of 750l. so remaining due to him, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5l. per cent., to be computed from the 1st of October, 1844, to the 1st of April, 1845, being the day mentioned in the proviso for redemption of the estate in the indenture of mortgage contained, and a release was accordingly prepared. The plaintiff was ready and offered to the defendant to invest the balance of the mortgage money in the public funds or otherwise to secure the same with a view to the full guarantee of the defendant against all possibility of loss, and offered also to deposit the sum of 50l. with the solicitor of the defendant to secure to him the ultimate payment of his full demand; but the defendant refused to accede to any terms of compromise or arrangement; the present suit was therefore instituted. The bill prayed for the usual account and for liberty to redeem and to have the estate re-assigned to the plaintiff upon payment of the principal, interest, and costs. It prayed also for an injunction to restrain any proceedings at law or in equity against the plaintiff in respect of the mortgage security, and for a receiver. Authors cited: Coote on Mort. 646; 2 Black.

Stuart and Miller, in support of the demurrer, contended that the mortgagor was bound by a contract to allow the money to remain on the security of the property until a certain period mentioned in the mortgage-deed (this contract the plaintiff sought to break); that in the bill the mortgagor asks not only that the mortgagee shall take his money back before the proper time, but even that he may pay the costs; that the bill prayed not only for a receiver, but that the defendant should not take any proceedings either at law or in equity. The equity of redemption was established because it was formally considered in the light of a penalty, viz. an absolute forfeiture. That the contract for the money being paid on, and not before, the 1st of April, with costs, ought to be regarded strictly, and with regard to the general question, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, the bill could not be sustained, and the demurrer ought to be allowed.

Wakefield and Steere, for the plaintiff.—The mortgagor having borrowed 1,000l. has continued to pay the interest up to the present time, the mortgagee in the [mean]while having consented to receive 250l. of his money. The mortgagor having finished one or two houses wishes to sell, and offers to pay off the remainder of the mortgage-money; but the mortgagee says, "I will not receive my money, but will have your sale." What difference can it make, whether the money is paid now, with interest up to the 1st of April, and its being paid at that time? There is a difference between a bill to foreclose, and one to redeem; because in the former you take away a man's rights. We [can]not come too soon, and have a right to redeem. The mortgaged estate is only a pledge till the mortgagor chooses to repay his money, and all the interest due, when he has a right to have his property back again. It is contended on the other side that we seek to break a contract, which is that the money shall not be repaid till a certain day. Now, if there be any contract, it has been broken already by the defendant, when he received back 250l. of his money. Suppose the plaintiff had made his tender on the 31st March, instead of the 1st of April, the actual day mentioned in the deed, is he to be told that he must wait till the next day? Now, if he can come a day before, why not a week or a month? We cannot get back the estate at law; our only remedy is in this Court, which does not look at the penalty, but only the principal, interest, and costs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I endeavoured some time ago to find out whether there existed any law to support the usage in the Profession, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, but was not able. It does not appear that at present this Court has any jurisdiction, because the bill is silent with regard to the estate having become forfeited at law; and until the mortgagor comes to claim his equity of redemption, in consequence of such forfeiture, I cannot interfere.

Demurrer allowed.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Thursday, March 6.

NORTON v. PRITCHARD.

Executors of insolvent estate—Breach of trust—Costs. Where a breach of trust had been committed by several persons, and one of them died insolvent, his executors, who had fully administered the assets come to their hands, being made parties to a suit with regard to the breach of trust without previous inquiry by the plaintiff as to the solvency of the estate, were held under the circumstances to be entitled to their costs as between party and party.

In this suit a question arose as to costs, which will be sufficiently explained by the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Russell and Sydney Bell, for the plaintiffs, who were infants.

Chandless, for the executors, cited Adair v. Shaw (1 Sch. & Lef. 262).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Bradbury Norton was one of several persons who had committed a breach of trust. He died leaving other trustees who had participated in the breach of trust. His will was proved by these defendants. The plaintiff, complaining of this breach of trust, there being living parties liable, does not inquire before the institution of the suit how the affairs of Bradbury Norton stood—whether he left property or not—but makes the executors of Bradbury Norton parties. The executors by their answer allege that the estate of their testator was insolvent, and they state that all the assets which have come to their hands have been duly administered. By the decree made in the suit, an account is directed to be taken of his assets. Neither the plaintiff nor any of the defendants think it proper to pursue that account. The cause now comes on upon further directions, and it is stated that all the parties are unwilling to pursue this account. Under all these circumstances, then, I am of opinion that the executors of Bradbury Norton are entitled, having conducted themselves reasonably and properly in this suit, to their costs between party and party, to be paid to them by the next friend, but the next friend will be entitled to add them to his own.

Saturday, March 8.

WORTHAM v. PEMBERTON.

Practice—Married woman—Infant.

A bill may be filed in the name of an infant married woman by her next friend without her consent.

In this case a petition was presented by W. B. Newenham, a prisoner under sentence for the abduction of the plaintiff, Frances Louisa Wortham, praying that he might be discharged from contempt; that certain orders made in the cause on the 16th and 18th of December, 1843, might be discharged, and that the bill might be taken off the file.

This petition was presented under the following circumstances:—On the 13th of October, 1843, the petitioner eloped with Miss Wortham, then under fifteen years of age, and went to Scotland, where they were married on the 15th of October. On the 15th of December a bill was filed by the mother in the name and as the next friend of the infant against the trustees of the infant's property, stating the circumstances of the abduction, and praying the appointment of a guardian, &c. On the 16th of December an order was made restraining the petitioner from all intercourse with the infant, and on the 18th of December the petitioner was ordered to deliver up the infant to her mother, and personally to attend in court on the 22nd of December. The petitioner did not attend on that day, and an order was then made for his committal for contempt. Before this order was executed the petitioner was apprehended for the misdemeanor, of which he was afterwards convicted, and he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. In August 1844 a child, the issue of the petitioner and the infant, was born. The Master had found and reported that the marriage had taken place on the 15th October, 1843.

Russell and Malins, for the petitioner, stated that he was sorry for his contempt in not obeying the orders of the Court, though they were irregular. The suit was, however, erroneously instituted, as the plaintiff was a married woman, and they had described her by her maiden name and as a spinster, without making her husband a party.

Swanston and Prendergast, for the mother and next friend of the infant.

The cases of Cooke v. Prior (3 Bea. Repts.); Like v. Beresford (3 Ves. 506); and Ball v. Coutts (1 V. & B. 300), were cited.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I do not intend finally to dispose of this petition now. If the second part of the argument for the petitioner were to prevail, it would strike at the root of the power and authority of the Court. It would deprive it of its authority in those most serious and most affecting cases where the infant is carried off by fraud or force, and the family is in ignorance where the infant is, whether married or not. The infant in this case is described as a single woman, at a period when it has since appeared she was married, but when it was uncertain whether she was married or not. She is described as a single woman, and by the name she bore when single, in a bill the object of which was to make her a ward of court. The husband, the man who carried her off, as might be expected, was not made a party. It has been said that such a bill ought to be taken off the file, and that every thing which has been done under it should go for nothing. I cannot accede to such a proposition, without admitting that a bill cannot be filed by her next friend in the name and on behalf of a married woman, who is an infant, without the consent of such infant. The question occurred to me during the argument, and I have the opinion of Mr. Colville and Mr. Colville, jun. that such a bill can be filed, and that opinion appears to coincide with the impression of the Master of the Rolls in Cooke v. Prior. Although the infant was married before the bill was filed, yet this may be a case in which it will be my duty to direct a settlement. If the bill is not now regular, it may, either by amendment or supplemental bill, be made so. I am not now in a position to do complete justice, by reason of my ignorance of the real state of the property, and I cannot, therefore, fully dispose of the petition. Taking the master's report to be final, I shall direct that part of the order to be discharged which directs the infant to be delivered to the custody of her mother, and restrains the petitioner from having intercourse with the infant.

Discharge such part of the order of the 18th of December as directs the infant to be delivered to her mother. Direct that the petitioner shall have such correspondence, communication, and intercourse with the infant as he would be entitled to have if neither of the orders had been made; and, the defendants consenting, let the next friend of the plaintiff be at liberty to amend the bill, or to file a bill of supplement, as she may be advised; the amendment to be made without prejudice to the contempt; and let the petition in all other respects stand over.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Huntingdon, Wednesday, March 19.

(Before Mr. Justice Patteson.)

Nix v. The Earl of Fitzwilliam and William Bristow.

Landlord and tenant—Distress—Condition of sale according to custom of country—Auction duty—Evidence under general issue by statute.

Where the declaration in an action for an excessive distress omits some of the goods seized, the plaintiff cannot rely on them in order to prove his count for seizing too much, though they are included in the notice of distress.

It is not competent to sell goods seized under a distress for rent subject to any condition, though grounded on the custom of the country, the Act requiring the goods to be sold for the best price which can be gotten for them.

Where enough money has been raised by the sale of goods under a distress to satisfy the rent and charges, and the plaintiff requests the auctioneer to proceed to sell others, the property so sold is subject to the auction duty.

The defendants may give evidence of "leave and license" under the plea of the general issue by statute; and the presence of the plaintiff at the sale, and his request to the auctioner to sell the surplus goods, are evidence to support such defence.

Case—for taking more goods than were reasonably sufficient to cover a distress for the sum of 182*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* due from the plaintiff to the defendant for the rent of a farm, the said goods being stated in the 1st count to be stacks, stock, agricultural implements, and furniture. The 2nd count was for not selling the same for the best prices which could be gotten for them; the 3rd, for not appraising the goods; and the 4th, for extortionate charges on the part of the auctioneer, the defendant Bristow.

Plea—Not guilty by statute.

Dasent and O'Malley, for the plaintiff, proved, in support of the first count, that the notice of distress contained not only the goods mentioned in the declaration, but also the growing crops, which, together with the rent, amounted in value to the sum of 450*l.* Under the second count it was shewn, that at the sale of the stacks the defendant Bristow gave out the conditions of sale by word of mouth, and among them was one which bound the purchasers to thresh the corn on the farm and leave the straw on the premises, such condition being in accordance with the custom of the country, which imposed such terms on tenants. By this condition it was proved that a loss of 40*l.* was sustained at the sale of the stacks, and this, it was contended, was a loss which conferred a right of action on the plaintiff; for though the custom of the country might be such as between landlords and tenants whereby the proper cultivation of the lands should be secured, yet the landlord had no right to impose that custom by way of condition of sale under a distress for rent, when the Act expressly stated that the goods distrained should be sold for the best price which could be gotten for the same. In support of the third count, evidence was given to shew that no appraisement had taken place of the goods sold; and as to the fourth count, reliance was placed on the account furnished by defendant Bristow, in which was an item of 1*l.* 14*s.* for auction duty on 34*l.* which, it was urged, he was not authorized by law to charge, the auction duty being expressly excluded from all sales under distress for rent. On cross-examination, it appeared that the plaintiff was present on the farm, and in the house during the sale, and that when the auctioneer had sold a sufficient quantity of goods to satisfy the distress and the charges, he said to him that, "as he had sold the best of the things, he might as well go on and sell the rest;" on which the defendant Bristow proceeded to sell property to the amount of 34*l.*

At the close of the plaintiff's case,

Byles, Serjt. (with whom was Archer), submitted that the plaintiff was not at liberty to introduce the growing crops into the claim under the count for an excessive distress, as though they had been seized and were included in the notice of distress, they were not enumerated in the declaration. As to the second count, he contended that the defendants were justified by the custom of the country in selling the stacks, subject to the condition of sale complained of, and that, therefore, the best price had been gotten for them that was attainable under the circumstances. With reference to the third count, for not appraising, though it certainly did not appear that that step had been taken, yet, as the defendant had pleaded the general issue by statute, they were at liberty to prove leave and license under it, just as they would before the new rules; and on that point it was contended, that the presence of the plaintiff, and his request to the defendant Bristow to sell the further lots, were facts from which the jury might infer his assent both to the non-appraisement and to the imposition of the condition of sale. With respect to the fourth count, it was argued, that the duty was properly chargeable on goods sold after the request of the plaintiff, for then the sale ceased to be one under the distress, and became a private one, which was not exempted therefrom.

Patteson, J. (having consulted Parke, B.) said.—It is clear that the plaintiff cannot introduce the seizure of the growing crops under the first count, for they are not specified therein together with the rest of the goods seized. I do not think, therefore, that there is any ground for damages on that count, for the balance, 31*l.* 19*s.* is not too wide a margin for the landlord to take under such circumstances; and if he requested the defendant to sell goods to the amount of 34*l.* after the distress was satisfied, he cannot now complain on that score. With respect to the second count, for not selling the goods for the best price that could be gotten for them, I am clearly of opinion that there is evidence to support it; for the auctioneer had no right to impose such a condition of sale upon the purchaser under a distress for rent, although it may be in accordance with the custom of the country that the produce of the farm should be consumed on it by the tenant. When goods are sold under a distress, the best price cannot be said to be gotten for them if their sale is clogged with a condition which (as is here proved) entails a diminution of 40*l.* on their value. On this subject I have so ruled before, and on speaking to my brother Parke, I learn that on that occasion there was a rule nisi for a new trial, which was refused by the Court of Exchequer, out of which the record issued in that case. It, however, appears from the same authority that, on a subsequent occasion, my brother Maule ruled the same point the other way, and the same Court, on motion, refused a rule in that case, their attention not having been drawn to what had been done on a former occasion. My brother Parke adds, however, that he agrees with me, and I shall have, therefore, no hesitation in adhering to my original opinion upon this subject, leaving it to the defendants to move if it be necessary. As for the fourth count, I entertain no doubt that the charge for auction duty is not illegal, as the sale, to the extent of 34*l.* was clearly a private one, and not under the distress for rent.

His lordship then summed up the case to the jury, in accordance with the opinion thus expressed, leaving it to them to say whether they saw enough in the conduct of the plaintiff at the sale from which they could infer his assent to the proceedings which were illegal. If so, they might, under the plea of the general issue, find a verdict for the defendants, as it was not competent to the plaintiff to assent to an illegality, and then make it the foundation for an action.

Dasent objected that there was no evidence to go to the jury of any assent; but the question being so left to them, they found a verdict generally for the defendants.

Cambridge, Tuesday, March 25.

Reg. v. Brabcock.

Embezzlement—Authority to receive money—Employment.

An indictment for embezzlement cannot be supported, unless there either be an employment of the prisoner as a servant by the prosecutor, or an express authority be given to him to demand and receive the money charged to have been embezzled by him.

The prisoner was indicted for having feloniously embezzled the sum of 10s. received by him by virtue of his employment as the servant of the prosecutor.

Sanders, for the prosecution, proved that the prisoner had formerly been apprenticed to the prosecutor, who is a shoemaker, and that on a certain day he came to him and ordered two pairs of shoes to be made for two ladies. When the shoes were made, he called again, and offered to take home the shoes. They were therefore given to him for that purpose by the prosecutor, but no authority whatever was given to him to ask for or receive the price of them. Not long after this the prosecutor met him, and demanded the money; which, though he did not deny to have received, he declined to hand over.

Patteson, J.—This charge cannot be supported on this evidence. An express authority to receive the money charged to have been feloniously embezzled, or a general employment as a servant, must be proved; for the indictment alleges that the money was received by virtue of such employment as servant. The prisoner in this case was not employed to carry home these goods as a servant, nor had he any authority to demand or receive the price of them. He did not, therefore, receive money by virtue of any employment by the prosecutor; and if customers pay money under such circumstances, they do so in their own wrong; and being still liable to the prosecutor, he is not damnified by the act of the prisoner. The prisoner, therefore, must be acquitted. Not guilty.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

FEBRUARY SESSION.

Monday, Feb. 10.

Reg. v. Smison.

Indictment against a master of vessel for leaving behind in foreign parts a seaman, one of his crew—A certificate by the authorized officer, to the effect that the master had sworn before him that the seaman had deserted, is insufficient under the 42nd section—The fact of the desertion must be certified by the officer.

The defendant was indicted under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 19, for having, as master of a vessel, left behind, in foreign parts, a seaman who had been one of the crew of the said vessel, engaged for a certain voyage. The indictment was as follows:—

"Central Criminal Court, To wit, } The jurors of our lady the Queen, upon their oath, present, that Alexander Smison, late of London, mariner, heretofore, to wit, on the 1st day of May, in the seventh year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady, &c. upon the high sea, within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, and within the jurisdiction of the said Court, was the master of a certain ship, that is to say, a certain British merchant ship, called the Elizabeth, of Bristol, belonging to certain subjects of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; that is to say, the said Alexander Smison and one William Martin; and that one William Burgess was then and there a person belonging to the crew of the said Alexander Smison, and on board the said ship, duly engaged by the said Alexander Smison, so being such master as aforesaid, as one of the original crew to serve in the said ship in a certain voyage, to wit, a voyage from the port of London to the city of Quebec, in Lower Canada, North America, in parts beyond the seas, and back to the port of London. And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said Alexander Smison, so being such master as aforesaid, and whilst he was such master as aforesaid, and whilst the said William Burgess was one of his crew as aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on the 13th June, in the year aforesaid, with force and arms, unlawfully, wilfully, and wrongfully did leave the said William Burgess behind on shore at a certain place in her Majesty's dominions, to wit at Quebec, in Lower Canada, North America, aforesaid, before the return of the said ship to the said United Kingdom, and before the completion of the said voyage, for which he, the said William Burgess, had been, and then was, engaged as aforesaid; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace, &c. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said Alexander Smison afterwards, to wit, on the 28th day of January, in the 8th year of the reign, &c. was found, happened to be, and now is, at the parish of St. Dunstan, Stebonheath, otherwise Stepney, in the county of Middlesex, and within the jurisdiction of the said Court."

The 42nd section of the above statute enacts, "That no such master shall be at liberty to leave behind at any place abroad, either on shore or at sea, any person of his crew, as aforesaid, on the plea of such person not being in a condition to proceed on the voyage, or having deserted from the ship, or otherwise disappeared, unless upon a previous certificate in writing of one of such functionaries or merchants as aforesaid, if there be any such at or within a reasonable distance from the place where the ship shall then be, if there be time to procure the same, certifying that such person is not in such condition, or has deserted, or disappeared, and cannot be brought back; and all such functionaries as aforesaid are hereby authorized and required, on the application of any such master, to inquire, by examination on oath, into the circumstances, and to give or refuse such certificate, according to the result of such examination."

Ballantine, for the defendant, put in a certificate of which the following is a copy:—

"Province of Lower Canada, District of Quebec.

"Personally came and appeared before me this day, Alexander Smison, master of the bark Elizabeth, of Bristol, who, being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists, declared and said that Wm. Burgess and Augustus Warnby, seamen belonging to the said vessel, did on the 10th instant desert from her while at Quebec, and further saith that they are now absent without leave.

"(Signed) Edward Boxer,
Commissioner for carrying into effect the Imperial Act of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 19, respecting Merchant Seamen.

"Sworn before me at Quebec, this 11th day of June, 1844."

Mr. Commissioner Bullock.—This is merely the evidence of the captain, which does not seem to have been acted upon. He seems to have taken the first step properly, but there is no certificate such as the Act requires.

Ballantine.—It is proved in evidence that this is the only certificate ever granted. There is no question that the party granting it was duly authorized to do so. The captain's information was duly taken upon oath, and that seems by the Act all that is required to give security to the master.

Mr. Commissioner Bullock, after consultation with the Recorder.—I cannot receive this as a certificate under the Act. It does not state the facts as ascertained by the proper authority; it merely proves that the captain swore certain things before him. The Act requires the proper officer to certify that the truth is so, not that that another person deposed to it.

The case proceeded, but the defendant was acquitted.

MARCH SESSION.
Friday, March 7.
Reg. v. Scully and Others.

Where a box of plate was brought up from the bottom of the river by ballast-heavers while engaged in their ordinary business, and the contents were disposed of by them, it is a question for the jury whether, under the circumstances, they had sufficient means of discovering the owner, or had wilfully abstained from making any endeavours towards such discovery, to constitute a larceny.

The prisoners were indicted for larceny under the following circumstances:—The prosecutor in October last in going up the river with a box of plate, had lost it overboard under Waterloo-bridge. There was a card with his name on it fastened on the box at the time. Early in February the prisoners, in getting up ballast from the bottom of the river in a spot considerably below Waterloo-bridge, had picked up the said box, and having broken it open, had sold the plate to different parties, to whom, however, they related how they became possessed of it. There was no evidence to shew whether the card was on the box at the time it was found, but having lain under water so long, and having drifted so far, the fair presumption might be that it was destroyed.

Payne, for the prisoners, suggested that, under these circumstances, the charge of larceny could not be sustained. It is laid down in Arch. 173, 7th ed., that if a man lose goods and another find them, and, not knowing the owner, convert them to his own use, it is no larceny, even although he deny the finding of them or secrete them.

Bodkin, as amicus curiæ, mentioned the very late case of R. v. Mole (1 Car. & Kir. 417), in which it was held by Mr. Justice Coleridge that the finder of a purse of gold, converting the money to his own use, could not be convicted of larceny if he acted under the bonâ fide belief that by the finding he had acquired a right so to appropriate it.

Mr. Commissioner Bullock, after consulting Mr. Baron Parke.—The learned baron is of opinion that the question must be left to the jury, whether, under the circumstances, the prisoners had sufficient means of discovering the owner, or had wilfully abstained from making any endeavours towards such discovery. In either of these cases the offence would be larceny; but, on the other hand, if they believed at the time they obtained the property that inquiry would be useless, or if the jury should be of opinion that no sufficient means of inquiry was open to them, an acquittal ought to be the result.

The question was so left, and the jury immediately acquitted the prisoners.

Monday, March 3.
Reg. v. Howell and Others.

Indictment for burglary. The dwelling-house was alleged to be in parish A. the evidence shewed that it was partly in parish A and partly in parish B, but that the part broken was situated in A—Held, a good description.

The indictment alleged the intent to be then and there (viz. in the parish of A) to steal, and further, that the prisoners did then and there steal certain property. The room in which the felony was committed was partly in parish A and partly in B; the property actually stolen was in part B, but in the same room there was abundant other property of the prosecutor situated in part A: Held, that the portion of the charge which alleged an actual stealing in A might be rejected, and the prisoners might be convicted of breaking with intent to steal property in the parish of A.

The prisoners were indicted for burglary, upon the following indictment:—

"Central Criminal Court, to wit. } The jurors of our sovereign lady the Queen, upon their oath, present that T. Howell, late of the parish of St. Edmund the King and Martyr, in London, and within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, labourer, F. Smith, late of the same place, labourer, and R. Franklin, late of the same place, labourer, on the 10th day of January, in the 8th year of the reign of our sovereign lady Victoria, by the grace of God, &c. about the hour of ten in the night of the same day, with force and arms, at the parish aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of the said Court, the dwelling house of Geo. Warriner there situate feloniously and burglariously did break and enter, with intent the goods and chattels in the same dwelling-house then and there being feloniously and burglariously to steal, take, and carry away, and then and there, with force and arms, two rings of the value of five shillings, of the goods and chattels of Felix Gatayes, in the same dwelling-house then and there being found, feloniously and burglariously did steal, take, and carry away, against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity."

The house in which the burglary was committed was a tavern, of which Geo. Warriner was the proprietor, and Felix Gatayes was a guest occupying a room in the said tavern. The outer door of the house always remained open during the day, and through this the prisoners had made their way to the room in question, which they entered by means of a skeleton key. The tavern was situated within two parishes, the boundary line which separated them running through the room of Gatayes. The door of the house, the door of the room, and the greater portion of the room itself, were in the parish laid in the indictment; but a chest of drawers from which the rings were abstracted was in the parish of St. Michael, Cornhill.

Payne, on behalf of the prisoner Howell, submitted that there was a variance between the local description in the indictment, and that proved. The prisoners were alleged to be of a certain parish, and this was referred to subsequently in describing the dwelling-house as there situate, meaning in the parish of St. Edmund the King and Martyr; but it was proved in evidence that the dwelling was situate in two parishes, and therefore the allegation, which was a material one, was not sustained. It was true that the part of the house broken was in the parish laid, but the statement was not that the breaking was in the parish, but that the dwelling-house was so. It is further alleged that certain property was there stolen, meaning in the before-mentioned parish; but it was now clear that the place where the rings were deposited was in another parish. He then referred to R. v. Bennett (R. & R. 289) where a somewhat similar point was raised but not determined. This was, therefore, a new case, and one which, he confidently submitted, must be decided in favour of the prisoner. At any rate he was entitled to ask of the prosecution whether they would rely on the burglary, or relinquishing that, rest their case on the larceny of the goods.

B. C. Robinson, for the prosecution.—It is not less true that the dwelling-house of a party is in a particular parish, merely because some small portion of it is in another parish. Every part material to the present indictment is situated as laid, and this constitutes the distinction between the present case and that of R. v. Bennett. There the part broken was not in the parish laid, but was assumed to be parcel of a dwelling-house situated in the alleged parish. A single dwelling, part of which is occupied by A, and another part by B, may be taken to be two; so that a burglary in B.'s portion may be alleged to be in his dwelling-house. This shews that a house is severable when occupied by two persons, and why may it not be so when occupied by one? As to the goods stolen being located in another parish, it is immaterial, since there is no necessity to allege a stealing at all; breaking, with intent to steal, is the gist of the charge, and as there were other goods in the same room which were situated in the alleged parish, it will be a question for the jury whether the intent was not to steal them as well as those which were actually stolen. The portion of the indictment, therefore, which sets out the stealing may be rejected as surplusage, as far as the burglary is concerned. But still the jury may, if they think proper, convict of the simple larceny, for local description is for such purpose unnecessary, and a stealing being alleged, the words there situate are superfluous, and may be struck out.

The Recorder.—The common sense of the matter seems to me to be that the dwelling-house may be properly laid to be in the parish, where all the acts necessary to support the charge were committed; although some part of it is in another parish, but it is for you to consider whether it may not be safer to rely on the larceny alone, since, if I am wrong in my view of the point, the whole indictment will fail.

B. C. Robinson submitted that he was not bound to elect, and considering that no property was found upon the prisoners, though they were immediately apprehended, the jury might perhaps think that the larceny was not sufficiently proved. He deemed it right, therefore, that the whole case should go to the jury, and the prosecution would take the risk of such verdict as they might think proper to pronounce.

The Recorder (in summing up).—It appears to me that the indictment is sufficient. The objection relied on is, that the word "dwelling-house" has relation to the whole house, and, as the whole house is not in the parish laid, that there is therefore a variance. But whatever might have been the mode of access, or whether we take the outer door or the door of the room itself, they are all in the alleged parish. It might have been charged that the dwelling-house was in two parishes, but I doubt whether that would have been correct, inasmuch as the part broken could only be situated in one. It is true that the local description must be strictly proved, but I think it is here fully established by the evidence. I would, however, assuming you believe the facts, recommend you to limit your verdict to the breaking with intent to steal, rejecting that part which alleges the stealing, since it is clear that the stealing, if any, was in another parish. Or you may in your discretion, omitting all reference to the burglary, limit your verdict to the mere stealing.

The jury pronounced the following verdict:—Guilty of the offence of burglary in the parish in the indictment mentioned; not guilty of stealing the goods.

The Recorder respited the judgment until he should have had an opportunity of consulting the judges on the point above raised.

March 7.—The Recorder said that he had consulted two of the learned judges on the above case, and they were of opinion that the evidence supported the indictment, and that the conviction was good.

CITY OF LONDON TRADE.

Intituled, " An Act for enabling persons to trade and work within the city of London." (Brought in by Lord Brougham.)

Recites, that in the city of London, as well as in other cities, towns, and boroughs, a certain custom had prevailed, and certain bye-laws have been made, that no person, not being free of such city and of such other cities, towns, and boroughs, or of certain liveries, guilds, mysteries, or trading companies within the same, or some or one of them, shall keep any shop or place for putting to shew or sale any or certain wares or merchandize, by way of retail or otherwise, or use any or certain trades or occupations, mysteries or handicrafts, for hire, gain, or sale, within the same city, or other cities, towns or boroughs, and whereas by law all such disqualifications, exclusions, and incapacities to deal or trade, or work and labour, have now for some time ceased and determined in all other cities, towns, and boroughs; and whereas it is expedient that the same should now from henceforward likewise cease and determine within the city of London: be it enacted, that any person may, within the city of London, keep any shop for the sale of all lawful wares or merchandizes, by wholesale or retail, and use any lawful trade, occupation, mystery, and handicraft, for hire, gain, sale, or otherwise, within the said city of London, any law, custom, bye-law, or usage to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding.

PUBLIC MUSEUMS, &c.

Intituled, "A Bill for the Protection of Property contained in public Museums, Galleries, Cabinets, Libraries, and other public repositories, from malicious injuries." (Brought in by the Solicitor-General and Sir J. Graham.) Proposes to enact:—

Sec. 1. That from and after the passing of this Act, if any person shall maliciously destroy or damage any thing contained or kept in any public museum, gallery, cabinet, library, or other public repository whether such thing be kept for the purposes of art, science, or literature, or as an object of curiosity, and whether such thing be or be not of any intrinsic value, every such person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, being duly convicted thereof by due course of law, shall be liable to be imprisoned with or without hard labour for any period not exceeding two years, and, if a male, may, during the period of such imprisonment, be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped, in such manner and form as the Court before which such person shall be tried shall direct.

2. The word " public" shall be deemed and construed to extend to all museums, galleries, cabinets, libraries, and other repositories to which the public are admitted, either gratuitously or for money, and also to all such as belong to any university, college, hospital, or to any body of persons incorporated or associated for the promotion of any art, science, or branch of learning or literature whatsoever.

3. The destruction or damage of any such thing as aforesaid shall be deemed to be malicious in all cases where the Act is wilful, without lawful justification or excuse.

4. Any person found committing any offence against this Act may be immediately apprehended without a warrant by any other person, and forthwith taken before some neighbouring justice of the peace to be dealt with according to law.

5. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed or construed to take away the right of any owner or trustee of such property so destroyed or damaged to recover by action at law compensation or damages for the injury so committed by any person against his property.

LAW OF BASTARDY.

Recites that divers questions have been raised as to the validity of certain orders in bastardy made by justices under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which questions are wholly beside the merits of the cases; and it is desirable to remove such questions, and to prevent the recurrence of the same or similar questions in future: it is therefore proposed to be enacted:—

1. That where any proceedings have been had or taken before the passing of this Act, or shall hereafter be had or taken in matters of bastardy under the provisions of the said recited Act, and shall have been set forth according to the forms in the schedule hereunto annexed, or to the like tenor or effect, the same shall be taken respectively to have been and to be valid and sufficient in law; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent any Court of General Quarter Sessions from proceeding to hear and determine the merits of any case brought before them on appeal against any such order, or apply to any order made or professed to have been made under the said Act, which shall have been quashed on appeal to any General Quarter Session of the peace, or in respect whereof any writ of certiorari shall have been sued out of the Court of Queen's Bench, and served before the twenty-sixth day of February last.

2. That when any order made under the provision of the said Act prior to the passing of this Act shall have been or shall be quashed for any defect therein, and not upon the merits, it shall be lawful for the mother of the bastard child in whose favour such order shall have been made to take proceedings for the obtaining of another order, according to the provisions of the said Act, at any time within the space of six calendar months after the passing of this Act, although the period limited for her application to the justice under the said Act shall have expired.

3. Reciting that power is given by the said Act to the putative father to appeal against an order made upon him by the justices in petty session assembled, giving notice of appeal as therein specified, and also sufficient security, by recognizance or otherwise, for the payment of costs, to the satisfaction of some one justice of the peace; be it enacted, that the condition of any such recognizance shall be for the appearance of the said putative father at such general quarter session of the peace as is required by the said Act, and his trial of the appeal thereat, and the payment of such costs as he shall be then and there ordered to pay; and that in respect of any order to be made after the passing of this Act the party entering into any such recognizance shall forthwith give or send a notice in writing of his having so entered into such recognizance to the woman in whose favour the said order shall have been made, and unless he shall enter into the recognizance before one of the justices who shall have made the order, to one at least of such justices; and in default of his giving or sending such notice or notices as aforesaid the appeal shall not be allowed, provided that the sending of such notice or notices by the post shall be taken to be sufficient.

4. That if at any time before the hearing of the appeal the putative father who shall have entered into any such recognizance shall give notice in writing of his abandonment of the appeal, to the mother of the child in whose favour the order shall have been made, and to the justice or justices before whom the said recognizance shall have been taken, and shall pay or tender to the said mother all sums then due under the said order, and such costs and expenses as she shall have incurred by reason of such notice of appeal, the said recognizance so entered into by the said putative father shall not be estreated, nor in any manner put in force or otherwise proceeded with.

5. And reciting that by the said recited Act it is enacted, that where any woman shall apply to the justices at a petty session for an order upon the person whom she shall allege to be the father of her bastard child, such justices shall hear the evidence of such woman and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father, and if the evidence of the said mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices, they may make such order as is therein set forth: and reciting that power is thereby given to the putative father to appeal to the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace against such order, but it is not therein set forth what evidence the said General Quarter Sessions shall or may hear on the trial of such appeal, and doubts have been raised as to whether the said mother can be heard by the said Court of Quarter Sessions; be it therefore enacted, that on the trial of any such appeal before any Court of Quarter Sessions the justices therein assembled, or the recorder (as the case may be) shall hear the evidence of the said mother, and such other evidence as she may produce, and any evidence tendered on behalf of the appellant, and proceed to hear and determine the said appeal in other respects according to law, but shall not confirm the order so appealed against unless the evidence of the said mother shall have been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices in quarter session assembled, or the said recorder.

6. That it shall be lawful for any woman who shall apply to the justices at any petty session for any such order as aforesaid to be assisted in her application by counsel or attorney, and for any person summoned under the said act to appear at any such petty session as the alleged putative father to appear and make his answer thereto by counsel or attorney; and it shall be lawful for either of such parties to have all witnesses examined and cross-examined by such counsel or attorney.

7. That any one magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis, sitting at a police court within the metropolitan police district, has and shall have full power to issue summonses for the appearance of parties and witnesses before such police court, and to do alone any other thing in any matter of bastardy arising under the said act, within these parts of the said district for which a police court has been or shall be established, which may be done by any justices at a petty session holden for their several petty sessional divisions in any such matter arising within their divisions respectively, and that the sitting of such magistrate at such police court shall be within all the provisions of the said act, and of this act, concerning a petty session of justices.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, April 3.—Lord STANLEY begged to express a hope that their lordships would, although it was irregular, allow him to move the second reading of the Bastardy Bill, with a view to its being committed on Friday, and to their obtaining to it the royal assent in time for the quarter sessions, which commenced next week. Their lordships were perhaps aware that it did not interfere at all with the general question of which notice had been given by a noble lord opposite, but that it had been introduced merely for the purpose of removing some technical difficulties in the practical working of the Act of last session.—Lord CAMPBELL thought the course proposed by the noble lord not only unobjectionable, but salutary; but regretted that the noble lord (Radnor) who had a bill on the subject was not present.—Lord STANLEY said, that this Bill did not at all interfere with the measure of the noble lord, or with the general law of bastardy.—Read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT BILL.

MONDAY, March 31.—Lord DUNCAN, seeing the right hon baronet the Secretary of State for the Home Department in his place, begged to renew an important question on the subject of the Bill passed last session for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, and to which before Easter he had received an unsatisfactory answer. He begged again to call to his attention the confusion caused by the facility given by the 57th clause of that Act to fraudulent debtors to escape from paying debts under 20*l.* in amount, and he begged again to complain of the hardships many unfortunate tradesmen in Bath are suffering owing to the ex post facto operation of the law in question, and he would again ask whether her Majesty's Government intended to adhere to their former resolution, or now contemplated taking some steps to remedy the evils complained of?—Sir J. GRAHAM said, that he still adhered to the answer which he had given to the noble lord's question on a former occasion, for he was not aware that the Bill for abolishing imprisonment for debts under 20*l.* had not worked well. He knew, of course, that the retroactive effect of the Bill must have been productive of hardship in some cases, but this was an effect from which any measure of the kind could not be wholly free. What was done could not be undone without great inconvenience; he, therefore, was not prepared to repeal the Act. Every attention would be given to the working of the system; but there was hardly sufficient experience on that subject yet to justify the Legislature in interfering with it. Besides, he was not aware that it had the effect of unduly interfering with the credit given to the working classes.—Mr. DIVETT, while the subject was before the House, would beg to call the attention of the right hon. baronet to a Bill which had passed last year for facilitating the recovery of small debts, some of the provisions of which were inconsistent with those of the Act for abolishing imprisonment for debts under 20*l.*—Colonel RAWDON wished to know whether the right hon. baronet intended to apply the measure to Ireland?—Sir J. GRAHAM thought it would be better not, until they had an opportunity of seeing how it worked in this country.

ENCLOSURE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 1.—The Earl of LINCOLN gave notice that he should, on the 10th of April, move for leave to bring in a Bill for the enclosure of commons and the drainage of waste lands.

HEALTH OF TOWNS.

Mr. S. O'BRIEN, with reference to an extremely important petition he had presented from Limerick, asked, whether it was the intention of the Government to extend to Ireland any measure introduced with reference to the sanatory condition of large towns?—The Earl of LINCOLN said, the report of the commission had only been produced last February. It embraced details of great complication, and he should be sorry yet to pledge the Government as to the precise extent of any measure they might introduce; but at the same time he had every reason to hope that whatever Bill was introduced would apply to Ireland and Scotland as well as England.

AUCTION DUTIES.

Captain PECHELL inquired when the Chancellor of the Exchequer intended to go into committee on the auction duties; and when the duties would cease after the resolutions were adopted by the House?—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER would have been very glad to go into committee before this, but the state of public business had prevented; it would be necessary to take the vote for the army to-morrow, but after that he should go into committee as soon as possible. With respect to the period when the duties would cease, it must be recollected that considerable opposition was threatened to their remission; therefore, it was not very easy to say beforehand what the decision of the House would be. His own view would be to effect the reduction at the earliest moment.—Captain PECHELL asked the hon. member for Dorchester whether it was his intention to persist in the motion of which he had given notice, and to move a resolution against the abolition of the auction duty?—Mr. G. BANKES said, it certainly was his intention to follow up the notice which he had given at an early period of the session, and take the sense of the House against the remission of the auction duty, in order to afford the Government a fund to be applied to a particular interest. (A laugh.)

THURSDAY, April 3.—Mr. E. ELLICE moved for a select committee to inquire into the practical operation of the Acts 2 & 3 Vict. c. 42, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 67, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 31, so far as the regulation of assessment in counties and burghs is concerned, and to report their opinion thereupon to the House.—Agreed to.

HOW LAW IS MADE UNINTELLIGIBLE AND UNAVAILABLE.

The enormous overgrowth of the statute-book is an evil which is often pointed out, and it begins to excite serious alarm. The current number of the Westminster Review attacks it, and the Morning Chronicle echoes the complaint. The Westminster says:—

The public Acts alone already fill five-and-thirty quarto volumes, measuring nearly three yards in thickness, of which two feet only belong to the period from Magna Charta to George III.; the subsequent six or seven feet of quarto law being the exclusive produce of the last eighty years, and of which about one-third part is the growth of the last twenty years. Of the number of individual statutes contained in this mass of typography we really can form no idea. We have measured the outside covers, but broke down in a patient endeavour to count the separate Acts they inclosed by the time we got back to the beginning of this reign; after ascertaining, however, that our present gracious Majesty is already the parent of one hundred and five statutes! It is true that this latter pile of enactment is small when compared with the materials professedly used in its foundation. Commissions of inquiry, reports, accounts, and the whole mass of huge folios which decorate fifty yards of wall in the Reform Club, and which are mainly the offspring of the Reformed Parliaments, could hardly be expected to produce less than a tithe of fruit. It would be improper to question whether the august assemblies which have made the country pay for the collection of all this knowledge, at an enormous cost, have read it themselves? The vacations are doubtlessly devoted to its perusal, and the mind is lost in admiration at the concentration—at the analytical and intellectual power which, having first digested these leviathan tomes, can afterwards mould and enact laws for the empire at the rate of a statute per night. Deducting Sundays, Saturdays, recesses, idle Wednesdays, and countings-out, from the interval between the assembling and prorogation of Parliament, the real working days of last session were scarcely more than one hundred; during which one hundred and thirteen public Acts were framed and enacted, besides one hundred and fifty-seven private Bills or Acts affecting local or personal interests.

The Chronicle undertakes to point out the causes of this vain diffuseness:—

Much of this cacoethes of legislation arises, no doubt, from the mingled vanity and shallowness of our age and time; somewhat, also, from the wider scope which is opened by new and diversified subjects, and the wants and desires incident to the very great wealth and civilization of our epoch. Other causes are 'the obscurity, the involution, the ungrammatical, the chaotic heap of long-strung, unmeaning expletives, with which modern lawgivers lard their lean purposes of legislative amendment and reform.' 'It is impossible for any stranger to visit any one of the courts of law or equity, on any given day, in any given term out of the four, without hearing endless variations to some such judicial tune as the following—'I have tried, like my brother A, to find out a meaning in these words; but I protest I cannot. I thought at the first blush, looking to section 3, they might bear the interpretation suggested by the learned counsel who made the motion; but then, attentively considering the language of section 23, I perceive that cannot be the intention of the framers; and, indeed, looking to the whole of the clauses in this act, it is impossible to say distinctly what was really the intention of the Legislature.' These are comments which every-day occurrence.'

The censor also suggests remedies—

Government is responsible for a great deal of this crude legislation. It should be a part of the duty of the Attorney and Solicitor-General to look to the framing and wording of all Acts, and to see in how far the contemplated measures trench on, repeal, or modify existing laws. * * * The spirit of crude and common-place legislation must be checked. We should have no more penny-a-lining it in Acts of Parliament. It will not do to flood the judges with 1,500 pages of foolscap and 1,000 Acts of Parliament every session; and if the duty of washing the dirty linen of M.P.'s (to use the idea of Voltaire, in speaking of his own corrections of the King of Prussia's French) be deemed too severe a labour for the official law-officers of the Crown—if they cannot or will not write sinewy Saxon, and allow the transparent meaning of the framer to appear in plain words, or, to use Swift's definition of a good style (which applies as well to Acts of Parliament as to better things), will not place 'proper words in proper places,' let them at least employ or name substitutes, as in France, who are capable and have the leisure to do the state this great service.

We suspect that this kind of revision, however desirable in many respects, would go a very little way to remedy the evil; the root of which lies much deeper,—in two principles, one of which is an intellectual, the other a moral blunder. The intellectual blunder it is that has dictated the peculiar style of all law language; and it consists in the supposition that perfect precision is attainable in language. It has in vain been shewn that ideas, especially general ideas, are seldom capable of precision, and that the language in which they are conveyed must partake of the vagueness: lawmakers and lawyers have acted upon the notion that words can be so arranged as to set forth the intent with plainness sufficient to prevent any deviation either through misconception or evasive ingenuity. Failing of that object when a common amount of words was used, resort has been had to more words, without getting any nearer to the goal—to more, and still to more: until the mind, unable to follow the meaning through the labyrinth, is baffled, and is content to take it for granted that the meaning is there when occasion shall require it to be extracted. The occasion does arise: counsel, judge, and jury labour at the process of transmutation; but no alchemist ever laboured more fruitlessly—the precious substance is not really in the dross. Strip from an Act of Parliament its mere verbiage and expletives, reduce it to plain language, and you still find that it will not compel comprehension, but is as dependent as any other kind of precept on the willingness, the common sense, and good faith of the interpreter. All human language must be so; and you only disguise, not alter, the qualities of language by a tenfold reduplication,—with this incidental effect, that the mere extension of the field by the interposition of meaningless words baffles the mind to traverse it; and laws are made absolutely impossible to know, by exceeding in amount the mechanical and physical powers of reading.

The nature of the remedy is pointed out by explaining the nature of the evil: it is, to keep the texture of our laws down to the plain and necessary language, and to leave it to the learning (not mere law "learning," but philosophical and philological learning) of judges, truly to interpret the manifest intent of the lawmaker; banishing for ever those silly and idle verbal quibbles which now so often occupy the courts in solemn council.

But this remedy points to the other, the moral blunder. It is our practice not to give due respect and value to moral worth—to individual virtues; and the want of that attention to social law recoils upon us at every step in the shape of serious inconveniences. Wealth, religious conformity, and the observance of certain set obligations, are exacted of every man: personal virtue obtains no honour worth mention. With due deference to outward decorum, every kind of license may be safely though notoriously indulged: a devotion to absolute truth is deemed ridiculous, scoffed at, denounced as dangerous. Making so light account of personal virtue, we distrust its existence and efficacy: we dare not rest on the integrity of judges to administer justice according to the plain intent of the law, but we must strive to make the law an all-sufficing, undeviating rule, of which the judge is the mere minister—to make it not an exposition of principles for his guidance, but a set of minute detailed instructions to serve in every case. The attempt is impossible; but it is not the less persevered in. Our laws have grown verbose, huge beyond comprehension, silly, inefficacious, weak with infinite extension to the degree of yielding at every rude touch: our judges are puzzled, are mocked with an unavoidable discretion from which the law professes to free them, are overwhelmed with a duty of interpreting what is uninterpretable—of analyzing whole mountains of dross: every body is dissatisfied—the system grows oppressive and intolerable; and yet little peddling prescriptions to patch up better details are all that occur to reformers. No good will be done in that way. Our Statute-book, like the supernatural lodger in The Castle of Otranto, will outgrow its procreant dwelling-place and bring the house about the ears of the law-makers by the simple force of size and weight, breeding rack and ruin and anarchy, unless this plan of piling up inexplicable enactments as substitutes for plain sense in law and trustworthy honesty in judges shall be relinquished. No "sinewy Saxon" can contend against the process of overgrowth inherent in the system.—Spectator.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE have nothing to report peculiarly affecting magistrates, or the branches of law they administer. It is said with some confidence, by persons who affect the best information on such topics, that the New Settlement Bill will not pass, at least during the present session.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Permit me to call your attention to the Bill before Parliament for payment of Clerks to Justices and Clerks of Peace by salary instead of fees, as there is a very general impression abroad that the Bill in question does not affect boroughs. I have authority for stating that the word "not," in clause 44, line 6, is a mere printer's error, and that the Bill will undergo correction before going into committee. It is important that borough officers should be made acquainted with the fact, and their attention called at the same time to that part of the clause which regulates the amount of salary. It will be seen that the council of every municipal corporation in England and Wales having (as the Bill will stand) a separate sessions of the peace or separate commission of justices is to pay in the case of existing officers a salary not exceeding an average estimate of the amount of fees received during the seven years preceding 1st January last, determining what the amount shall be, but leaving it open to councils to fix any lesser sum. The justice of the case is, and it is probably so intended, that an amount of salary should be paid equal to an average of the fees, but the clause should be so worded that there may be no doubt on the matter.

Requesting that you will be so good in your next number to call attention to the subject,

I am, &c.
JOHN HOWARD.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE Index occupies so much of our space, that we are compelled to curtail the usual information.

THE following practical suggestions for remedy of an acknowledged grievance have appeared in the Times. They deserve the attention of the authorities and of the Profession, and in hope that here they may be noticed by many whose eyes they may have escaped in the crowded columns of the newspaper, we reprint the letter:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—Having lately been an eye-witness to the great loss of time and inconvenience sustained by professional men in the mode in which summonses before a judge at chambers are conducted, especially at this time, when only one judge is in attendance to transact the business of all the courts, I am induced to call your attention to the subject, in the hope that, through the instrumentality of your powerful organ, some improvement in the present system may be adopted, so as not only to benefit the public at large, but also lessen the inconvenience personally sustained by the Profession. From the great amount of business, the judge now in attendance is sometimes fully occupied from ten o'clock in the forenoon until six or seven in the evening. A portion of the day—say from two o'clock, is set apart for summonses attended by counsel, whilst the rest of the time is occupied by the attorneys, who, by themselves or their clerks, are frequently compelled to wait many hours, if not the entire day, in expectation of being called in their turn; and such is the uncertainty as to the length of time which may be consumed by the previous cases, that it is seldom safe to be away half an hour. The usage is, for the judge's clerk to call over the summonses on the file (of which there are usually from 100 to 120 on each day) at five minutes after ten o'clock; and, in regard to those attorneys to whom a late number is given, they can scarcely go away, reckoning with safety that it may not come to their turn until the middle or end of the day; for if they be absent when their numbers are called, they must wait until the succeeding numbers are gone through; and that day may be altogether lost if the adversary chooses to go away also.

There is no doubt that the present mode is not only tedious and inconvenient to practitioners, but alike harassing to the judge himself; and it has occurred to me that if the numbers were apportioned in some regular manner, so as to leave a certain number of summonses for each hour, a great benefit would arise.

The following are the results which suggest themselves to my mind, and I respectfully beg the consideration of professional men to them, with the view to their being adopted, either in whole or part, as may be deemed consistent or practicable by the judges themselves, viz.:—

1. That every summons shall be peremptory, and that they shall be numbered consecutively, as they are issued by the judge's clerk.

2. That one hour shall be set apart for the hearing of a given number of summonses—say 25 or 30.

3. That the first 25 or 30 numbers shall be returnable, and attended peremptorily at the first hour.

4. That the succeeding 25 or 30 numbers shall be returnable, and attended peremptorily at the second hour, and so on, until the whole of the numbers issued shall have been disposed of.

5. That in default of attendance of the party summoned, the order shall be made upon the usual affidavit of service and attendance by the party at whose instance the summons is issued.

Probably arrangements might be made for one master of each court (there being five of them) to sit each day to assist the judges and dispose of a certain class of summonses to be settled by the judges, with the right of appeal to the judge, on summons taken out for that purpose, the party appealing being bound previously to deposit a certain amount for costs, in the event of a decision against him.—I am, Sir, your very obedient servant, AN ATTORNEY.

PRACTICAL NOTES.
No. II.

WRIT OF RESTITUTION IN EJECTMENT.

The action of ejectment, although purely fictitious, has, more than any other, and from that very cause, been treated by the courts as a mere form for obtaining justice, and they therefore look as much as possible to the substantial right, and exercise a supervising power over the technical rights and mode of proceeding which otherwise would become oppressive and pernicious. To use the words of Bayley, J. in Thrustout v. Shenton (10 B. & C. 110), the court will exercise an equitable jurisdiction over the proceedings in actions of ejectment, which for the purposes of justice and convenience may be said to be peculiarly its own creature. Some recent cases upon writs of restitution afford an illustration of this, and are deserving of notice, as, but for them, the practitioner, under similar circumstances, might consider the more dilatory and expensive remedy of ejectment was the proper course to be pursued. The old books (2 Lill. Pr. Reg. 472) seemed to lay down that a reversal of the judgment by a writ of error, or a clear decision as to the title of the party by whom restitution was sought, were conditions precedent to the issuing of the writ. In Withers v. Harris, indeed, according to one report (2 Ld. Raym. 806; but see Salk. 258), the writ was awarded because a habere facias possessionem had been sued out upon a judgment more than a year old without sci. fa.; but the objection does not appear to have been taken, and neither the case of Doe dem. Williams (2 A. & E. 381), nor Doe dem. Stevens v. Lord (7 A. & E. 610: 6 D.P.C. 256) decided that such reversal was not necessary. In the former case the writ of restitution was set aside on the ground that it had issued without the authority of the Court, and in the second case the judgment was still remaining, and then it was clearly a wrong mode of proceeding. In Goodright v. Noright (Barnes, 178) the writ was allowed, but the lessee of the plaintiff had absconded, and no attachment for disobedience to the order to give up the possession could have been enforced.

The recent cases, however, are more decisive. In Doe dem. Pitcher v. Roe (9 D.P.C. 971), after the lessor of the plaintiff had been let into possession (we presume by writ of habere), and the tenant had irregularly possessed himself of the premises, upon which a writ of restitution was granted and executed. But on the following night the tenant again took forcible possession, and upon motion for an attachment or an order to give up possession, it was argued that the Court would leave the party ousted to his action of ejectment. Wightman, J. however, made the rule absolute for a fresh writ of restitution to be executed within a week. If, in a case of this description, the habere facias has not been returned before the expulsion of the rightful occupants, the proper remedy is to obtain a fresh writ of possession, which is, however, only nisi in the first instance. (Doe dem. Thompson v. Ninehouse, 2 D. P. C. 200; Doe dem. Lloyd v. Roe, 2 D. N. S. 407.)

Doe dem. Stratford v. Shail (2 Dowl. & Lownd. 161; 3 Law T. 185), which was decided in last Trinity Term, is, however, a distinct authority that reversal of the judgment is not necessary, and that it is sufficient if it be set aside for irregularity. There, after judgment against the casual ejector, the landlord was let in to defend, and the order contained the following proviso: "that possession be restored, in case the said J. Shail (the landlord) succeeds in his defence, or the lessor of the plaintiff does not proceed to trial at the next assizes for the county of Berks." At the trial, no one appeared for the lessor of the plaintiff, and a nonsuit was accordingly entered. Possession was demanded by Mr. Shail, but refused, and he then moved for a writ of restitution; and although in his affidavits there was no express allegation of title to the property, the writ was ordered to issue by Mr. Justice Coleridge, who gave his judgment as follows:—

I must take it that in the present case the prior judgment had been irregularly obtained. The effect of the former rule is decisive on that point, and I think that when that rule was made it was competent to the Court to have awarded restitution of the premises to the defendant. Such must be considered to be the effect of the authorities on this subject. They did not, however, do so, but made a conditional rule, with which the lessor of the plaintiff has not complied, and application is now made, under stronger circumstances, for the Court to award that remedy which they could have done before. The lessor of the plaintiff ought not to be allowed, under colour of the process of the Court, to reap the benefit of a judgment which has since been set aside. The rule will therefore be absolute.

The learned reporter of this case seems to throw some doubt upon it, on account of the supposed inconsistency of the writ with the record, as the party in whose favour it is ordered does not appear upon the record at all. This would be a good objection to a writ of restitution in any other action, but the peculiar nature of an ejectment justifies the distinction; for if by virtue of the fiction that Richard Roe was in possession, the real owner has been turned out, it is equitable that, when the Court have declared that Richard Roe was an ill-used man, justice should be done to his representative, as the actual tenant or owner may be called.

We are enabled, moreover, to lay before our readers another case in which, after a judgment had been set aside for fraud, a writ of restitution was obtained. This was Doe dem. Selden v. Roe, briefly referred to in 4 Law T. 154, 157, the facts of which we can state correctly, having the affidavits now before us. Some persons had taken forcible possession of an empty house, which it appeared, by the affidavits, had been in the possession of Esther Selden, or those whom she represented, for upwards of thirty years. The new occupants claimed to hold as tenants of one Grace Selden, under an alleged agreement for a yearly tenancy, commencing from March 12, 1844, the rent to be paid quarterly. An action of ejectment on the demise of Esther Selden was then commenced, which Walters, the party in possession, defended. About a month, however, before the assizes (June 25), upon receiving a sum of money, Walters gave up possession, and Esther Selden's agent remained in possession until July 31, when he was turned out by the sheriff of Somersetshire, under a writ of habere facias. On inquiry it appeared that upon the very day that the declaration had been served upon Walters, on the demise of Esther Selden, another declaration on the demise of Grace Selden, the alleged landlord, had also been served upon him. This was on May 18, and it contained two demises, one on March 27 in the preceding year, and one on March 27 in that year, just fifteen days after the alleged lease. Walters had allowed judgment to go by default in this action, while he defended the other, and the habere facias had been thereupon issued. Subsequently, in the early part of October, a summons was taken out before Pollock, C. B. at chambers, calling upon Grace Selden to shew cause why this judgment should not be set aside. The facts stated in the affidavits on both sides, which need not be here detailed, satisfied his lordship that the proceedings had been collusive and fraudulent, and overruling an objection that the application was too late,(a) he set aside the judgment, and ordered that the premises should be restored to the party who was in possession at the time the sheriff entered under the habere facias. This order was served upon Grace Selden and the person occupying the premises, but they refused to obey it. Esther Selden might now have applied for an attachment for contempt (2 Salk. 588; 2 W. Blackst. 892; Doe dem. Williams v. Williams, 4 Nev. & Man. 259); but, as under the circumstances, this would have been useless, the order was made a rule of court, and a rule was then moved for by Ogle, calling upon Grace Selden to shew cause why a writ of restitution should not issue. Before the order was made a rule of court, Butt had moved in the Bail Court, before Patteson, J. for a rule nisi to rescind the order of Pollock, C.B. Patteson, J. after taking time to consider, referred him to the full Court, and the rule nisi was then granted, but not until the order had been made a rule of court. The two rules came on together upon the last day of Term (4 Law T. 157), but were adjourned, by consent, to be heard before Mr. Justice Wightman at chambers. On December 5th they were heard. Butt appeared on behalf of Grace Selden, and Ogle for Esther. Butt's cross-rule was discharged in accordance with Clement v. Weaver (1 D. N. S. 193), because it was framed at the order, when the order had been merged in the rule of court; and the rule for the writ of restitution was then made absolute. It was duly issued, and pursued the terms of the order, directing the sheriff to restore possession "to the person in possession at the time" the habere facias had been executed.

This may be an extreme case, but as the Lord Chief Baron took time to consider his judgment, and Patteson, J. referred it to the full Court, and Wightman, J. confirmed the grant of the writ of restitution, it materially strengthens the authority of Doe dem. Stratford v. Shail, and accords with the views taken there by Mr. Justice Coleridge. So that where the judgment is set aside for fraud or irregularity, a writ of restitution may be obtained, instead of the owner who has been ousted by the process of the Court being compelled to proceed by an adverse ejectment. PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

Whitehall, March 29, 1845.—The Queen has been pleased to order a congé d'élire to pass the Great Seal, empowering the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral church of Ely to elect a bishop of that see, the same being void by the death of Doctor Joseph Allen, late bishop thereof; and her Majesty has also been pleased to recommend to the said dean and chapter, Thomas Turton, doctor in divinity, now dean of the cathedral church of St. Peter, Westminster, to be by them elected bishop of the said see.

Whitehall, March 31.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Robert James Sisson, of St. Asaph, in the county of Flint, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

Downing-Street, April 1.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Honourable George Warren Edwardes to be Auditor of Accounts to the Government of St. Helena.

Her Majesty has further been pleased to appoint Jules Virieux, esq. to be Juge de Paix for the Island of Mauritius.

PRACTICAL PRECEDENTS.

[UNDER this title we purpose to collect such Precedents as may have been found practically useful by experienced members of the Profession, and such as may have been settled by eminent counsel, and we shall be obliged by readers forwarding any precedents in their possession which they may deem to be serviceable to their legal brethren.]

Brandon, Feb. 28, 1845.

SIR,—Herewith you receive another Precedent, being a copy of the deed of release and covenants which accompanied the absolute surrender sent you some time ago, and in which I find there are two errors, viz. You have printed the word which should have been surrendered, "severed," and have spelt the word steward with a u instead of a w: this is immaterial, but the first is very material, and may mislead a young draftsman. Yours, &c.

E. J. S.

Deed of Release and Covenant to accompany Surrender of Copyholds.

THIS indenture, made the day of , A.D. 1842, between W. G. of, &c. of the first part, C. G. of, &c. of the second part, and R. S. of, &c. of the third part: Whereas, by indenture of bargain and sale, dated on or about the day of August 1820, and made or expressed to be made between T. W. surviving devisee in trust for sale, named in the last will and testament of W. P. late of , in the county of , of the first part; W. P. (farmer) of the second part, and the said W. G. of the third part, it was witnessed that, in consideration of the sum of £ . . to the said T. W. paid by the said W. G. he, the said T. W. in exercise of the power given to, and then solely vested in him, by the will of the said W. P. deceased, did bargain, sell, surrender, and release, and the said W. P. party thereto, as heir-at-law and customary heir of the said W. P. the testator, did remise, release, and confirm unto the said W. G. all those, &c. which premises, with the residue of the land, by the former descriptions thereof, the said T. W. took up to him, and his heirs and assigns, upon the trusts of the will of the said W. P. deceased, on the day of , then last, with their appurtenances, to hold the same unto and to the use of the said W. G. his heirs and assigns for ever, of the lord of the said manor of . and according to the custom thereof, subject to apportioned land-tax of , and the fines, suits, and services thenceforth to become due in respect thereof: And whereas, at a court holden in and for the said manor, on or about the day of , 1822, the said W. G. was admitted to the messuage and hereditaments comprised in the hereinbefore recited bargain and sale, to hold to him and his heirs, of the lord of the said manor, at his will, according to the custom thereof; and whereas, by a surrender out of court, dated on or about the day of , 1829, the said W. G. did surrender all and singular the messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever, of him the said W. G. holder of the said by copy of court roll, with their appurtenances, to the use of G. C. his heirs and assigns for ever, subject to a proviso for avoidance of the said surrender upon payment by the said W. G. his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, unto the said G. C. his executors, administrators, or assigns, of the sum of £ . . with lawful interest, on the day of then next; and whereas, the said principal sum of £ . . and all interest thereon, have long since been fully paid or satisfied; and whereas, by indenture dated on or about the day of , 1840, and made between the said W. G. of the one part, and the said C. G. of the other part, the said W. G. did grant, bargain, sell, and demise unto the said C. G. all those, &c. and their appurtenances, to hold the same unto the said C. G. his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, from the day next before the day of the date of the now reciting indenture, for the term of five hundred years, subject to a proviso for cesser of the said term, upon payment by the said W. G. his heirs, executors, or administrators, unto the said C. G. his executors, administrators, and assigns, of the sum of £ . . with interest after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum, on the day of then next; and in the said indenture now in recital, the said W. G. did covenant to surrender the said copyhold hereditaments and premises at the then next or some subsequent court to be held for the said manor, or out of court before the steward thereof, or his deputy, to the use of the said C. G. his heirs or assigns, as he or they should direct, according to the custom of the said manor, and that in the meantime, and until such surrender should be made and admittance had by virtue thereof, he, the said W. G. and his heirs, should stand seized or possessed thereof, free and clear from all incumbrances whatsoever; and whereas, by indenture dated on or about the day of , 1840, and made between the said W. G. of the one part, and the said C. G. of the other part, after reciting the lastly hereinbefore recited indenture, the said W. G. did covenant, and also did grant, bargain, sell, and demise, all and singular the said freehold and copyhold messuages or tenements, hereditaments and premises, and every part thereof, with the appurtenances described in the therein and hereinbefore recited indenture of demise, and that the same should, from time to time, and at all times thereafter during the remainder of the said term of 500 years then to come and unexpired, remain and continue charged and chargeable with, and be a security unto the said C. G. his executors, administrators, and assigns, as well for the said sum of £ . . then advanced, with interest from thenceforth to grow due for the same, as also for the payment of the said sum of £ . . before lent and advanced, and the interest thereof, making together £ . . and that the said premises should not be redeemed until full satisfaction and payment of the said sums should be made. And whereas the said principal sums of £ . . and £ . . secured by the two lastly hereinbefore recited indentures of mortgage, together with the sum of £ . . for interest thereon up to the day of the date of these presents, and making together the sum of £ . . are now due and owing unto the said C. G. And whereas the said R. S. hath contracted with the said W. G. for the absolute purchase of the said copyhold messuages, tenements, and hereditaments hereinbefore mentioned and described, with their appurtenances, and the inheritance in fee-simple of the same, according to the custom of the said manor, discharged from all incumbrances, at the price of £ . . the land-tax of per annum, and quit-rent of only excepted; and whereas it having been agreed that the said sum of £ . . so due unto the said C. G. by virtue of his said securities, should be paid out of the said purchase-money; therefore in pursuance and part performance of the said contract, and by means of a surrender bearing even date with and passed immediately before the execution of these presents, in consideration of the sum of £ . . part of the said purchase-money of £ . . at the request and by the direction of the said W. G. paid by the said R. S. unto the said C. G. and also in consideration of the sum of £ . . residue of the said purchase-money of £ . . paid by the said R. S. unto the said W. G. at the same time, he, the said W. G. hath, out of court, duly surrendered the copyhold hereditaments so purchased by the said R. S. by the description of all that, &c. to the use of the said R. S. his heirs and assigns for ever, according to the custom of the said manor. And whereas the said C. G. for releasing the lien of the said mortgage securities, and the said W. G. for to enter into the appropriate covenants for the title of the said hereditaments respectively, have consented to concur in these presents in manner hereinafter contained. Now this indenture witnesseth, that in consideration of the sum of £ . . in part of the said purchase-money or sum of £ . . so paid to the said C. G. in satisfaction of all principal money and interest so due to him in manner aforesaid, the receipt of which said sum of £ . . he, the said C. G. doth hereby acknowledge, and from the same and every part thereof doth hereby for ever release and discharge the said R. S. and W. G. respectively, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns; he, the said C. G. upon the request and by the direction of the said W. G. testified by his executing these presents, doth by these presents remise and release unto the said R. S. his heirs and assigns, all and singular the said messuages, tenements, hereditaments, and premises comprised in or surrendered by, or intended to be comprised in or surrendered by, the hereinbefore recited surrender, of even date herewith, and their respective rights, members, and appurtenances, and to the intent that the said several securities, and all the estate, right, title, and interest of the said C. G. under by virtue of the same, may be extinguished, and all lien for the principal money and interest thereby secured may be discharged. And the said C. G. doth hereby for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with the said R. S. his heirs and assigns, that he, the said C. G. hath not at any time or times heretofore made, done, committed, executed, or knowingly or wilfully suffered any act, deed, matter, or thing whatsoever whereby or by reason or means whereof the said messuage, hereditaments, and premises hereby released, or intended to be, or any part thereof, are, is, can, shall, or may be in any manner impeached, charged, forfeited, or incumbered in title, charge, or otherwise howsoever; and the said W. G. doth hereby, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with the said R. S. his heirs and assigns, in manner following; that is to say,—That notwithstanding any act, deed, matter, or thing whatsoever made, done, committed, permitted, or suffered to the contrary by him, the said W. G. or the said G. C. or the said C. G. he, the said W. G. with the concurrence of the said C. G. had, at the time of the passing of the hereinbefore recited surrender of even date herewith, in himself, good, right, or full power and lawful and absolute authority by the said surrender to surrender, and by these presents to release the said copyhold messuages, tenements, and hereditaments comprised in the said surrender, with their appurtenances, unto and to the use of the said R. S. his heirs and assigns, for ever, according to the custom of the said manor, and the true intent and meaning of the same surrender and of these presents. And also that it shall be lawful for the said R. S. his heirs and assigns [illegible] diately upon and after the exe[illegible] of these presents, and from time to time, [illegible] at all times hereafter, to enter into [illegible], and have, hold, use, occupy, possess, [illegible] the said messuages, tenements, heredita[ments] [illegible] premises so surrendered as aforesaid, with their appurtenances, and to receive and take the rents and profits thereof, without any let, suit, trouble, eviction, ejection, expulsion, interruption, hindrance, or denial whatsoever of, from, or by them, the said W. C. or any other person [illegible] whomsoever, lawfully or equitably and rightfully [illegible], or to claim by, from, through, or in trust for them, respectively, and that free and clear, and freely, clearly, and absolutely acquitted, exonerated, released, and discharged or otherwise, by him, the said W. G. his heirs, executors, or administrators, at his or their own costs and charges, ... all things and sufficiently protected, defended, saved harmless, and kept indemnified of, from, or against all and all manner of former and other gifts, grants, surrenders, mortgages, leases, bargains, and other, freebench, and right and title of freebench, uses, trusts, wills, entails, annuities, legacies, [illegible] estates, titles, troubles, liens, charges, and incumbrances whatsoever heretofore, or to be hereafter had, made, done, committed, occasioned, permitted, or suffered by the said W. G., C. G. or G. C. or any person [illegible] persons rightfully claiming or to claim by, from, under, through, or in trust for them, [illegible] of them, or their or any, or either of their [illegible] default, privity, or procu[rement] [illegible] moreover that they, the said W. G., C. S. his heirs and assigns, make, do, execute, and perfect, or cause or procure to be made, done, executed, and perfected, all such further lawful and reasonable acts, deeds, surrenders, or assurances for the further, better, and more absolutely or satisfactorily surrendering, confirming, or otherwise assuring the said copyhold messuages, tenements, hereditaments, and premises comprised in the said surrender, and the appurtenances, to the use of the said R. S. his heirs and assigns for ever, according to the true intent and meaning of said surrender, of even date herewith, and of these presents, as by the said R. S. his heirs or assigns, or his or their counsel in the law, shall be reasonably devised or advised and required, and be tendered to be made, done, and executed. In witness, &c.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

INCREASE OF ATTORNEYS. [illegible] a return just published by the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. Aglionby, [illegible] the [illegible] of attorneys who took out certificates between Easter term 1843, and Easter term 1844, was 9,4[illegible], and the duties they paid amounted to 81,18[illegible]. In the [illegible] year the number was 9,480, and it went on progressively increasing to 9,713, 9,719, 9,7[illegible] [illegible], 9,9[illegible], 10,03[illegible], 10,073 9,993, 10,1[illegible], and 10,120 in the [illegible] ending Easter term 1845. The duties paid in the last year amounted to 89,222*l.*

THE SCOTCH BANKS.—The principal features of the contemplated measures of Sir Robert Peel in reference to the Scottish banking system, are said to be, that the existing banks are to be limited to their present circulation, and that they will be forced to keep an amount of gold equal to one-fifth of that circulation, with the option of having one-fourth of that fifth in silver; so that if a circulation of a bank be 200,000*l.* it must keep 40,000*l.* in sovereigns to meet the demands upon it, or else 30,000*l.* in sovereigns, and 10,000*l.* in silver. Any bank that exceeds its present circulation must have gold to meet every pound of such excess.—Caledonian Mercury.

THE WILL OF THE MARQUIS OF SLIGO.—The original will and codicil of the Most Hon. Howe Peter Browne, late Marquis of Sligo, Earl of Altamont, in Ireland, and Baron Monteagle of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Illustrious Order of St. Patrick, deceased, has just been proved in Ireland. The personal estate in that country is sworn under 60,000*l.* —the personalty in England is about a third of that amount. The executors are the Marchioness of Sligo, the relict; the present Marquis; the Marquis of Clanricarde; Mr Robert Browne, of Killeskea, in Galway; Mr. John Browne, of Mount Browne, in Mayo; and Mr. George Hildebrand, of Westport; who are also the guardians of the minors. He charges his real and personal estate with the payment of all debts: bequeaths to his wife, Hester Catherine, Marchioness of Sligo, his leasehold house and offices in Mansfield street, Cavendish-square; also the use for her life of all the furniture, &c. except plate and other articles specified; leaves to her all diamonds, jewellery, and trinkets, the diamond star and badge of the Order of St. Patrick excepted, which he gives to his son George John, then Earl of Altamont, as also the plate and furniture, after the decease of the Marchioness. He also leaves to the Marchioness, for her own absolute use, all wines, liquors, and other stores, and the horses and carriages at Mansfield-street, or elsewhere in England. All the horses and carriages of every kind in Ireland he bequeaths to his son, the present Marquis. With regard to his younger children (excepting his daughter Louisa, in whose favour he had already made an appointment under her marriage settlement), he charges his real estate with the payment of such sums as shall, with the respective portions appointed to them under a power reserved to the former Marquis over 300,000*l.* to make up to each of his children the following amounts:—To his sons James and John Thomas, 10,000*l.* each; to his daughters Elizabeth and Catherine, 7,000*l.* each; to his sons Ulick and Richard, and his daughters Harriet and Emily, 5,000*l.* each; and to his daughters Hester, Augusta, and Mary Ann, and any after-born children, 4,000*l.* each. The residue of his personal estate he leaves to his son, the present Marquis.

Will of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, Bart. Probate of the will of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, late of Northrepps, in the county of Norfolk, bart. and of the firm of Truman, Hanbury, Buxton, and Co. brewers, Brick-lane, Spitalfields, in the county of Middlesex, was granted on the 25th instant to Sir Edward North Buxton, bart. and Thomas Fowell Buxton, esq. the sons, two of the executors, a power being reserved to Dame Hannah Buxton, widow, the relict, and Andrew Johnston, esq. the son-in-law, the other executor, to prove hereafter. The personal estate sworn under 250,000*l.* The will is of great length, and dated October 17, 1844; witnessed by John Gurney Hoare, of Lombard-street, and Esther Neave Lincoln, of Northrepps Hall. Sir Thomas died on the 19th of February last. He leaves his manuscripts and papers to his son Edward and daughter Priscilla, either to publish or destroy, or to be kept by the survivor, in compliance with the wishes of his deceased sister, Sarah Buxton, from whom he had recently derived an addition to his property. Leaves to his son Edward his guns and sporting implements, and the selection of two horses. Bequeaths to his wife the carriages, horses, and the whole of the furniture, and directs 1,000*l.* to be paid to her within one month, and 3,000*l.* at the end of twelve months. The establishment to be kept up for six months after his decease. Bequeaths to his daughter, Priscilla Johnston, a legacy of 2,000*l.* and a further sum of 5,000*l.* from his share in the brewery; and to his daughter, Richenda Buxton, the sum of 9,000*l.*; leaves one-third of his share in the brewery to his wife for her life; appoints his son Charles to succeed to one-third of his share in the brewery, and leaves certain other portions to his family; the remainder of his share and interest in the brewery he leaves to his son and partner, Edward; leaves the whole of his plate to his wife for her life, and at her decease to be distributed as follows:—the plate presented to him by his late constituents at Weymouth, and by his brothers, sisters, nephews, nieces, and all other relations, he gives to his son Edward; the plate presented to him by the young people at Weymouth, he gives to his son-in-law, Andrew Johnston; the plate presented to him from the directors and members of the Alliance Assurance Company, he gives to his sons, Thomas Fowell, and Charles. Other specific articles of plate he leaves to his daughters. He gives his college prize-books to his son Edward and his children. Devises his freehold and leasehold estates at Runton and Fellbrig, in the county of Norfolk, to his son, Edward North Buxton. Devises his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates in Trimington, Sidestrand, Southrepps, Gironingham, and in all other towns, parishes or places, in or near the county of Norfolk, to his sons, Thomas Fowell Buxton, and Charles Buxton. Directs the Belfield estate to be sold, and, with the share in the partnership of the brewery, and the residue of his personal estate, to be held in trust to pay thereout 3,000*l.* a year to his wife for her life. Appoints his son, now Sir Edward North Buxton, his residuary legatee.

Will of Lady Flora Hastings.—On the 4th instant letters of administration of the estate and effects of the late Right Hon. Lady Flora Elizabeth Hastings, of Loudown castle, in the county of Ayr, North Britain, and of Buckingham Palace, one of the ladies in waiting on the Duchess of Kent, were granted by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury to Lady Sophia Frederica Christina Hastings, the sister of the deceased; the Honourable Flora Muir Campbell, Dowager Marchioness of Hastings, her mother, having survived her, but died without administering. Lady Flora died on the 5th of July, 1839. Administration would have been applied for earlier, but owing to a sum of 30,000*l.* divisible among the daughters of the late Marquis, having only now been realized by the sale of certain estates, a representative of her ladyship has not before been required. The personal effects were sworn to, as under 8,000*l.* —Ibid.

Judicial Pleasantry.—On the 29th March, during the trial of an action for an ejectment, Mr. Chilton, Q.C. had occasion to examine witnesses as to their knowledge of the boundaries of a certain farm, the subject under consideration. One of these was ninety-four years of age, the other two upwards of eighty. The well-developed figures and florid looks of the old men astonished the learned counsel, who inwardly contrasted his own attenuated and delicate frame with the yet burly proportions of the fine old fellows. "It is astonishing, my lord," said he, addressing Mr. Justice Cresswell, "how well men of such an age look—the place surely must be healthy. I wonder what they take." The learned judge gave one of his blandest smiles, dropped his pen, and looking significantly at the learned counsel, said, "I'm sure, Mr. Chilton, I don't know what they take, but I'm quite sure they don't take briefs."

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

DENBIGHSHIRE AND FLINTSHIRE LAW ASSOCIATION.

The general annual meeting of this society was held at the Lion Hotel, Ruthin, on Monday, the 24th inst. Mr. Hughes, of Astead, president of the society, in the chair. Mr. Eyton, of Mold, was elected president, and Mr. Read, of Llanrwst, vice-president for the ensuing. The proceedings of the general committee were read, and all their recommendations, after some discussion, adopted. Amongst the recommendations adopted were the following: "That the treasurer (being clerk of the peace for Denbighshire) shall, one month before each Quarter Sessions for the counties of Denbigh and Flint, insert an advertisement in the Law Times, at the expense of the society, of the days of holding such Quarter Sessions;" and "That this society shall join the Provincial Law Societies' Association." Greatly to the inconvenience of the Profession, the magistrates of Denbighshire had refused to allow the expense of an advertisement of their sessions in the Law Times to be paid out of the county stock, which mistaken parsimony the Association countervails by the resolution adopted.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Allow me to call your attention, and through you that of the public, to another practical grievance requiring a remedy. In cases of manslaughter, the coroner has no right to take bail, neither is that power vested in the magistrates. Many cases may occur in which respectable persons may unfortunately and undesignedly be guilty of manslaughter, or there might be circumstantial evidence sufficient to warrant the coroner's inquest bringing in such a verdict, but which would not justify a jury, when all the evidence is adduced on both sides, to arrive at such a conclusion. The inquest may take place immediately after the Summer Assizes; in that case the accused is incarcerated till the next assizes, a period generally of near eight months; it is true he may apply to a judge to be admitted to bail; but that is attended with an expense that many may not be able to afford, though they may be enabled to procure good and responsible bail for their appearance.

In other cases it ought not to be left to the discretion of magistrates to take bail. Every man is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty. How many are there imprisoned for months before their trial, and afterwards acquitted, who, if bail had been taken when offered, would not have been so unjustly punished.

In a late case, on one of the circuits, a man was imprisoned in August, and kept in gaol till the Spring Assizes; the evidence adduced was too unsatisfactory even to authorize the grand jury's returning a true bill, yet this man suffered six months' imprisonment without having been guilty of any crime whatever,—his business was ruined, and his family starved! Should this continue in a land of liberty?

Yours, &c. P.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Having observed in the Law Times of the 22nd inst. that a commission has been appointed to consider the propriety of altering the assize circuits, I have thought it a fit occasion to offer a suggestion on the rumoured transfer of Yorkshire from the Northern to the Midland Circuit. On an average, two-thirds of the business, civil and criminal, at York Assizes, are from the West-Riding, and a fortnight is generally inadequate to the completion of the assizes. If, however, the West-Riding alone were detached from the Northern Circuit, a fortnight would, upon an average, be sufficient to transact the business for that riding without unseemly haste. The assizes for the North and East Ridings might be held at York as heretofore, and four or five days would be sufficient to get through the business from those Ridings, thus leaving more time for the Liverpool Assize, and preventing an undue extension of the time occupied on the Northern Circuit.

The assizes for the West-Riding might be held at Wakefield, to the great diminishing of expense to suitors, witnesses, jurymen, and the Riding-rate. There is a direct railway communication to Wakefield, which is in the centre of the West-Riding, and at which place the sheriff holds his court for the election of members of Parliament for the Riding. At Wakefield are the Register Office for Deeds, and the Clerk of the Peace's Office for the West-Riding, and also the Riding prison, which is now undergoing the process of enlargement to the extent of several acres. There is also a court-house (in which the sessions are held) much larger than the Crown Court at York, and adjoining to which there is ample room for the erection of a Nisi Prius Court at a small cost. The holding of the assizes for the West-Riding, near the centre of that riding, would be so unquestionably advantageous to the public, that few, unbiased by interest or prejudice, will be found to advocate their continuance at York.

It is well known that the chief expense of an assize trial is caused by the attendance of parties, their attorneys and witnesses, at the assize town, and too frequently this expense is mixed up with and considered as part of the attorney's bill. Any reasonable plan, therefore, for curtailing this expense, well merits the attention of the Profession.

Yours, &c. An Attorney,
March 29, 1845. Resident in the West-Riding.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A. W." transmits the following comments on the preparation of "Abstracts of Title to Mortgaged Premises:"—

In the discussion respecting the preparation of an abstract by the solicitor to the mortgagee or mortgagor, the interest of the client appears to be entirely overlooked, and attention paid merely to the point of which solicitor should profit.

In the case put by Mr. Bond, I should say neither should profit, except as to the abstract of the mortgage-deed itself, and, if necessary, a copy of the abstract of the other deeds, for there appears to have been an abstract already in existence of all the deeds but the mortgage-deed.

In that case the duty of the mortgagor's solicitor was to have ascertained whether the fair copy of this abstract (which I assume to have been in the possession of Mr. Bond) was in a fit state for delivery, i. e. not disfigured with requisitions in the margins, &c. and if it was, to have requested Mr. Bond to add an abstract of the mortgage-deed to it and send it to him (the mortgagor's solicitor) for delivery to the purchaser. If it was not in a state for delivery, it was the duty of the mortgagor's solicitor to make a copy of the draft abstract he had and perfect it by adding an abstract of the mortgage-deed prepared from his own copy of the draft, and then deliver the abstract to the purchaser, charging his client with the fair copy only of the draft abstract, and with the drawing and fair copying of the abstract of the mortgage-deed. This would have been doing the business efficiently at a very great saving of expense to the client, and therefore it was the duty of the mortgagor's solicitor so to have done it, and the duty of the mortgagee's solicitor to have acquiesced in its being so done.

The claims set up on behalf of solicitors to mortgagees to prepare abstracts and perfect titles to estates in mortgage to their clients on sales of such estates, appears monstrous. What! is a man, because he borrows money on his estate, to be obliged to change his solicitor or employ two, and pay perhaps three pounds for what his own could do for him for one? The duty, and the only duty of the solicitor to a mortgagee is to ascertain, in the first instance, the goodness of the title and prepare the mortgage-deed, and afterwards take care that he permits his client to exhibit the deeds for inspection on proper occasions only; and when his client is called on to transfer or release his interest in the premises, that the deed by which he does so is such a one as is proper as regards his client. If indeed no abstract exists, then, on a sale or transfer, the mortgagee's solicitor should prepare one, simply because the deeds are in his custody.

A Correspondent, under the signature "An Attorney," thus comments on the employment of Justices' Clerks in Prosecutions:—

In addition to the many reasons given by able correspondents in your journal, that justices' clerks should not be allowed to be employed in prosecutions, I send you the following:—

A client of mine caused his servant to be brought before the magistrates sitting in petty sessions on a charge of larceny. The magistrates committed the servant to take her trial at the then next assizes or quarter sessions which should happen first; and my client, together with the servant, her sureties, and the witnesses, were bound over to appear at either the assizes or the sessions which should happen first. For one whole week the clerk to the justices tried all he could to get my client to give him the prosecution; and when he saw it was useless for him to interfere with another person's client, he told him he would some day or other be upsides with him. But this worthy attorney and magistrates' clerk did not rest here with his dirty work, but (like a dog in a manger) he was determined that I should not have the prosecution, and accordingly he prevailed on one of the committing justices to rebind the parties over to the quarter sessions, thereby jumping over the assizes; and as there is a county solicitor appointed to conduct all prosecutions at the quarter sessions for the county in which I reside, I of course shall be prevented interfering in the case on behalf of my client. I could give several other shameful instances of the conduct of the above alluded to justices' clerk; and if he does not alter his ways, I shall give you his name and address, together with a few of his dirty actions.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1845.

TO READERS.

WITH the present number commences the FIFTH volume of the LAW TIMES.

Again it is our gratifying duty to announce a steady accession to the roll of subscribers as exhibited in the two lists published since we had occasion to report progress six months ago. The addition during the progress of the volume just completed will be found on reference to be no less than TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY-ONE.

It has been the custom of the LAW TIMES, upon such occasions as the present, briefly to review the improvements introduced during the progress of the expired half-year, to shew how strenuously its conductors have striven to deserve the increasing confidence of the Profession, and how far performances may have kept pace with promises.

No volume since the commencement of the LAW TIMES has exhibited so many and such great improvements as the one just completed. It has witnessed some novel experiments, the issue of which was extremely doubtful when they were undertaken, but which in their results have proved successful beyond the most sanguine anticipations of the editors or the readers.

Foremost of these in novelty and importance was the design (first announced as to be submitted to early trial in the address which opened the fourth volume) for presenting to the Profession all the written judgments of the Courts of Common Law verbatim within a few days after their delivery.

The experiment was a bold, because it was an untried one, and had been deemed hitherto to be a practical impossibility. However, with some difficulties, which patience, perseverance, and experience were demanded to overcome, the attempt was perfectly successful. The experiment has been tried during the entire period that has since elapsed, and the result is, that the LAW TIMES has been enabled to publish all the written judgments, with one solitary exception, delivered since the commencement of Michaelmas Term, and this has presented to the Profession a mass of the most valuable, because the most authentic, law ever collected, no portion of which they could elsewhere procure for many weeks after they had obtained it here, and a considerable part of which will be found nowhere beside; almost every other series of reports being necessarily selections, whereas in the LAW TIMES all the cases are to be found.

A second great improvement introduced during the progress of the last volume, has been the perfecting of the reports generally, by the enlarged and costly plan of placing two Reporters in each court; the consequence of this has been, that the cases are prepared and citations given with more accuracy, and greater attention to detail, than was practicable under former arrangements. The effect has been already most marked. The reader will doubtless have noticed how frequently of late the LAW TIMES has been cited in the Courts, and with what respect its reports have been received by the judges.

The Summaries of the decisions of each Term, commenced twelve months since, and regularly continued, as respects the Common Law Courts and Magistrates' Cases, were found to be so useful to the Profession, that the plan has been extended to the decisions of the Equity Courts, and a like Summary of the decisions in the Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts is now in preparation. The unsettled state of the law and practice in this department of our jurisprudence will make such a summary peculiarly valuable at this time, and it will, therefore, be somewhat more elaborately written than the others have been.

Another addition made during the progress of the last volume has been a large variety of commentaries on current law, which we have arranged under appropriate headings, so that the information on any particular topic may be found at a glance by the inquirer. Magistrates' Law, Common Law, and the Law of Real Property have been severally treated in this manner, and a vast number of topics of present interest and utility have been thus brought prominently under the notice of the practitioner.

The new classification of the Legal Intelligence under the headings of Promotions and Appointments and Court Papers has given a still more methodical appearance to a journal whose chief recommendation must ever be the ease with which the information sought in its columns may be found amidst the hurry of business.

It is hoped that the arrangement made with M. TREITT, a distinguished Avocat at Paris, to supply the series of articles illustrative of so much of the jurisprudence of France as an English lawyer ought to be acquainted with, will be deemed a desirable acquisition.

The publication of the verbatim reports of the written-judgments, and the introduction of so much new material, have necessarily trenched largely upon our columns, ample though they be. We have been compelled, in consequence of this, to a less frequent insertion of the law lectures than we had desired. But, nevertheless, the last half-year has enabled us to complete Professor CAREY's instructive series of lectures on Pleading, Practice, and Evidence, and to commence a new series (promising still more interest and utility) on the Law of Contracts. Professor TAYLOR's course on Medical Jurisprudence has made considerable progress, and will, we hope, be completed in the course of the current volume. It may be as well to add that all these lectures are published nowhere beside.

So much for what has been done. In the way of promise of further improvements little can now be offered. We propose to devote a distinct department of the LAW TIMES to a collection of practical forms and precedents, of which we anticipate many to be contributed by experienced practitioners, whose offices must contain not a little that they will be willing to circulate for the benefit of the other members of the Profession.

Still do we invite suggestions for additions and improvements in any department of the LAW TIMES, assuring our subscribers that every such communication will receive careful consideration, and, whether ultimately adopted or not, will be deemed an act of friendship.

Nothing further remains to be said save once again to thank the Profession for the great and steadily growing confidence which it has been pleased to repose in the LAW TIMES, and to close with assurances that still, as hitherto, unceasing efforts will be made to become more and more worthy of the high and gratifying position to which that confidence has lifted this journal, which in number and width of circulation is now exceeded by few, while in character and influence it is excelled by none, of the weekly journals of Great Britain.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM has again turned a deaf ear to the complaints of the multitudes of honest men brought to the verge of ruin by the Rogues' Indemnity Act. He prays for it a fair trial; as if it had not already proved itself to be full of ills. Sir JAMES refers to certain advantages resulting from the limitation of imprisonment for debt, and, having cited these, he imagines that he has answered the complaints of the objectors.

But Sir JAMES GRAHAM, and the representatives in Parliament of, the ruined traders, persist in misunderstanding and mistaking both the grievance and the remedy proposed. Again and again have we assured them that the complainants pray not for the restoration of imprisonment for debt, but for more efficient remedies against the property of debtors. They say, "You, the Legislature, have taken from us our remedy against the persons of our debtors without giving us a remedy against their properties. Scarcely a day passes but some fraudulent fellow suffers us to obtain judgment against him, and then takes furnished lodgings, and, though possessing an income of hundreds a year, derived from a source which, as the law stands, cannot be taken in execution, he laughs at our judgment, snaps his fingers at our claims, and lives in luxury while we are starving. We do not ask you to restore the remedy that has been taken away. All that we ask of you is, that you shall give us another in its stead, which may enable us to take, in payment of his debts, any property of any kind possessed by a debtor; and if he have none, that he shall be punished if it should appear that the debts were fraudulently contracted. We want no powers new to our law. We pray only that you will extend the existing law of insolvency to all debtors, so that if a man contract a debt, however small, which he cannot pay, he shall be subjected to the same process to obtain relief as he is now compelled to resort to when his debts have swollen to a certain amount."

This prayer is so rational, so manifestly just, so accordant with the policy of our law, that we cannot believe, if it were fairly and fully stated to Parliament by some intelligent member, but that it would be granted without the further trial which Sir James Graham is soliciting for a measure, founded indeed upon a good principle, but rendered most noxious in practice by the omission to accompany the removal of an evil with some provisions for the attainment by other obvious means of the end it was originally framed to accomplish, but which was unhappily marred by the petty spite of an influential peer, jealous of the fame another would have acquired by a scheme which at once abolished imprisonment for debt and increased the security of the creditor.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

The following advertisement appears in the Sunday Times of 30th March last. The reference to the Porter's Lodge, at Gray's-Inn, might, if the benchers of the Society would insist upon their own servant telling the truth, lead to a discovery of the offender.

INSOLVENCY AND EMBARRASSED AFFAIRS.

An entirely new practice having arisen, in consequence of Lord Brougham's humane Acts, a Solicitor who has devoted his time entirely to Insolvent practice, offers his services to London and Country Solicitors and persons in difficulties, to prepare Schedules and intricate Balance-sheets. Agency terms. References to the Bar and to the Profession. Address, P. P. T. Porter's Lodge, Gray's Inn.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The seventh number of Magistrates' Cases, and the fifth of Practice Cases, are now ready. The eighth, completing the second part of Magistrates' Cases; the ninth and tenth numbers of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, and the sixth of Practice Cases, are in the press.

The Conditions of Sale already announced are settled, and in the hands of the printer, and will be ready for delivery in a few days.

Many other Forms are in preparation; but works of this kind are necessarily suspended during the circuits, which wholly absorb the time of the counsel to whom their framing is intrusted.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

On Legislative Expression; or, the Language of the Written Law. By George Coode, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1845, Benning and Co.

The purpose of this treatise is to examine what is essential to the enunciating in language the will of the Legislature, and to state the rules to be deduced from the analysis.

Every lawyer will recognize the necessity for the establishment of some rules for legislative expression, when he remembers the doubts and difficulties continually arising from loose and inaccurate language in our laws.

Mr. Coode has endeavoured to furnish some rules by which the draftsman of a statute may be guided in his labour. His argument may be thus analyzed.

The expression of every law consists of,

1st. The description of the legal subject.

2nd. The enunciation of the legal action.

When the law is not of universal application to these must be added,

3rd. The description of the   to which the legal action is confined.

4th. The conditions on performance of which the legal action operates.

Mr. Coode illustrates his argument by applying it to the Poor Law, and the reader will be pleased to bear that in mind as he proceeds.

The legal subject, or person to be affected by the law, is readily defined; but the description of the legal action is extremely difficult, and requires the utmost vigilance of the Legislature, inasmuch as it is in the terms in which it is expressed that every right, privilege, power, obligation, and sanction depends.

The rules for the expression of the legal subject are two.

First, to keep the legal subject distinct in form and in place from other parts of the legal sentence.

Secondly, not to permit it to be withdrawn from view, or disguised by the non-description of persons, or by the substitution of things instead of persons, or by the use of impersonal forms of expression.

The utmost care and accuracy are required in the use of the proper auxiliaries to the enacting verb, may and shall, by the neglect of which the most serious difficulties are frequently occasioned. Mr. Coode's rules for their employment are as follows:

If a right, privilege, or power is conferred, the appropriate copula is may or may not: if a right, power, or privilege is to be abridged, the appropriate copula is may not; if an obligation is imposed to render any duty, the appropriate copula is shall; if the obligation is to abstain, the appropriate copula is shall not; again, if the purpose is to affect the legal subject with a liability or sanction, the appropriate copula is still shall;" only when the subject is to be active, the whole enacting verb will be active, "shall forfeit," &c. and where the subject is to submit, or be passive, the whole enacting verb will be passive, as "shall be imprisoned," &c.

In no case should any other than permissive or imperative language in the enacting verb be used, and these two rules should never be infringed.

1st. That the copula, which joins the legal subject and the legal action is to be may, or may not, or shall, or shall not, as, "any person may," "no person may, 'every person shall," or 'no person shall.'

2nd. That the whole of the enacting verb is always to be an active verb, excepting only where the legal subject is to submit or suffer, as where executory force, or punishment (sanctions), are directed to be submitted to by the person described in the legal subject.

And again—

—whenever an act is allowed as a right, or as a privilege, that is to all the members of the community, or to certain persons for their own benefit, the proper copula is "may;"

—whenever the act is authorized as a power, that is to certain persons to perform, not for their own benefit, but for the benefit of others on whose behalf the power is given, the proper copula is shall.

Mr. Coode recommends that the subject and the action should be printed in distinctive type, so as to be instantly apparent to the eye.

But a large portion of modern legislation is not general, but addressed to particular cases; and to insure that this be done with accuracy, it is this suggestion is offered.

As on the due expression of the legal subject the extent of the law depends, and as on that of the legal action the nature of the law depends, so on the expression of the case, and of the conditions, do the clearness, precision, and form of our statute law mainly depend.

The rule to be observed is of such simplicity as to make its utterance appear almost an absurdity; but simple as it is, it is the most frequently neglected of any rule of composition.

It is, that wherever the law is intended to operate only in certain circumstances, those circumstances should be invariably described before any other part of the enactment is expressed.

Some laws are intended to operate only on certain conditions, and it is essential that they be clearly defined. The proper language of a condition is the conditional, "If he give notice," &c.

There may be many distinct conditions imposed. In this case the conditions are never to be performed simultaneously. The order of their performance in time ought to be carefully observed in expressing them; so that the person, or several persons, on whom they are imposed may see the order in which to proceed to realize all the conditions of the legal action, and may be in no doubt when those conditions are all complied with. For the reason that the legal action is postponed, and cannot act upon the legal subject until these conditions are all complied with, the expression of the conditions ought immediately to precede that of the legal subject.

The order of expression should therefore be—1st, the case; 2nd, the conditions; 3rd, the legal subject; 4th, the legal action. The advantages of this order are thus admirably illustrated by Mr. Coode:—

The specific importance of each of these several elements of a legal sentence has been adverted to above, but the importance of observing invariably the order of expression of—1st, the case; 2nd, the conditions; 3rd, the legal subject; 4th, the legal action, is still to be pointed out.

The case being placed first, the first few words of the sentence answer immediately to the inquirer, whether his case is included in the provision or not; whether he need read on, or should proceed to seek the law applicable to his circumstances in another clause. Suppose, for instance, these are the words:—

Case—Where any Quaker (7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 34, s. 4) refuses to pay any church-rates, or any customary or other rights, dues, or payments belonging to any church or chapel, or which of right by law and custom ought to be paid for the stipend or maintenance of any minister or curate officiating therein (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 6, s. 2);

—it is evident that no person who knows the circumstances of any case can doubt whether the law presently to be expressed applies to his case or not; he can at once determine, (if the case is thus expressed at the threshold, and he is not to be balked by some subsequent limitation of the law to some more special case, by some subsequent parenthetical phrase or proviso, or some clause somewhere else in the statute) whether he has or has not before him the law he seeks.

Having ascertained that there is law applicable to his case, he next learns what is to be done to make it operative; this he learns from the conditions which follow immediately upon the case, and precede the expression of the law:—

Conditions—if any churchwarden or other person who ought to receive or collect the same complain thereof (7 & 8 Wm. 4, c. 34, s. 4), and if such Quaker have reasonable warning of such complaint (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 6, s. 2); —here, whether complainant or defendant, he sees at once all the requisites to make the law operate in the case. Whoever seeks to make the law operate proceeds to do the things required as conditions in the order in which they are prescribed, and these being done, the right of the claimant and the liability of the defendant and the duty of the functionary are complete,—the law has now only to operate functionally.

The legal subject describes the person now enabled or commanded to act:—

Legal subject—one of the next justices of the peace (53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 6), of the same county (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 6, s. 2) other than such justice of the peace as is patron of such church or chapel (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 6, s. 2):

—here will be found determined all the persons who, in the case, and on performance of the conditions prescribed, are immediately authorized, obliged, or prohibited by the legal action. The suitor, the defendant, the Court itself, all look here to see that the Court (or other legal subject) is competent. The Court finds from its description here, as the legal subject, that it has or has not jurisdiction in the case; it finds whether it is yet empowered to act or not, according as the conditions have or have not been complied with.

The case before the Court (or other legal subject) is seen to be the case described in the statute; the conditions as prescribed are executed; the Court (or other legal subject) is recognized as conforming to its description, and is therefore competent; now comes the legal action.—

Legal action may, by warrant under his hand and seal, summon such Quaker before the two next justices of the peace of the same county (7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 34, s. 4);

—here the Court (or other legal subject) finds what by law it is required to do, to summon, convict, execute, or what else.

Apply the above to the oral or documentary proceedings in any court, and the advantage of this mode of expressing the law will be at once apparent. Suppose the complaint is to be made, the complainant has nothing to do but to look at the case and conditions, to word his complaint so as to include the very words of the statute, filling in his own and the defendant's personal description and the necessary dates and places. Nothing can be simpler than this process; when done, no astuteness can successfully impugn it.

Consider on the other hand the defence. The defendant or other antagonist has only to shew in his defensive allegation, his plea, or other appropriate answer, that the case is other than the case described in the statute, and he ousts the jurisdiction of the Court, or the competence of the other legal subject; or he has only to shew that the prescribed conditions have not been complied with, and he justly and inevitably defeats the complaint, the declaration, or other allegation of the pursuing party.

Next as to the decision—the Court recites in it the very same words in which the case is described, that the conditions in the words of the statute were performed, or that they or some of them were not; it describes itself by the use of the very terms of the legal subject, by which the competence of the tribunal is established in terms which can only be successfully attacked by defeating the statute itself; the Court now proceeds to execute its authority, to convict or to give its decision or judgment, using the very words of the legal action, and abstaining from every thing going beyond those words.

At every stage the proceedings would thus run parallel, pari passu with the words of the statute, in a manner which would greatly diminish the perplexity of all who have only to obey or execute the law.

It often happens that many legal actions are intended to apply to the same legal subject, and care should be taken to keep them distinct by the use of distinct copulæ, and they should follow in the order in which they are to take place. Mr. COODE illustrates his argument by taking s. 12 of the statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, upon one page, and on the opposite setting forth the substance of it, after his plan, by which it is abbreviated nearly three-fourths, and certainly rendered vastly more intelligible.

He excepts to the present indiscriminate use of provisoes, which, he contends, should be expressed as exceptions, and the specimens he has collected from two or three statutes only serve to exhibit, in a striking point of view, the slovenly and inartistic form of our legislation. The following rule is proposed for the use of verbs in cases and conditions:—

If the law be regarded while it remains in force as constantly speaking, we get a clear and simple rule of expression, which will, whenever a case occurs for its application, accurately correspond with the then state of facts. The law will express in the present tense facts and conditions required to be concurrent with the operation of the legal action: in the perfect past tense, facts and conditions required as precedents to the legal action.

And we think that most of our readers will be inclined to concur with Mr. COODE in his concluding comments:—

In conforming to these rules, it is to be observed that, after all, nothing more is required than that, instead of an accidental and incongruous style, the common popular structure of plain English should be resorted to.

There is apparently a notion amongst amateurs, that legislative language must be intricate and barbarous. Certain antick phrases are apparently thought by them to be essential to law writing. A readiness in the use of 'nevertheless,' 'provided always,' 'it shall and may be lawful, and he is hereby authorized, empowered, and required to,' 'anything in any act or acts to the contrary notwithstanding,' &c. &c. seem to be admitted to constitute the qualification for drawing acts of Parliament. The merit appears to mount higher in proportion as the author can succeed in including a greater number of limitations, qualifications, conditions, and provisoes, between the nominative case and its verb, or any other pair of dependent words. It is, however, a clear mistake to think that this absurd style, prevalent as it is, and much as we sacrifice to adhere to it, has the sanction of authority. The bills prepared by judges and well-informed lawyers, or by men really practised in the forms of legal expression, have at all times been, as a rule, remarkable for simplicity and directness, and allowing occasionally something to the technical nature of the subjects, for the popularity of their style and construction.

If it could be made to be generally recognized that the essentials of every law are simple, and that their direct expression is the perfection of law writing, the greatest defects of our statute law would cease.

We trust that the attention of our legislators, and of their draftsmen, will be attracted by this valuable little essay to the very important subject of which it treats, and that we may yet be indebted to Mr. COODE's hints on legislative expression, for laws framed according to the rules of good grammar and the genius of the English language.

NECROLOGY.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF ROMNEY.

We have to announce the death of the Earl of Romney; it took place on the 29th ultimo at his lordship's seat, Mote, near Maidstone, in the 68th year of his age. The noble earl's death was nearly sudden. On the 27th ultimo he was visited by a paralytic stroke, which, from its violence, left little hope of recovery. Dr. Hawkins was immediately sent for from town, and hastened with all dispatch to the relief of his noble patient; but skill was unavailing; the noble lord gradually sunk and expired, as stated, on the 29th ultimo.

Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, Viscount Marsham of the Mote, county of Kent, Baron Romney, and a baronet, was born on the 22nd November, 1777; succeeded his father, Charles, March 1, 1811; married, on 9th November, 1806, Sophia, daughter and sole heiress of Wm. Morton Pitt, esq. of Kingston House, in the county of Dorset, by whom he had issue Charles Viscount Marsham (born 31st July, 1808) and three daughters. Her ladyship died on the 9th Sept. 1812. In February, 1832, the noble earl married, secondly, Mary Elizabeth, daughter of John Thomas, second Viscount Sydney, and widow of George James Cholmondeley, esq. and had issue a son and daughter, the latter still-born.

The noble earl is succeeded in his title and estates by Viscount Marsham (now Earl of Romney), member for West Kent.

In politics the deceased was a moderate constitutional Whig, but of late years he rarely interfered with political matters. His last public act was a journey to Oxford to add his placet to that of the majority who, to preserve our Protestant Church and institutions, voted for the degradation of Mr Ward. His death will be severely felt by the trading interests of Maidstone, of which he was a steady and liberal patron. The labouring poor will also lose in his lordship a warm friend—one who did good in the most unexceptionable way of giving abundant employment. The noble lord was fond of building and making other improvements upon his estates, and hence, for years past, he has given constant work to a considerable number of artisans and labourers.

The present earl was elected a member of the House of Commons for the western division of Kent, at the last election, on the Conservative interest. His lordship married, in February, 1832, Lady Margaret Harriet Scott, sister of the Duke of Buccleuch, and has issue.

The family is an ancient one. Sir John Marsham, son of Thomas Marsham, Alderman of London, was created a baronet in 1663; his grandson, the fifth baronet, was created Baron Romney in 1716. He married Elizabeth, the daughter of the celebrated Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel, then commander-in-chief of the British fleet.

FUNERAL OF SIR JAMES DOWLING.

We extract the following particulars of the funeral of the lamented Chief Justice Dowling, from a Sydney paper:—

"The remains of the late Sir James Dowling were interred in the family vault yesterday morning. The body was removed from Brougham Hall shortly after eleven o'clock, and was conveyed to St. James's Church, and thence to the burial-ground. The attendance on the funeral was most numerous. There were one hundred and five carriages in the mournful procession, which extended from St. James's Church to Campbell-street. Before the hearse was a carriage containing his Honour's medical attendants, and two containing the Bishop of Australia and several clergymen. After the hearse were two carriages containing relatives, and the carriage containing his Excellency the Governor. The pall-bearers were Sir Maurice O'Connell, Mr. E. D. Thomson, Mr. Riddell, Dr. Bland, Dr. Dawson, Mr. Norton. After the Governor's carriage, the remainder of the company followed, without distinction of rank. Among those we noticed nearly the whole of the civil officers, several military and commissariat officers, Mr. Justice A'Beckett, the Speaker and several members of the Legislative Council, the Attorney-General and a number of barristers and attorneys; the Mayor and City Councillors, Bishop Murphy and some Roman Catholic priests, the French and American consuls, and a large portion of the respectable inhabitants of the city. The burial service, both in the church (which was crowded to excess) and in the burial-ground, was read by the Bishop of Australia. The bells of St. James's Church and the Roman Catholic Cathedral were tolled during the morning. There was a vast concourse of people in attendance upon the whole line of procession. His Honour was fifty-seven years of age."

The Danbury Park Estate, with its noble and modern built Mansion, Offices, Pleasure-Grounds, Plantations, and Timber, with a contiguous Farm, the whole embracing about 600 acres.—By Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, at the Mart, on Friday, May 23, at Twelve, unless an acceptable offer should be previously made by Private Contract.

DANBURY PARK, ornamented with fine stately forest trees and sheets of water, with about 260 acres of land, encircled by a park fence, together with a farm of about 330 acres, within an easy distance, situate in a beautiful and picturesque part of the county of Essex, within five miles of the Chelmsford station and hour and a half's reach of London. Upon an eminence and spot peculiarly well chosen the present proprietor has erected an elegant and most substantial mansion, presenting an elevation of Elizabethan architecture, designed and completed under the superintendence of an architect of great eminence and acknowledged taste, offering one of the most perfect residences in the county, of which immediate possession may be had; and the whole of the elegant modern furniture will be left for the purchaser to take at a fair valuation. The mansion includes 22 principal and secondary bed-rooms and dressing-rooms, bath-room and boudoir, approached by two noble stone and oak staircases, entrance and inner hall splendid suite of rooms 16 feet in height, with massive folding doors, comprising dining-parlour 30 feet by 21 feet, ante-room, drawing-room 28 feet by 21 feet, library feet by 20 feet, ornamented with beautiful marble chimney-pieces. The interior of these apartments is most tastefully decorated and finished under the immediate direction of Morant. Gentleman's retiring library, breakfast parlour, with an infinity of closets, store-rooms, water-closets, and offices of every description suitable and adapted to the mansion. which is erected upon solid brick groined arches, affording a range of not less than 12 spacious vaults for wine, ale, and beer. The mansion and offices are supplied with the purest water by a powerful spring, never failing in the driest seasons, and conveyed by pipes into a spacious reservoir on the top of the mansion, worked by a water-wheel. The out-offices comprise extensive stabling, coach-houses, brew-house, laundry, gardener's cottage, farm-yard, and numerous out-buildings, productive walled garden, extensive gravel-walks, lawns, flower-gardens, and shrubberies, beautiful sheets of water, well stored with fish, and the park is approached by an ornamental Elizabethan lodge: the whole estate is freehold, and subject to the usual outgoings, which are not heavy. May be viewed by tickets only, which with particulars may shortly be had of Messrs. Poole and Gamlen, solicitors, 3, Gray's-inn-square; of Mr. J. O. Parker, Woodham Mortimer, at the Black Boy, Chelmsford; Cups, Colchester; White Hart, Brentwood; at the Mart, and of Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, 62, Old Broad-street, Royal Exchange.

Upton near Stratford, Essex

MESSRS. HOGGART and NORTON have received instructions from the executors of the late Mrs. Wackerbath to offer for SALE, at the Mart, on Friday, April 18, at twelve, a capital and substantially built FAMILY RESIDENCE, with pleasure-grounds, gardens, and meadow land, containing together upwards of five acres and a half, most delightfully situate, at Upton, near Stratford, a fine dry healthy spot, and in all respects adapted for the immediate reception of a respectable family. It contains ten bed-chambers, dressing-rooms, water-closet, excellent entrance-hall, noble dining-room, twenty-seven feet long, breakfast-room or library, two drawing-rooms, communicating by folding doors, and opening into a conservatory, butler's pantry, housekeeper's room, capital servants' offices, binned wine, beer, and coal cellars; detached are stabling for five horses, coach-houses, cart-stable, barn, piggeries, and various out-buildings; the lawn and grounds are beautifully laid out, and lead to the ornamental paddocks; in the rear there is a very productive kitchen garden, principally walled, and a thriving orchard, the whole containing between five and six acres. Particulars may be had at the Mart, and of Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, 62, Old Broad-street, Royal Exchange.

Most desirable Church Preferment in a fine part of the County of Essex.—By Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, at the Mart, in May,

THE next PRESENTATION to the Rectory of Inworth, subject to the life of the present incumbent, in his 75th year, situate near Witham, a short distance from the Eastern Counties Railway. The income is about 800*l*. per annum net, exclusive of the rectory house, but inclusive of 57 acres of fine glebe land tithe free. The house is an old-fashioned residence, containing every accommodation for a family, with an excellent garden and offices. Population under 400, and the extent of the parish 1,200 acres. Particulars will shortly be ready, and may be had of J. D. Warter, esq. solicitor, Carey-street; at the Mart; and of Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, 62, Old Broad-street, Royal Exchange.

Freehold Residence, with large Garden, Lawn, and upwards of 20 acres of capital Meadow Land, situate at Little Missenden, near Amersham, in the county of Bucks.—By Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, at the Mart, on Friday, April 18 (instead of April 11, as before advertised), at Twelve, in one lot, by direction of the Administratrixes of the late Miss Bates,

A FREEHOLD ESTATE, situate in the village of Little Missenden, near the church, and about two miles from Amersham, in the county of Bucks, comprising a spacious residence, containing numerous bed-rooms, morning-room, dining-room, library, lofty drawing-room opening to the pleasure-ground, servants' rooms and offices; detached coach-house, stabling, and various out-buildings, garden and pleasure-ground intersected by a stream of water, and a paddock in the rear, richly ornamented with timber, with two capital inclosures of meadow land, having extensive frontages to the two roads leading to Aylesbury, and lying entirely within a ring fence, the whole containing upwards of 20 acres. The land is in an exceeding advantageous situation for building, or would let at high accommodation rents to persons residing in the village. May be viewed and particulars had at the Griffin Inn, Amersham; on the premises at Little Missenden; of Messrs. Riches and Woodbridge, solicitors, Uxbridge, Middlesex; at the Mart; and of Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, 62, Old Broad-street, Royal Exchange.

Capital and very valuable Freehold Estates, near Daventry, Southam, and Leamington, in the county of Warwick, part extra-parochial.—By Messrs. HOGGART and NORTON, at the Mart, on Friday, May 23, at 12, Notting-hill.—Kensington-park Estate. Highly important and valuable Building Land, embracing nearly one-half of this most eligible and rapidly-improving property.

MR. FREDERICK CHINNOCK has been favoured with instructions from the Assignee of Jacob Connop, with the concurrence of the Mortgagees, to submit for SALE by AUCTION, at the Auction Mart, on Tuesday, April 29, in lots, the above most desirable PROPERTY. It comprehends about 50 acres of land, presenting sites for the erection of upwards of 300 detached and other houses, upon which an immense outlay has been made in building sewers, forming squares, draining the land, laying out and ornamenting the grounds. It embraces that portion of the estate nearest to London, and is situate on a commanding eminence, from which views of the most pleasing and delightful kind are obtained of the surrounding country. The situation is, beyond doubt, one of the most healthy and desirable in the environs of London for building purposes, affording to the builder, capitalist, or speculator, a rare opportunity for the investment of money. More descriptive advertisements will shortly appear, and plans and particulars of the estate will be published early, and may be obtained of T. B. Hudson, esq. solicitor, 4, Old Jewry; of Messrs. Humphrys, Keightley, and Parkin, solicitors, 43, Chancery-lane; of Joseph Lucas, esq. solicitor, 8, Gray's-inn-square; at the Auction Mart; and at Mr. FREDERICK CHINNOCK'S auction and estate offices, 28, Regent-street, Waterloo-place.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday and Thursday, March 5 and 6.

MATHEWMAN v. WOODCOCK.

Infants—Next friend—Reference to the Master as to an infant's suit.

Where a suit had been instituted by the next friend of infant devisees against the trustee and executrix, and a reference made on the application of the defendant to inquire whether such suit was proper for the infants' benefit, and afterwards the executrix commenced an administration suit, and obtained a decree, the references in the first suit become unnecessary, and the frame of that suit being defective, the next friend was allowed to apply in the second suit.

This was a motion for the discharge of an order made by the Vice-Chancellor of England, which directed a reference to the Master to inquire if this suit had been properly instituted, and whether James Roberts, the next friend of the infant plaintiffs in this suit, was a proper person to be continued as next friend. It appeared that the infants were the children of John Mathewman, who had devised and bequeathed a very considerable property, amounting in value to 100,000*l.* to his infant children, and had appointed their grandmother, his wife's mother, sole trustee and executrix of his will. There was no question upon the construction of the will: but the next friend, Roberts, one of the nearest paternal relatives of the infants, being their first cousin once removed, alleged that the grandmother of the infants was misapplying the infants' property, by carrying on a farm which the testator had himself occupied, and by keeping up an establishment unnecessarily expensive at the testator's late dwelling-house. The defendant was Mrs. Hannah Woodcock, the sole executrix. The testator had married the daughter of Mrs. Woodcock, who occupied a house and farm belonging to the testator; and upon the marriage the testator had gone to reside in the same house, and continued there until about two years before his death, when he was removed to a lunatic asylum, where he died. During the testator's residence in the asylum, a lease of another of his farms had been granted to John Brailsford, as was alleged, upon terms too advantageous; and immediately after the testator's death, his widow married Brailsford. It was also alleged that the executrix was a person of no property, and the case made by the bill was, that she could not safely be intrusted with the administration of this large estate. A second suit had been instituted since the commencement of this suit, with the concurrence of the executrix, in which a decree had been obtained.

Cooper and H. Clarke, for the plaintiff, contended that a very strong case must be made out against the next friend to justify such an order as that of the Vice-Chancellor's. (Stephens v. Stephens, 6 Mad. 97; Whittaker v. Marlar, 1 Cox, 286; Naldar v. Hawkins, 2 Mylne & Keene, 243.) The executrix had obtained great influence over the testator's mind, and his will was executed under that influence. The defendant by her answer stated that she was supporting the infant plaintiffs, and keeping up the establishment out of the rents and profits. A brother of the testator, and also his aunt, both of whom resided with him, made wills on the same day as the testator, and disposed of their property in the same way. This was in Dec. 1838. He was removed to a lunatic asylum in Sept. 1841, but no commission of lunacy was issued. The same solicitor made all the wills. These wills were made under the defendant's dictation.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The will contains no provisions for the benefit of Mrs. Woodcock, or her daughter, except in the event of the death of the children.

Cooper read affidavits on the part of the next friend. Any stranger might file a bill on the behalf of infants; and it is the habit of the Court to encourage persons to come forward as next friends. (Chambers on Infancy; Macpherson on Infancy.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant having instituted a suit, is an admission that some suit was necessary for the administration of the estate.

Clarke.—The decree in the other suit was obtained as a short cause with the utmost possible speed; and then notice was given in this suit of a motion that the bill should be dismissed, or for a reference to the Master in the terms of the Vice-Chancellor's order. There ought to be some person to see that the accounts are properly taken.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is nothing more than this; the suits are identical, and, it being admitted that some suit is proper, the question is, which is the proper suit to be proceeded with. It does not turn on the priority of the suits, but which is most for the benefit of the infants. If the Vice-Chancellor's order is discharged, the plaintiff, the next friend, may ask for leave to give notice in both suits. I see nothing, as far as the case has gone, against Mr. Roberts. The reason he appointed another solicitor than the testator's solicitor, arose out of some delicacy on the part of the latter. Roberts is the second cousin of the infants, he is a substantial farmer, and able to pay costs. He was a relation of, and in communication with the testator. Any thing stated in the affidavits to shew that he acted from pique, is a mere possibility. How does it lie in the defendant's mouth to say no suit is necessary, when, according to the affidavits on that side, a suit has been deemed proper?

James Parker and Hetherington, for the defendant.—The decree in the second suit is more comprehensive than any which could be obtained in the first. That decree is for the administration of the estates of Mary Amos, the aunt, and William Mathewman, the brother of the testator, as well as that of the testator. Although no imputation was made against the defendant, the intention of instituting this suit was studiously concealed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Was it argued on the question as to the other estates before the Vice-Chancellor? The bill in the first suit might have been amended, or a supplemental bill filed.

Parker.—The next friend having instituted a suit without inquiry, furnishes ground for inquiry as to the propriety of this suit, and into his conduct.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It seems idle to refer it to the Master in this suit.

Parker.—If the decree in the second suit had not been made, the frame of this suit created a difficulty, inasmuch as the testator's heir-at-law is made a plaintiff. It is a misjoinder to make the heir-at-law a co-plaintiff with the devisees. The testator had directed 5,000*l.* to be raised for the maintenance of his younger children, and it is no breach of trust to apply the interest of that sum to the purpose. The sums charged to have been improperly called in by the executrix were part of the estate of W. Mathewman, and were required for the purposes of that estate. Roberts had no right to an explanation of the management of the estate.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I do not consider the allegations very material, only, in answering those allegations, the defendant goes on to shew that the suit is proper. It is admitted that a suit is necessary. If it were the suit of the solicitor, still it might be proper; or if Roberts had stated imputations, of danger to the estate, it might have been a proper one. I can't find fault with the will. But it is proper a suit should be instituted; the imputations are answered, which leaves the case where it stood; now, by this order it is referred to the Master, to inquire whether this is a proper suit.

Parker and Hetherington.—The will has not been proved against the heir-at-law. If it should turn out, or be alleged that the testator was not of sound mind when he executed the will, the suit, as at present framed, would be ineffectual for proving the will.

Cooper, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There are two points in this case; the misjoinder of the heir-at-law, and that such misjoinder should have been corrected by amending the bill. If the bill should be now amended, the discussion will be had over again, and without amendment what is the use of this suit? This suit cannot be carried on. But the subsequent facts can be brought before me in the other suit, if I discharge the order upon facts which were not before the court below. If an application is made to me in the suit in which a decree has been made, all necessary acts can be directed. Why should there be a reference to the Master in a suit which is at an end? I will discharge the Vice-Chancellor of England's order, not on the ground of its being improper, but as being now unnecessary. I will dispose of the costs of this motion after I have decided on the application the next friend intends to make. The plaintiffs in the second cause are not to take any step in the cause, and the defendants will have liberty to apply.

HUGHES v. WYNNE.

Taxation of costs—Reference to Master in ordinary, notwithstanding orders of 26th of October, 1842—Practice—Solicitor's lien for costs—Exception to Master's certificate by solicitors.

Where a reference had been previously made to the ordinary Master to tax all parties their costs, including a specific direction to allow "sums just and reasonable for payment of time and labour to an accountant," and the Master had disallowed a great part of the accountant's bill, it was held, that an order directing the Master to review his report on that point, made in 1844, was not an order for the taxation of costs within the orders of the 26th of October, 1842, and therefore was not referable to the taxing Master.

Wood and Fleming moved to discharge an order of the Master of the Rolls of the 30th of January last, which directed that the taxation of costs in this cause should be referred to the Master in ordinary, to whom the cause stood referred, and that notwithstanding the 10th general order of the 26th of October, 1842, the order of 1839, made in the cause might be acted on. By the 9th general order of the 26th of October, 1842, made in pursuance of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103, "An Act for abolishing certain offices in the High Court of Chancery," all the duties in relation to the taxation of costs which had been previously performed by the Masters in ordinary were transferred to the taxing Masters. And by the 10th order it was directed that all references for the taxation of costs should be made to the taxing Master in rotation.

On the 28th of March, 1835, an order was made, on the petition of Emma Wynne, for a reference to the Master to tax all parties their costs, charges, and expenses, including the costs, charges, and expenses of several petitions which had been presented in the cause, for investing the produce of estates sold, taking accounts, making valuations, and other proceedings in the cause; and it was ordered that in taxing the costs the Master should tax the petitioner her costs and should allow to the petitioner, not only sums and costs payable to solicitors, but also any sums which should appear to the Master to be just and reasonable, for payment of the time and labour of accountants, in respect of the subject matter of the cause.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Would not that have been incident to the account?

Wood.—Not without an express order. The Master proceeded with the reference, and certified that he had taxed the bill of costs of the petitioner's solicitor at the sum of 673*l.* the amount of the bill being 1,076*l.*; and a bill of charges and expenses of an accountant amounting to 1,650*l.* had been taxed at 219*l.* The solicitor had not included the accountant's bill in his own, but had made an item in his bill of "Paid accountant as per bill," no sum being set against that item in the solicitor's bill. The accountant's bill was carried in before the Master. The charges of the accountant ran parallel with those of the solicitor's bill. The solicitors for the petitioner petitioned for leave to except to the Master's report. If the report of the Master was an ordinary report, that was an improper mode; but objections to the report ought to have been left in the Master's office. On the other hand, if the report was a mere certificate of taxation, then the application at once by petition was right. An amendment had been made in the prayer of the petition, to ask for payment of certain costs. Pending the petition, Miss Wynne changed her solicitor, and the petitioning solicitor then obtained, on the 4th of November, 1839, an order to use the name of Emma Wynne, indemnifying her against all consequences of so doing. The petition having been proceeded with, was, on the 27th of March, 1840, dismissed with costs. Subsequently a review of the Master's report in the cause up to July, 1844, was ordered, and the Master was, on the 19th of July last, prepared to make a report, and was about to allow 1,200*l.* on the accountant's bill. An objection was made to the draft report on the part of Chas. Wynne, one of the parties in the cause, and if the report was an ordinary one, that was the right course. The solicitors appeared by counsel, and argued against the Master's power to grant a certificate. They then presented a petition for leave to except, but it was then too late, as the last petition day was on the 23rd of July. If this be a certificate for the taxation of costs, it ought to have gone to the taxing master. The Master says that it is a certificate of taxation, and that he is satisfied, since the general orders of October 1842, he has no power to make such a certificate. A petition was presented in Nov. last by the solicitors, in the name of Emma Wynne, on which the order now sought to be discharged was made. The solicitors had treated it all through as a taxation of costs. If it was not, no petition was necessary.

Kenyon Parker and Elderton, contra.

Wright, for John Wynne.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is not a taxation of costs. Sir William Horne, the Master in ordinary, is quite as competent to consider the quantum meruit, the amount just and reasonable to be paid to the accountant, as the taxing Master. The direction to the Master to proceed in the matter is only a courteous mode of intimating to him that the Court does not concur in his difficulty. I think it a proper reference to the Master in ordinary. The orders of 26th October, 1842, do not apply to this case.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Thursday, March 6.

PEMBERTON v. JACKSON.

Will. Appointment by a father to his infant child under a will is not fraudulent, provided he does not exceed his power, notwithstanding he makes the appointment in such a way as may ultimately put him into the absolute possession of the whole fund, for his own benefit, and thus defeat the contingent interests of others interested therein.

A testator, being possessed of considerable property, by his will gave certain legacies to his three nieces, and their children, as therein mentioned. He then devised all the residue of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates (except a certain leasehold house at B.), and personal property to trustees, upon trust for his nephew E. J. J. for life, and on his decease (subject to a power of jointuring his wife), upon trust for the children and grandchildren of E. J. J. as he should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to his children generally, they taking vested interests at twenty-one; and in default of their taking such vested interests, upon trust for his nieces, and their several families, to take in the same manner as before declared respecting the several legacies.

After the testator's death, E. J. J. married, and had one child, a son, born 2nd June, 1839, and four days after this event, viz. 6th June, he, by a deed-poll (reciting the will) appointed to his children generally, with a power of r ation, as he should by deed or will appoint, and default of such appointment, subject as therein mentioned, in trust for his said son then born, and all his after-born children, as joint tenants, for their absolute use and benefit. This appointment was objected to by the children of one of the testator's nieces, who were thus excluded from the contingent interest in their favour pointed out by the testator, on the ground that it operated as a fraud against those interests, and contrary to the testator's intention. Held, however, that as the testator had intrusted E. J. J. with such a power of appointment, the Court could not restrain the exercise of that power, however it might frustrate his ultimate intention.

The testator, Randall Jackson, esq. late of North Brixton, in the county of Surrey, by his will bearing date 11th June, 1836, ga d bequeathed to Henry Johnson and Robert Edward Jackson, and his nephew, Edward James Jackson, and James Patrick Macdougall, the sum of 10,000*l.* sterling, upon trust to invest the same in their names, for the benefit of his niece, Caroline Butcher, for life, and afterwards for her children, the plaintiffs, absolutely; and in failure of issue he directed the same to sink into his residue; and he gave the sum of 26,000*l.* to his trustees upon trust to invest for the benefit of the said plaintiffs as therein mentioned. The testator then bequeathed the sum of 16,000*l.* upon similar trusts for his niece, Eliza Macdougall, and her children, and 30,000*l.* for his other niece, Ellen Catherine Jackson, and her children, provided she should marry and have any. There was also a like direction in case of failure of the respective issues of his three nieces, that the last-mentioned sums should sink into and form part of his residue. The testator then devised and bequeathed unto his said trustees and their heirs, &c. his freeholds and leaseholds at Brixton, in trust for his said niece, Ellen Catherine Jackson, for life, and after her decease, upon trust for her children, to be vested interests at twenty-one; and in failure of her issue taking a vested interest, upon the trusts afterwards declared concerning the residue of his freehold and leasehold property; and he made his copyholds at Brixton liable to the same trusts as his freeholds and leaseholds at the same place. The testator afterwards devised and bequeathed unto his said trustees, their heirs, executors, &c. all the rest, residue, and remainder of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, and all his residuary trust moneys, stocks, funds, and securities, and other residuary estate, upon trust for his nephew, Edward J. Jackson, for life, and on his decease (subject to a power of making a provision by E. J. Jackson for any wife), upon trust for the children and grandchildren of E. J. Jackson, as he should appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust for the children of E. J. Jackson in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of accruer in case of their dying under twenty-one years of age; and in default of such children taking a vested interest, upon trust, to sell the residuary estate and invest the net produce in the purchase of stock, and stand possessed of the same upon the trusts next after declared of the residuary personal estate; and on failure of issue of E. J. Jackson, upon trust, that all the moneys, stocks, funds, &c. should be divided between the testator's said nieces, Eliza Macdougall, Ellen C. Jackson, and C. Butcher, the share of Eliza Macdougall to be held upon the like trusts as the legacy of 16,000*l.*; the share of Ellen C. Jackson, upon the like trusts as the legacy of 30,000*l.*; and the share of Caroline Butcher, upon the like trusts as the legacy of 10,000*l.* with benefit of accruer in case of failure of children.

The testator died on 15th March, 1837, and his will, with several codicils, were duly proved by his executors.

The children of Caroline Butcher filed their original bill in 1837, as being the only persons representing the inheritance and corpus of the real and personal estates (all the rest of the legatees being mere tenants for life), for the purpose of having the will administered.

Edward J. Jackson, who was a batchelor at the time of filing the original bill, married in July 1838, and upon such marriage settled a jointure upon his wife under and by virtue of the power given him under the testator's said will.

There were issue of this marriage a son and a daughter; the son, Randall Jackson, was born on the 2nd of June, 1839; and the daughter, Eliza Margaret Jackson, was born on the 25th September, 1840.

A few days after the birth of his son, E. J. Jackson executed a deed-poll or deed of appointment, dated 6th of June, 1839, whereby, reciting the will, he appointed all the testator's residuary, real, and personal estates (subject to his wife's jointure) in trust for the child, grandchild, or other issue of him, the said E. J. Jackson, in such manner and form, &c. as he, the said E. J. Jackson, at any time, and from time to time, by any deed, &c. with or without power of revocation and new appointment, might direct or appoint, and, in default of such direction or appointment, subject as therein mentioned, in trust for the said son then born, and all the after-born children of the said E. J. Jackson by his present or any after-taken wife, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, as joint tenants, for their absolute use and benefit.

The plaintiffs to the original bill filed their supplemental bill in consequence of this appointment, charging that it was not a due and valid execution of the power contained in the will of the testator, and that the same did not defeat the contingent interests of the plaintiffs, as the children of Caroline Butcher, in the testator's freehold, leasehold, and personal estates, and praying that the deed-poll and assignment might be declared fraudulent and void against the plaintiffs and the other parties whose interests under the will were thereby sought to be affected.

Upon a decretal order and reference to the Master, he certified, among other things, that the said E. J. Jackson had executed an instrument or deed-poll bearing date the 6th of June, 1839, and that the said E. J. Jackson thereby executed a power of appointment, and that he executed such appointment in pursuance of the powers given by the said testator's will in respect of the residuary real and personal estate of the said testator as were thereinbefore set forth, bearing date respectively the 25th day of July, 1838, and the 6th day of June, 1839; but, save as aforesaid, the said E. J. Jackson had not executed any appointment in pursuance of such powers or either of them.

To this report the plaintiffs excepted, contending that the Master ought to have certified that the said E. J. Jackson had executed such appointment in pursuance of the powers given by the testator's will in respect of the residuary real and personal estate of the said testator as therein set forth, bearing date the 25th of July, 1838, and that, save such appointment of the 25th of July, 1838, the said E. J. Jackson had not executed any appointment in pursuance of such powers, or either of them; or that the Master ought to have certified that the said E. J. Jackson had not made any appointment in pursuance of the power given by the testator's will.

The exception came on to be argued with the cause upon further directions, and although it was heard as an exception, yet it in fact involved the whole equity of the case, namely, the validity of the appointment.

Bethel, Hodgson, and Hallett, in support of the exception, contended that the appointment by Edward F. Jackson, the tenant for life, was made when his infant son was of tender age, so that if such infant died the very next moment after such an exercise of the power, and there should be no other child, the father, as next of kin to his son, would be entitled to the whole fund, which would operate as a fraud upon the contingent interests of the plaintiffs: for, looking at the effect of the deed-poll, which was in reality an appointment to the father himself, the Court would not allow such a device to hold good in opposition to the manifest intention of the testator.

Stuart and several others appeared for the various defendants, but were not called upon to address the Court.

Cases cited: Chadwick v. Doleman (2 Vern. 528); Hinchinbroke v. Seymour (1 Bro. C. C. 395); Cunynghame v. Thurlow (1 Russ. & My. 436, n); Ward v. Hartpole (3 Bligh, 470); Tankerville v. Coke (Moseley, 146); M'Queen v. Farquhar (11 Ves. 478-80); Sug. on Pow. 101.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Looking at the testator's will and the deed-poll of June 6, 1839, I think that Mr. Edward J. Jackson has exercised his power of appointment in a very reasonable manner, and perfectly within the limits given him by the will. If, therefore, it was competent for the testator to intrust such an authority to the appointor, it is not within the jurisdiction of the Court to restrain such an exercise of authority. Now equality I conceive to be the highest equity known to the Court; and as the father has appointed among his children in equal shares, this Court cannot determine the appointment to be improper, upon the bare suggestion that a contingency might arise, in which the appointment would ultimately turn out for the benefit of the appointor. At any rate the Court cannot declare the appointment to have been improperly made before that contingency happens. Exception overruled.

Saturday, March 8.

BARNACLE v. NIGHTINGALE.

Will—Construction—Tenant for life—Strict settlement.

A testator, by his will, gave his estates to his son A. T. for life, and from and after his decease then to the first son of the said A. T. lawfully issuing; and for default of such first issue, then to the use and behoof of the second, third, &c. and all and every other son and sons, and the heirs of his or their bodies lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, remainder to daughters of his son A. T. and the heirs of their bodies; and for default of issue, with remainder over to J. T. another son of the testator, in like manner. Held, that the eldest son of A. T. took only a life estate.

Mr. John Taylor, the testator, of Mickleton, Gloucestershire, by his last will and testament, dated Feb. 27, 1794, devised his estates in fee-simple as follows:—"I give, devise, and bequeath all that sum of money, &c. to my son Albright Taylor for and during the term of his natural life, so that he pays all my just debts and funeral expenses and legacies hereinafter mentioned, with and out of the real and personal estate which I do hereby charge with the payment thereof; and from and after the decease of my son Albright Taylor, then to the first son of my son Albright Taylor lawfully issuing; and for default of such first issue, then to the use and behoof of the second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other son and sons, and the heirs of his or their bodies lawfully issuing; the elder always to be preferred, and to take before the younger of such sons and the heirs of his body; and for default of such issue, then to the use and behoof of all and every the daughter of the body of my son Albright Taylor, and the heirs of the body of such daughter and daughters; and for default of such issue, then I give, devise, and bequeath it to my son John Taylor, during the term of his natural life, and, after his decease, to his first son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, then to the use and behoof of the second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other son and sons he heirs of his or their bodies lawfully issuing, the elder always to be preferred and to take before the younger of such sons and the heirs of his body; and for default of such issue, then to the use and behoof of all and every daughter of the body of my son John Taylor, and the heirs of the body of such daughter and daughters; and for default of such issue, then to remain to the right male heir for ever." The testator, who died in November 1798, left his two sons, Albright Taylor and John Taylor, his only children him surviving. John Taylor, the son, died unmarried and without issue in February 1801, Albright Taylor died in August 1809, leaving several children. His eldest son, John Taylor, upon arriving at the age of twenty-one years, suffered a recovery of the property which had been so devised, and by his will gave and devised them to the plaintiffs upon trust for sale. After his decease the property was accordingly put up for sale by public auction, and bought by the defendant John Nightingale, who was the highest bidder. When, however, the abstract of title was delivered, it was objected by the defendant, among other things, that when John Taylor suffered the recovery he was only a tenant for life of the premises. The devisees in trust, therefore, filed their bill for a specific performance, when the title being referred to the Master, he reported that a good title was shewn. The defendant took exceptions to the Master's report, and the main question raised upon the argument was whether, under the will of John Taylor, the testator, in 1794, John Taylor, the son of Albright Taylor, took an estate tail or a mere life interest.

Bethel and Rudall, in support of the exception, contended that John Taylor, the grandson of the testator, took only a life-estate in the property so devised by his will.

Bagshave and Daniel, on the other side, argued that it was not the intention of the testator to exclude all the children of the eldest son of Albright Taylor, any more than the children of the other sons of Albright Taylor, for that it was clearly his intention, by the words, "and for default of such first issue," to signify in default of issue of the first son, so that an estate tail ought to be implied in the eldest son of Albright Taylor, as being in perfect accordance with the testator's meaning, who could not have had the slightest reason for making any distinction among the first and other sons of Albright Taylor. (Robinson v. Robinson, 2 Ves. 225.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR admitted that it was probably a blunder on the part of the testator, who doubtless intended to limit the estates to the heirs of the body of Albright Taylor's eldest son; but as the testator had omitted to do so, the Court could not supply that omission. Exceptions allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

February 11 and 27.

HARNETT v. M'DOUGALL.

Separate use—Anticipation—Charge—Construction.

Money settled to be paid to such persons as a married woman should appoint, but so as she should not anticipate, and on default, to her to her separate use, cannot be charged.

The property of the petitioner, Mrs. Ashton, had, on her marriage with her first husband, Mr. Harnett, been vested in trustees to pay the interest, dividends, &c. to such person as she by any writing, &c. should appoint, but so as that she should not alienate the same by any assignment, charge, or other anticipation, and in default of such appointment, to her to her separate use. Mr. Harnett having died, she married Mr. Ashton, from whom she is now living apart, differences having arisen between them. Mr. Ashton instituted a suit (Ashton v. M'Dougall) respecting his wife's settlement, which lasted three years; and the suit in which the present petition was made was instituted by the infant children of Mrs. Ashton by her first husband, and the fund was brought in in it from the other suit. During the litigation in the suit of Ashton v M'Dougall, Mrs. Ashton having no means of support, incurred debts of which she had no means of payment, except out of her separate estate. She had now agreed with Mr. Flack and Mr. Vallance, to pay 30*l*. a year for the use of her creditors; and to enable her to carry out this arrangement the present petition was presented, for an order to the accountant-general to pay that sum.

Daniel, for the petitioner.—The arrangement was made on the faith of Brown v. Bamford (11 Sim. 127). The settlement consists of a power of appointment, a restriction as to anticipation, and in default of appointment, a limitation to her separate use. The case of Brown v. Bamford is in point, and it was affirmed on appeal. [The Master of the Rolls.—Under circumstances which deprive it of all its authority.] Then Barrymore v. Ellis (8 Sim. 1), and Medley v. Horton (8 Jur. July 1844), are also authorities. The case of Moore v. Moore (1 Collyer, 54) is perhaps unfavourable. All that is asked is an order which will be an authority to the accountant-general to pay the sum agreed upon in the meantime till the question is decided. If this Court, permitting a married woman to exercise the privileges of a feme sole, makes her liable as such, it is carrying the case too far to prevent her from having the means of obtaining credit. Lord Thurlow's object was to guard a married woman from the influence of her husband, and because separation did not effect that object, he introduced the restraint on anticipation. Where a married woman has contracted debts which are necessary to her subsistence, the alienation clause does not prevent her from arranging to pay them. [The Master of the Rolls.—She can pay them out of her own hands when she receives the money,—perhaps you would not like that?] No. If you think the object can be effected, it will be most desirable. There is 140*l*. of a windfall now in hand.

The Master of the Rolls.—The only thing I can do is to look at the cases, and consider what can be done.

Daniel.—If the order was, till further order, without prejudice.

The Master of the Rolls.—No; that would be doing the very thing.

Feb. 27.—The Master of the Rolls.—In this case the trust funds are settled to the use of such persons as Mrs. Ashton shall appoint, but so as that she shall not alienate, &c.; and in default, to her to her separate use. Mrs. Ashton having become indebted, desires to charge the fund; and this petition is presented to give effect to such charge. To make the order would be in direct opposition to all the authorities, and I must refuse to do so, except so far as the fund in hand is concerned. I have read the cases bearing on the subject, and cannot make the order as asked; but take it as to the fund in hand, and any dividend since fallen due.

Tuesday, March 4.

Hobson v. Shearwood.

If a decree has been obtained in a cause, and has for a long time been prevented from being worked out by the obstinate conduct of some of the defendants, the solicitor of the plaintiff is entitled to have his costs taxed, without waiting for the end of the suit; and he is also entitled to have a stop order on funds in court to the credit of the plaintiff in the cause, if another solicitor is likely to be employed by the plaintiff.

This was a petition by Thomas William Rodgers, the plaintiff's solicitor, and it asked that his bill of costs should be taxed, and for a stop order on funds standing to the credit of the plaintiff in the cause. The suit was instituted by Jonathan Cripps Hobson, for the partition of certain property, to part of which he was entitled by marriage settlement, and a decree had been made, but it could not be prosecuted by the commissioners for partition, because Elizabeth and Helen Shearwood, defendants in the cause, obstinately persisted in refusing to deliver up the title-deeds in compliance with the directions of the Court. They were committed for the contempt, and have continued ever since and are now in prison. Mr. Rodgers being desirous of having his costs paid, delivered his bill two years ago, but it was not paid. He therefore delivered a signed bill on the 7th of December last, including the costs since incurred. This bill he now asked to be taxed, and a stop order on the fund in court.

Wood, for the petition, insisted that resistance of the defendants to the carrying out of the decree was no just reason why his client should be kept out of his costs. He was also entitled to a stop order on the fund in court to the credit of the plaintiff.

The Master of the Rolls inquired whether the solicitor was changed; and, on its being stated that though he was not he probably would be, made the order as asked.

Re William Wells.

At a meeting held to complete the transfer of a mortgage, the clerk of the solicitor employed to effect the transfer presented his master's bill of costs, and on certain items being objected to as improper charges, refused to defer the payment of the bill till his master could be seen about it. The bill was then paid under protest. Held, That this was a very special circumstance in support of a petition for taxation, and that, together with receiving payment after the objections raised and the averment of overcharges, was sufficient to justify the order.

It is no objection, however, to a bill purporting to be as against the mortgagee, that some charges are therein contained with which the mortgagor is charged.

This was the petition of Elizabeth Driver, asking taxation of the bill of costs of William Wells, of Bradford, solicitor.

Mrs. Driver, as executrix of her husband, was interested in an estate he had mortgaged. The money being called in by the mortgagee, Mary Ann Lister had agreed to take a transfer of the mortgage, and Mr. Wells was applied to by the intended transferee and the representative of the mortgagor for an abstract of title, &c. At the meeting of the parties to complete the transfer, one Hodgson, the clerk of Mr. Wells, delivered his bill of costs, amounting to 19*l*. 1s. 10d. and demanded payment thereof. Mrs. Driver and her solicitor, Mr. Robinson, objected to the bill as containing items that were extravagant and unreasonable; and among the more prominent was a charge of four guineas for an abstract, which was charged for as an entirely new abstract, though it was only a copy of an old abstract then in the possession of Mr. Wells. There was also a charge of 3s. 4d. for an attendance which had never been given, and 1*l*. for serving notices on tenants, which could have been done much cheaper through the bailiff. Hodgson refused to make any abatement, and would not even allow the payment to stand over for a few days for the purpose of an interview between Mrs. Driver and Mr. Wells on the subject. The bill was accordingly paid under protest, and the present petition was presented for taxation.

Goodere, for the petitioner.—Mr. Wells does not dispute the facts as sworn to by us, so far as regards the abstract, nor that he had an old abstract at the time. The charge for attendance is sworn to by us, and that it never was had; neither is this denied. We applied to him also to moderate the charges, but he refused. Besides, he adds a great deal for business done for the mortgagor, though the bill is headed as for business done for the mortgagee. [The Master of the Rolls.—Supposing the items otherwise proper, would it be material to put a charge against the mortgagor in a bill for business done for the mortgagee? Do you desire to strike out such a charge or only to tax it?] Only to tax.

Turner, contrà.—This bill, amounting in all to 19*l*. 1s. 10d. contains only 3s. 4d. charges for attendance, and we have no objection to rectify that; but the question is whether we are to submit to taxation. The statute says that special circumstances must after payment be shewn. The objections were made, and the party nevertheless paid the bill, and the next day presents her petition. It is not shewn how much additional expense there would have been if the old abstract had been compared with the copy of it only. Now suppose the party called upon to deliver a proper abstract of the title of the mortgagor, and he does so, it is not said how much consists of the old abstract and how much of the mortgage-deed itself. This is not enough, therefore, to send the bill to be taxed. (Smith v. Horlock, 2 My. & Cr. 495; Waters v. Taylor, Id. 526.) [The Master of the Rolls.—You seem to me to pass over the most special circumstance of all, viz. that the clerk said, when asked for his master, that he could not be seen that day, and if the bill was not paid, the transfer could not be made. That was a great opportunity for oppression. Mrs. Driver asked that it should stand over for a day or two, to see Mr. Wells; so did Mr. Robinson; but the clerk would not consent. The refusal of time is a very special circumstance.] The only refusal was, that if part of the transaction must stand over, it must all stand over; that was all.

The Master of the Rolls.—Taxation must be allowed, and that on three grounds; first, because it was impracticable to examine the bill properly; secondly, because material items were objected to at the time, so that the solicitor received payment with a knowledge that there were items objected to; and thirdly, because there are apparent overcharges. There does not appear any ground for blaming the solicitor, except as regards the items specified, for the other charges seem very moderate. If I were asked to say what difference there would be between the expense of a copy of the old abstract and a new one altogether, I should be unable to determine, because I have no means of measuring it. But the circumstances which are stated are sufficient to make out the right to taxation, viz. the demand of immediate payment, and the objection of unreasonable items. There are charges against the mortgagor introduced into the mortgagee's bill; there must be a direction that that is not an objection. Probably, in the end, the petitioner, though entitled to the order, may not find the costs of taxation falling on the person she expects, as the amount both of the bill and objectionable items is so small. The taxing master may state special circumstances and reserve costs.

Turner.—We offer to take off 3*l*.

The Master of the Rolls.—That is very reasonable. The offer was not accepted.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Thursday, Feb. 20.

7 & 8 Vict. c. 96 —Appeal from Commissioner—Habeas corpus.

A B, in custody upon an execution for damages, petitioned the Insolvent Debtors Court for his discharge, and the usual vesting order was made. Being subsequently in contempt, he petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 6, and obtained an interim order; but upon application for his final order, the Commissioner made an order, stating the proceedings, &c. in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and remanding him to his former custody. Held, that this order could not be reviewed upon a writ of habeas corpus.

Quære, as to the appeal from such an order?

This was an application by a prisoner, William Newlands, upon a writ of habeas corpus, to be discharged from custody, under the following circumstances:—The prisoner was a defendant in an action in which the plaintiff, Mr. Holmes, obtained a verdict for damages and costs. The prisoner, upon his nonpayment, was taken in execution on the 15th of February, 1844, and on the 5th of March following, he petitioned the Insolvent Debtors Court for his discharge, and the usual vesting order was made. The prisoner, after filing his schedule, made an application to be discharged upon bail, which application was, on the 3rd of May, 1844, refused, on the ground of the opposition made by him to the broker of the court going to the prisoner's house to examine the property there. The prisoner was accordingly remanded, and he, being in contempt for disobedience to the order of the Court in refusing the broker admission to his house, the Court refused to hear him again until he had submitted. Subsequently, upon the passing of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, the prisoner, not being a trader, applied to the Court of Bankruptcy under the 6th section of the Act, and obtained his discharge on an interim order for protection. On the 7th September, 1844, the prisoner applied for his final order, when the commissioner enlarged the interim order until the 4th of November following. Upon that day Mr. Holmes opposed the prisoner's application, on the ground that the insolvent was already sub judice and in contempt of the Insolvent Debtors Court; and Mr. Commissioner Fane having reserved his decision, made an order on the 11th of January, 1845, by which, after stating the circumstances, he remanded the prisoner to his former custody.

The prisoner now, in person, supported his application upon the writ of habeas corpus.

E. Cooke, for Mr. Holmes, the opposing creditor, cited Ex parte Partington (8 Jur. 1167), a decision by the Court of Queen's Bench, subsequently confirmed by the Court of Exchequer.

The prisoner, in reply.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I think it right to state now my present impression on this case, which will be my decision, unless I mention it again on Tuesday morning. I have great satisfaction in entirely agreeing with the opinion of the learned judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, that if, after an order of discharge, the Commissioner, upon examination, shall duly determine that the petitioner's case does not bring him within the benefit of the Act, it is in the Commissioner's power to remand him, that is, to restore him to a state of imprisonment in which he before stood, and out of which I hold him to have been temporarily, provisionally, and conditionally removed. The next question is, whether, looking at the order of remand made by Mr. Commissioner Fane, on the 11th of January, 1845, that order is ex facie void. It is said that the ground appearing upon the order for remand is one which the Acts of Parliament do not make a ground of remand, and that the order being founded on that reason and consideration alone, is therefore void. I am not sitting as a court of appeal from this order, and, with Lord Denman and the other judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, I abstain from expressing an opinion whether there is a court of appeal from this order. But supposing there were a court of appeal, and that I were sitting as such court, I should entertain a doubt whether such order was not erroneous; whether the ground of the order was a sufficient ground. I am not satisfied that it is insufficient, and I am not satisfied that it is sufficient. Assuming that this is not sufficient ground, the question still remains, whether upon the return to the writ of habeas corpus the order can be held to be wrong for this reason alone. Considering the real nature of this jurisdiction, and considering some cases in other branches of the law supposed to furnish an analogy, I am not satisfied that the order is not ex facie bad; on the other hand, I am not satisfied that it is ex facie bad. Eight judges have decided that whether the reason given be bad or good, the order is not without the jurisdiction, and that it is not examinable unless upon appeal, and that the hearing upon the return to a writ of habeas corpus is not a hearing upon appeal. Now as at present advised, I only doubt upon the point whether there be such an error as would be cognizable by a court of appeal; but assuming there to be that error, I must then decide that the reason assigned upon the order makes the order void: to decide that I must decide against the judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer. I have not a strong opinion that their view is not according to law, I have only that degree of doubt which must of necessity be overruled by the opinion of the judges. Upon these grounds, therefore, I am at present disposed to say that the prisoner must be remanded, and if I continue of the same opinion, that remand must be continued.

Note. — His Honour did not mention the case again.

WILDING v. RICHARDS.

This case, which is reported 4 Law T. 411, was again before the Court as to the trustee's claim by way of lien on account of his debt upon the interest conveyed to him.

Wigram and Bird, for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR. — An instrument in favour of creditors, though in form a deed of trust or agency, may have been intended to be merely an instrument, in effect, of agency—a mere direction to a person in the position of a steward or agent, or in an analogous position, as to the mode of distributing or applying the property of the person executing the deed, without an intention of creating in any other person a right against him. It is established in such a case, that if the Court is satisfied that the intention is so, the Court will give effect to the deed as a deed of agency. I apprehend that it is not rendered necessary by those authorities that every deed in favour of creditors, though no creditor is a party, is of necessity a deed of that sort. The Court in every case must be guided by the circumstances, and I entirely agree in the observations of Lord Cottenham in Bell v. Carlton. Here there is a deed of trust created in favour of creditors, but no creditor is a party to it; the deed, therefore, may belong to one class or the other. If it is alleged to belong to the first class, I accede; but if it is contended to belong to the latter, I differ. The question, then, is, to which class does it belong. In the first place, as to value, I think there is a clear antecedent debt which formed a good and sufficient valuable consideration for the subsequent security, although the transactions were distinct. Volunt[illegible] is out of the question; if it was a deed of trust, it was one for value. It is true that the trustee or agent was the solicitor of the debtor executing the deed. It is equally established that he was also the solicitor of the creditors in whose favour the deed professes to be executed, and was so at the time. The instrument does not purport to be in favour of all the creditors or all of a particular class, but only in favour of particular specified creditors, whose debts are mentioned, and their securities are also specified. Two of the securities bear even date with the deed, and I think it would be a grievous miscarriage to say that these two are to be considered without reference to the deed. If these two are to be read, they are to be read and considered together with the deed. In one of them, the trustee or agent is himself an obligor, and there is a statement in the evidence of one witness that the security was on behalf of creditors. On the whole, my conclusion is, that this was a deed of trust, and not of agency, taken by Mr. Watson on behalf of the creditors as well as the debtor, and that it was taken for valuable consideration, and therefore I agree with [illegible] Master on the last exception.

SMITH v. HURST.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13—Practice—Judgment.

A motion for a receiver of real estate by a judgment creditor, whose judgment had been registered, but who had not issued a writ of elegit, refused on the ground of the judgment's not having been entered up a year previous to the motion being made.

Whether a motion could be made to restrain the parting with the legal estate, or the cutting down of timber, although the judgment had not been entered up a year previous to the motion, quære?

This was a motion for a receiver, &c. made on behalf of the plaintiff, under the following circumstances. On the 28th of Nov. 1844 an action was commenced by the plaintiffs against the defendant, Mr. Hurst, and on the 22nd January, 1845, judgment was obtained, and the writ issued and lodged with the sheriff. Padwick, however, another of the defendants, was in possession of the real and personal property, which it was desired to make available for this judgment, and the sheriff's officer was unable to gain admittance to the house. Padwick, who was also a creditor of Hurst's, claimed under a deed dated in October 1844, and the defendants, in their answer, alleged it to be a conveyance and assignment of the real and personal property of Hurst for the benefit of creditors, but the plaintiffs were unable to obtain any further information concerning it.

Wigram and R. Palmer contended that the deed was invalid as against the plaintiffs, and cited Garrod v. Lord Lauderdale, and Wallwyn v. Coutts.

Simpkinson and John Evans, for the defendant Padwick, contended that as to the real estate the plaintiffs were precluded by the 13th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, from proceeding in equity upon their judgment until a year after the judgment had been entered up. They could not proceed under the old law without having a writ of elegit.

Swanston and Goodeve, for the defendant Hurst.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I shall assist the plaintiffs as far as I can as to the personal estate. As to the real estate, the argument turns upon the meaning of the word "proceed" in the 13th section of the Act.

Wigram, in reply, referred to the 11th section of the Act.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am of opinion that I cannot interfere under the law independent of the Act of Parliament which has been mentioned, as there has been no writ of elegit issued. With regard to the Act of Parliament, this judgment not being a year old, by reason of the 13th clause, construing it as well as I can, I am of opinion that I cannot appoint a receiver. Whether the Court could proceed by way of injunction to restrain the parting with the legal estate or cutting down the timber, I avoid giving any opinion, which under the circumstances of this case I may properly do. With regard to the other property, it is in a different position. The scire facias issued binds the property. The deed is stated in such a manner, and with such circumstances, as to render it probable that it is rather a deed of agency than a deed of trust. That must be distinctly stated, and the personal estate must be placed in the hands of a receiver, or otherwise as may be thought most advisable for the protection of the property.

SUTHERLAND v. COOKE.

Tenant for life—Conversion—Interest.

Where no direction is given by a testator for the conversion of his property, or where from innocent mistake conversion has not been made, the rule is that the tenant for life is entitled to interest at four per cent.

In this case, which is reported 4 Law T. 192, a motion was made to vary the minutes as to the rate of interest, &c.

Whitmarsh, Whitmarsh, jun. K. Parker, Craig, and Giffard, for the several parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that where no direction was given as to conversion, and where from innocent mistake conversion had not been made, his impression was, that it was competent to the Court to allow the tenant for life four per cent.; that was in accordance with Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, and the other cases. That was the rule, the other cases were exceptions.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Wednesday, April 9.

(Before Mr. Baron ROLFE.)

REG. v. CONNOR.

Habeas corpus—Coroner.

Shortly after Mr. Baron Rolfe came to chambers, Mr. Wakley, M.P. the coroner for Middlesex, went before his lordship for the purpose of applying for a habeas corpus to be directed to the Sheriffs and the Governor of Newgate to bring up the body of Joseph Connor, who stands committed for the murder of Mary Brothers, in St. Giles's. It will be recollected that at the adjourned inquest, held on Saturday, both the coroner and jury refused to proceed with the inquiry unless the prisoner was before them, and the coroner then declared his determination to apply for a habeas.

The coroner, in pursuance of that promise, now made the application, and contended that it was essential for the ends of justice, whenever an individual stood charged with the crime of murder, that he should be brought before the coroner; not only ought he to be allowed to hear the evidence which was adduced against him, but it was essential that he should be identified, for it might happen that the evidence given might in reality refer to another person, and thus at the trial the proceedings might be rendered nugatory.

The learned JUDGE observed, that he was not aware that a habeas corpus had ever been granted in such a case. From what had occurred, it appeared that a person had been examined before a magistrate on a charge of murder, and upon the evidence adduced he had been committed for trial, and the authorities were bound to keep him in safe custody until a gaol delivery took place. He (Mr. Baron Rolfe) was satisfied that the judges had no power to grant a habeas, and it was right they should not, for it would be impossible to say what abuse of power might be made if a habeas should be granted. Persons in custody for very serious offences might succeed in escaping from justice if they could be brought out of prison on a writ of habeas corpus.

The Coroner then contended, that the accused ought to be brought before the coroner's court, and observed, in that opinion the Secretary of State fully concurred.

The learned JUDGE remarked, that if the prisoner had been improperly committed, then some such application might be made, but nothing of that sort was attempted to be shewn. The prisoner had been examined, and the evidence adduced against him in his presence was of that nature as to justify his committal. Looking at the whole of the case, he felt bound to refuse the application.

Mr. Wakley then retired.

The jury will consequently have to come to a verdict in the absence of the accused.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Friday, April 4.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re RICHARD DUNN.

An insolvent in custody on a judgment in an action of trespass is not entitled to his discharge upon an application made previously to his filing his petition for his interim order.

The insolvent came up in custody from the Queen's Prison, in which he had been confined for nearly four years, upon a judgment debt for "costs," brought by a Mr. Alexander, for 80*l*. His application was to be released from custody, as a preliminary step to his obtaining his interim order.

Bailey, Sir J. attended as counsel to oppose the application.

Mr. Dunn contended that his case came within the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 6, and also within the previous Act of 5 & 6 Vict. both Acts having for their object the release of all persons in custody for debt, provided that they had so been, before application for release from "all maunner of process," for twelve months preceding, unless such applicant was in custody for the excepted cases of—1, breaches of the revenue; 2, libel; 3, seduction; 4, criminal conversation; and 5, malicious arrest. Now he was not in custody for any of these excepted cases, and under the well-known rule of exceptio probat regulam, he considered himself to be entitled to his immediate discharge from custody, either in law or equity, and that the judgment had only been obtained by bad and improper practices. He was determined to bring a writ of error for its reversal, but while he was detained in custody he was prevented from effectually proceeding with it. He had no other opposing creditor but Mr. Alexander. The whole amount of his debts was 590*l*. while he had 580*l*. due to him; but the truth was that he felt himself to be an oppressed, injured, and an outraged man, and one from whom Mr. Alexander would consent to take nothing less than his "pound of flesh."

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.—There is a judgment against you, and I am not, upon this application, to inquire into its validity.

Bailey, Sir J.—A writ of error, your honour, has been brought by Mr. Dunn, but it has some time since been nonpross'd.

Mr. Dunn urged that the opposing party had no locus standi in this court, as, although he had obtained a judgment, it was the practice in bankruptcy to inquire into the grounds upon which such judgment had been obtained.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.—I have the certificate of your gaoler that you are in custody, and your present application is not for your interim order, but that you should be discharged from custody before you file your petition for such interim order, and with notice to your detaining creditor, in order to give him the right of opposing you if he should so think proper. Under the Small Debts Act, 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, where parties had been imprisoned for twelve months for debt under 20*l*. they could successfully apply for their release; and several of the provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. are enacted in the same spirit; but you are not in custody upon a judgment for "debt," and that makes a most material difference.

Bailey, Sir J. contended that the applicant did not come within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict. as he was not in custody for debt, but for a false and malicious arrest, which excluded him from the benefit otherwise conferred under that Act.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD, having conferred with Commissioners Fonblanque and Fane, said, it was their united opinion that the insolvent was not entitled to his discharge from custody upon an application made previously to his filing his petition for his interim order. Here Mr. Dunn was in custody, not for debt but on action of trespass, and hence the benefit of the indulgence granted by the 7 & 8 Vict. could not be extended to him. Upon application for his final order the larger question could be opened, and for that purpose he would name an early day, when he could again apply to the Court.

Ecclesiastical Courts.

COURT.

(Before Sir H. Jenner Fust.)

The office of the Judge promoted by Faulkner v. Litchfield and Stearn.

The Court will not confirm a faculty for the erection of a stone altar and a credence-table in a parish church, the same not being a communion-table according to the canons and the statutes.

JUDGMENT.

Sir H. J. Fust said this was an appeal from a decree of the Archdeaconry of Ely, made in favour of the churchwardens of the church of the Holy Sepulchre of Cambridge, who had obtained a faculty to repair the fabric. A grant was also extended to such other repairs as were not previously included. The Rev. Mr. Faulkner was not a party to the second faculty. On the contrary he opposed it, and the question which had arisen for the consideration of the Court was between the churchwardens and the Rev. Mr. Faulkner. The first faculty was granted on the 25th February, 1842, to "repair the fabric there, if the church were furnished with a table, in good and substantial repair, standing in the chancel of the said church, well suited and commonly used therein." When notice was given by the churchwardens of the intended re-opening of the church for divine service, and the Rev. Mr. Faulkner had seen that a stone communion-table and a stone credence-table had been erected, he declared his intention of opposing a second faculty for approving of what had been done by the churchwardens, as far as respected the stone table and credence-table. On the 29th February last year a vestry meeting was called, and a report made of what had been done under the faculty. On that day the minister took the chair, and a resolution was proposed, "That the report should be adopted; that the works had the full sanction and approval of the meeting, and that the churchwardens take measures to complete the works relative to the restoration of the church." A further resolution was proposed, returning thanks to the Camden Society, and to the Rev. Archdeacon Thorpe, for their services in restoring the church. The minister alone objected to the resolutions, and left the chair. On the 25th of March last year a further faculty was sought to confirm what had been done, as well as the report and minutes, and another vestry was called for such purposes, as well as to receive the report. Now, that faculty was opposed by the minister, otherwise the ordinary would have granted it. Mr. Faulkner gave an appearance by his proctor to oppose the confirmation of the first faculty, and the churchwardens appeared on the 25th of July before the archdeacon of the chancellor of the diocese of Ely. The result was, after hearing counsel, that a decree was directed to issue for the second faculty. From that decree a notice of an appeal was immediately given, and the case regularly argued the last term in this court. The case is somewhat a novel one, and much attention has been created in the public mind with respect to the result. The Court took time to consider the cases cited, as well as its decision. And here the Court must return its thanks to the learned civilians for the lists of cases and information received from the practitioners of the court bearing upon the subject. The intimation that the Court was desirous of such information appeared in the public prints, and it appears to have been thought that the invitation was a general one. He (the learned judge) had in consequence received many letters, some signed by name and others anonymously. The Court would refer to some of them, which were good; but among them was a copy of a sermon delivered by a clergyman, with the title of "The Restoration of Churches is the Restoration of Popery." The party who sent this forgot his duty to the Court in its administration of justice. This sermon was sent anonymously, and contained an extract from a newspaper, which the judge read and commented upon, as being in the same style. It was extremely improper that any such communication should be addressed to the Court. Its judgment could not be warped by such communications—rather the reverse. The Court had received a letter from the Rev. Mr. Faulkner, but not as the judge of this court, but as the master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, soliciting subscriptions to pay the heavy expenses that he had incurred in carrying on the present proceedings. The Court did not think that there was on the part of Mr. Faulkner, in sending the circular, any thing tending to disrespect, or wish to forestal its opinion. The question the Court had to decide was between the churchwardens and the clergyman. With the Camden Society the Court had nothing whatever to do, except as far as regarded the works complained of, and which were carried on by voluntary subscriptions. All the works have had full approbation, with the exception of the stone altar and the credence-table. It was stated that these were innovations in the practice of the Reformed Church, for the purposes of idolatrous and heretical purposes in Popery. With the motives of the parties the Court had nothing whatever to do—it could look only to the case as submitted to it by the churchwardens and the Rev. Mr. Faulkner, without considering the motives of the Camden Society. The question to be decided was simply as to the construction to be placed on the rubric and the canons, as applied to the facts, and how the 13 & 14 Charles 2, the Act of Uniformity, and the canon of 1603, would bear upon the points raised. The Court would not go out of its way to meet particular motives, as the simple question was, as stated in the argument, Was this, or was it not, a communion-table, according to the canons and the statutes? If it was, the Court could not refuse to issue a confirmatory faculty; the Court would be bound to do so. If it was not, the Court could not confirm the faculty; indeed it would be useless to issue a faculty at all. If the canon meant that the communion-table must be of wood, and moveable, such a one as that erected in this church of the Holy Sepulchre at Cambridge could not be a legal one, within the meaning of the statutes. The Court gave credit to the churchwardens for the way in which they had acted, as also to the Rev. Mr. Faulkner for having refused to perform service, on the ground that the introduction of the stone altar and the credence-table was repugnant to the laws and canons ecclesiastic, as established in this country, and as being contrary to the tenets of the Protestant Reformed Church. The Rev. Mr. Faulkner was warranted in taking the decision of this Court upon the questions raised. What were the facts? Mr. Faulkner sets forth, "That at the time alleged, the said church, previously to the time when a faculty was obtained to repair the fabric thereof, was furnished with a table in good and substantial repair, standing in the chancel of the said church, well suited, and commonly used therein for the celebration of the Lord's Supper, and of a kind such as are generally used for that purpose in all churches of and belonging to the Established Church in this country. That in the course of repairing the fabric of the said church, but without the sanction, as he expressly alleged, of the said faculty, and without the previous knowledge and consent or approval of his said party, the vicar of the said parish church, a stone altar, or altar-table, and credence-table, such as are erected and used for idolatrous and heretical purposes in Popish churches, have been erected and set up in the chancel of the said church, in lieu of the said Lord's table of and belonging to the said church, and previously used for the celebration of the Lord's Supper thereon; the said stone altar being moreover cemented to the wall of the said chancel, and being, from its form and great weight, incapable of being moved to any other part of the said chancel or church, if required to be so at any time hereafter by proper ecclesiastical authority; and he humbly submitted that the said erection and fixing of the same is contrary, as well to the laws, canons, and constitutions of the Reformed Protestant Church, as by law established in this country, as to the rubrical directions contained and set forth in the Book of Common Prayer, published by the authority of the same; and repugnant moreover to the pure and apostolical doctrines maintained and taught by the said Church, the said article of furniture called a credence-table being, as he expressly alleged, an article of church furniture not recognized by the rubric or canons of the said Church; which also enjoin that in every church there shall be provided a decent and moveable table for the celebration of the Lord's Supper thereon, and not an altar of stone or an altar-table of stone such as has been erected in the said church, and cemented to the chancel-wall thereof. Wherefore he prayed the worshipful the judge to reject the prayer of the said Edward Litchfield and Thomas Stearn for the confirmation of the said faculty, so far as the said stone altar and credence-table are concerned, to monish them moreover to take down and remove the same, as having been wrongfully and unlawfully set up, and to provide the said church with a decent communion-table conformably to the uses and custom of the Established Church, and to condemn them in the costs of this suit." In reply, the churchwardens have averred, "that prior to the attainment of the faculty (to which they crave leave to refer, and to the minute of vestry therein recited), a table formed of wood, commonly used for the celebration of the Lord's Supper, stood in the chancel of the said church (of which the Rev. Richard Rowland Faulkner is not, as alleged, vicar, but perpetual curate); but they deny, that in lieu of the said table a stone altar or altar-table and credence-table, such as are erected and used for idolatrous and heretical purposes in Popish countries, have been placed in the said chancel; it being essential, in accordance with such restoration, and to preserve the uniformity of the internal arrangements of the said church, that a new communion-table, corresponding with such arrangements, should be provided; and from the rare architectural style of the said church, and the interest it excited among the admirers of ancient ecclesiastical architecture, and from the desire for the preservation, as far as practicable, of the character and harmony of the edifice, and the carrying out of the terms of the before-mentioned faculty, a private contributor to the funds for the restoration of the said church presented, as a free gift to the said parish, a new stone communion-table, corresponding in design with the interior arrangements of the said church, and also a table (usually termed a credence-table) for the reception of the bread and wine about to be used in the celebration of the Holy Communion prior to the consecration of the same, and such gifts were thankfully accepted by the churchwardens and parishioners, and the said tables were thereupon (in accordance with the ancient design of the fabric) placed in the said chancel; but they, the said churchwardens, deny that such tables were placed in the said chancel without the sanction of the said faculty, or without the previous knowledge of the said perpetual curate (whose consent and approval they deny to be necessary)." The learned judge referred to the contents of the other remaining pleas, but no detail of them is necessary here except to state that the rev. gentleman did protest against the proceedings of the churchwardens, and that the Round Church was consecrated in 850, and that in 1550 the altar was removed. The churchwardens had invited inspection by competent authorities, as they alleged that the erection of the stone table was not cemented to the walls of the chancel of the church. It was, however, sworn by Messrs. Clayton, stonemasons, that the three upright stones and the slab were cemented to the wall. These affidavits were made on the 12th of June, 1844. There may (the learned judge said) have been some alteration made since; but it would make no difference if the cement to the uprights had been removed. If, however, the table is imbedded in concrete, it made no difference, and the course of proceeding by removing the adhesion was not exactly fair to the Court. Under the Popish law it was imperative that the altar should be fixed to the wall of the chancel. Looking to the plan at first, there did not appear to be any intention of raising such an erection as that now formed, and therefore, as Mr. Faulkner said, it was an afterthought, in consequence of a liberal offer by a party to defray the expense of an altar and credence table more in conformity with the renovated appearance of the church. That the offer was made to the churchwardens from the purest motives the Court could not doubt, and the churchwardens, in accepting the offer, were equally perhaps blameless in so doing. The old communion-table had, it appears, been broken up; but the question came back to this point: Was the erection of a stone communion-table, not moveable, and a credence-table, in conformity with the Act of Parliament and the Rubrics? The conduct of the individuals has nothing to do with the judgment of the question, which is one of principle, and by which all the churches of the kingdom might be affected. The great principle by which the Court must be guided would be the Acts establishing uniformity in the church service. It had been cited that there were three or more ancient churches of this country with similar erections. The Temple Church, recently renovated, had had no such alteration like that in the church of the Holy Sepulchre, at Cambridge. But the Court would dismiss this part of the case, as far as respects other churches; neither could it consider a point raised in argument, that the expenses in this case would be a bar to any such erections as the present in future. The Court must consider that its decision in this case, if confirmatory of the faculty, might hereafter affect similar erections in all the churches of the country. The Court must decide the question by the construction of the rubrics, the canons, and the Act of Uniformity, according to the general and popular interpretation of the Acts of Parliament, which had been upheld, with a slight interval, since the earliest period of the Reformation. What, then, was the difference between an altar and a communion-table? What were the fittings up of the church before the Reformation? All knew that the Church of Rome held the doctrine of transubstantiation. It was upon this point that the two churches most materially differed from each other, and that the Reformed Church changed the altars fixed of stone, where sacrifices were made by the Roman Catholics, to a table. Even in cases where the altars had been removed, they had to be fresh consecrated by the Catholic bishops before the sacrifices of their religion could again be performed upon them. It was not necessary that the Court should come to a conclusion that an erection must be immoveable to constitute an altar. All it had to decide was, if this was, or was not, a communion-table according to the rubric? Since the Reformation, what had been the changes made in these tables? In the arguments reference had been made to Cardinal Bona, who gave the origin of altars from the earliest period. This authority traced their existence to the most remote times—that they were consecrated for offerings so early as 509. There were some of wood as well as of stone; but the doctrine of transubstantiation was not then general—indeed, not till the ninth or perhaps the tenth century. Moveable altars were only used while the people were on journeys; they were the exception to the general rule that altars should be fixed and immoveable, as laid down by the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church. Another author in the same Church gives the mode in which the altars were to be built. It was on the authority of these two eminent writers that the Court, with others, came to the conclusion that the altars were fixed and of stone. It was in consequence of the death of the martyrs, that the form of a tomb, open in front, was first used for sacrifices, and such continued to be the case up to the time of the Reformation, when all those structures were removed, so that superstitious ideas might no longer exist in the minds of the people, such as the doctrine of transubstantiation, &c. This was done at the time of Henry VIII. It was true that mass continued to be performed till the 2nd or 3rd of Edward VI. or about the year 1549. The word "altar" continued to be made use of in the Prayer Book long after. In the second Prayer Book of Edward VI. a very great alteration was made. The words "holy mass" were left out, and the "holy communion" substituted. In 1552, the communion-table stood either in the body of the church or in the chancel. Before that period it was fixed and immoveable. In the book of 1552, the priest was ordered to stand by the side of the table. In the earlier Prayer Books he was directed to stand in front of the "altar." Then, again, the bread used at the sacrament by the later books was to be the same "as were usually eaten with meats." This threw a very important light on the question the Court had to decide, as in the second Prayer Book the word "table" is used for that of altar. A long time had elapsed, it is true, before the alteration was made—from 1549 to 1552; but an order had been issued to destroy altars, images, &c. In 1555, Bishop Ridley, in his visit to his diocese, issued an admonition, in which the "Lord's Board" was used, instead of the "altar." The Court referred to the "Documentary Annals," and to many other ancient and modern authorities, as strengthening him in the opinion that the communion-table must be of wood, and moveable. In 1550, an order in council was sent to every bishop to pluck down every altar, and "that a 'table' be set up for the performance of the service of the blessed communion," so as to remove from the minds of the people superstitious ideas. From 1550 to the present time, with a short interval, the table had been used instead of the altar. This alteration by Edward VI. was most important to be borne in mind, as assisting the Court in coming to a decision on the present suit. The table must be a moveable one. The Court held this to be a point most perfectly established. From the time of Edward VI., the reign of Philip and Mary excepted, the altars had been removed. In 1558, Queen Elizabeth gave orders for the removal of the altars raised in the reign of Mary, on the ground that they encouraged superstitions. Something must have been intended by the issuing of those orders to remove those altars. In 1559 there was a further order issued by Queen Elizabeth upon the same subject, and for substituting the holy communion for the high mass, as directed by Edward VI. In the following year, Queen Elizabeth being informed that there were still some altars up, ordered that one uniform practice should exist in removing them. The Court said, it should be remarked that, in the 1st of Mary, the altars were directed to be re-erected. It was quite clear, therefore, what was intended by the 2nd of Elizabeth. By the order in council issued by Queen Elizabeth, all ministers were enjoined not to have the altars pulled down without their consent, as the rabble had broken in some of the churches and destroyed them. But when removed, it was charged, "Let the 'holy table' be decently laid and placed where the altar formerly stood." The interpretation of the "Injunctions" drawn up by the archbishops and bishops fully warranted the Court in the opinion that the communion-table must be a moveable one, and not one of stone. In 1569, Archbishop Parker issued to the clergy inquiries, such as "Have you a decent table?" "Has the altar been taken down?" according to the Queen's injunctions? The Court was seeking to establish that the altar was abolished and wooden tables substituted. Whether this was or was not by Act of Parliament was not the question. In the State Trials in Charles the First's time the Court saw grounds, from the expressions of Bishop Laud, for its decision. In 1571 Archbishop Pringle issued injunctions that all altars should be pulled down. In 1576 it was enjoined on the clergy to take down the altars to the very foundations, and that a decent "table" should be provided for the performance of the holy communion. The "Injunctions" of the 2nd of Queen Elizabeth were followed up by a visitation from two commissioners referred to in Stripe's Reports in 1559, and soon after which the altars and the images were pulled down in St. Paul's and in Westminster Abbey, and "decent tables" provided. It was argued that Queen Elizabeth had kept the image of our Saviour in her chamber. The Court must look to her public, not her private acts. In 1571 there were certain canons and constitutions ecclesiastic issued to which the attention must be directed—at least the most important one. The canon 82 is now in force, and it as follows:—It is headed "A Decent Communion Table in every Church." "Whereas we have no doubt but that in all churches within the realms of England convenient and decent tables are provided and placed for the celebration of the holy communion &c." (The remainder need not be quoted, as it does not immediately apply to the question at issue.) The Court commented upon the contents of the canon and upon the mode in which the sacrament, &c. was performed, as supporting him in the decision of the case. The Court now approached a period which is considered of the greatest importance, the reign of Charles I. when it was well known a faction existed in the two parties of the Church, which were called the High and Low Church, and when the most painful events occurred. Lord Clarendon, in his History p. 95, and a few following pages, refers to the subject of the communion-table. This History was printed 1702, at Oxford, and the Court cited from the octavo volume. The extract stated that when Archbishop Laud became acquainted of the want of care by the clergy of the churches, as well as by the churchwardens, he expressed a strong desire to cleanse them, in aided by the bishops (and a most praiseworthy object it was). Bishop Abbott was of the low party. On the removal of the communion-table (the History states) into the chancel of the church of his diocese, it was found in a very bad condition, and a new one ordered, as well as books. The learned judge remarked that he had quoted the passage from Lord Clarendon's History, to shew that the table was clearly a moveable one; and there were other authorities which fully confirmed this fact—viz. from a pamphlet called "The Holy Table a name and thing," &c. A great number of discussions took place about this time respecting the mode in which the service ought to be performed; but in all the publications the word "table" was used, and that it was moveable. The Bishop of Lincoln, in a letter he wrote, gave directions where ministers should stand at the "table." In another letter on the table, it is enjoined by the bishop that the "table" should be "a fair joined table," pursuant to the 82nd canon. All these facts led to the decision the Court ought to come to. The bishop enjoined to one of his clergymen that he should not set a stone altar at his own expense; and, also, where the clergy should stand at the side of the "table." Upon another occasion he stated "an altar was to sacrifice upon, but a table was to eat upon." Again that the "table" should be placed where the morning and evening prayers are read The Court had read this letter to a greater extent than it would have done, but that it was rather difficult to be got. From a communication the Court had received, it had reason to believe that the original of this letter of the Bishop of Lincoln was to be found in MS. in the British Museum. It was published in a tract some time after the discussion took place in 1637. The point in the letter turned on the question of the removal of the table, and it shewed further that the "Injunctions" issued so many years previously had been complied with. This letter was replied to in the same year as to the right position the table should be placed in, as well as another by Dr. Pocklington; others in 1641, &c. Not a question was raised in the many pamphlets which touched the question as to what the table should be composed of, but as to the place in which it should stand. The Court was, therefore, confirmed in the view it must take of the question. There were churches, however, in which altars existed of stone. There was no alteration made in the Prayer Book till the time of the Reformation. In the course of the arguments, the State Trials, 1st edit. p. 393, had been adverted to. In 1632, the Recorder of Salisbury was tried for damaging the church, and in the course of the proceedings Bishop Laud stated, that the churchwardens should obtain "a fair joined" table for the celebration of the service of the communion. In the 13th Charles I. a trial took place for innovations in the performance of divine service, when Bishop Laud had said that the tables had, ever since the Reformation, stood at the upper head of the chancel and altarwise. There cannot be a doubt that it was intended by the "Injunctions" that the table should be moveable. In the year 1633 there was a great dispute in the parish of Crayford as to where was the most proper place in which the communion-table should stand, and it was referred to Bishop Laud, and he decided it should be placed at the upper head of the chancel. In 1633 an order in council was issued to give directions to the parish of St. Gregory; it was stated that it was in the discretion of the minister to place the table, and "how long" it might so remain. The Court cited this order in council and other learned authorities on this part of the case. The arguments all appear in favour of the adherence to the "Injunctions of Edward VI. confirmed by Elizabeth, &c." Could this altar be considered a table? It was the very object of the "Injunctions" to do away with all superstitious forms. The table must be of wood, and a moveable one. Then what was the next question? Did the rubric of 1662 admit of any variation? The word altar does not appear in the rubric or in the text-books. In the performance of the service according to the rubric, a table must be provided with a fair linen cloth, to stand in the body of the church, or in the chancel of the church. Was it the intention of Charles II. to make any variation? In the sacramental service, to take away all superstitions, it was ordered that the bread to be used should be the same as that which is usually eaten. There was no intention in any way to revive superstitious feelings by the mode in which the sacrament was taken by the "Injunctions." An ingenious argument had been addressed to the Court, that any thing on which a plate stood was a table, and that a stone, resting as the model before the Court did, must be a table. The Court did not hold the model to be a table in the meaning of the "Injunctions," which have for so long a period been complied with. After referring to the various minor points brought forward in argument, the Court remarked that the learned civilian who advised the churchwardens in the suit, knew well that they could not have asked for a faculty to erect an altar. He well knew what the fate of such an application would have been. What the ornaments of a church should be is explicitly stated. It was asked why stone fonts were used, and stone tables disallowed? The reason was that superstitions were engendered and perpetuated by using stone altars, while the same remark did not apply to a stone font. Then as to the expenses of such a suit as this—that they will be so great as to prevent such suits for the future. The Court was not satisfied upon this point, as there may be other equally liberal men as the party who had advanced the means for erecting the altar and credence-table in this case. The Court could not possbly hold this to be a communion-table, and it must, most certainly, be fully satisfied that it was so before it could grant a faculty confirming the decision of the court below respecting it. The learned judge refused to allow the faculty to issue. The next point was as to the credence-table. The Court had not had any information to be depended upon as to the period when credence-tables were introduced into churches. They were in use at the time of Bishop Laud, as he mentions having used them. According to a German authority, they are said to have been used as a sort of sideboard, or buffet, to receive the elements of the service before its performance. In the Greek and Latin churches they were used as tables of preparation. Most authors disagree as to where the credence-table ought to be placed. The ancient fathers held that there ought to be but one table used in the service. The learned judge cited numerous authorities from the old Greek and Latin writers, as well as commentaries upon them, upon this branch of the subject. There was a credence-table in a church consecrated by the Bishop of Bangor in 1843; of course, therefore, of recent erection. There was also another in a church consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Court might have done so itself; but if so it must take blame for the act. But, after mature consideration, the Court must hold that the credence-table must follow the stone table. This is the first time the Court has been called upon to decide if such an erection as this was a communion-table, and the Court must refuse to let the faculty go, and the churchwardens must be left to act for themselves. The table was similar to an altar for sacrifice, precisely like that mentioned by Bona, upon which the prayers were said for the martyrs. The Court is bound to pronounce for the appeal. The Court would, if possible, aid the churchwardens by directing faculty to go, subject to some alterations. There was another question to decide, namely—that as to costs. The archdeacon was first put in motion, and the Rev. Mr. Faulkner had appealed, and had succeeded in his appeal. The Court was, therefore, bound to pronounce that Mr. Faulkner was entitled to his costs.

(Before Mr. Justice Coleridge.)

Reg. v. Mary Buncombe.

Husband and wife—Robbery.

Quære, can a femme covert be convicted of robbery if her husband were present at the committing of the crime?

Prisoner was indicted for assaulting and robbing W. Boley.

Marshman stated the case for the prosecution, from which it appeared that the offence was committed by the prisoner in the presence of her husband, who had absconded.

Coleridge, J.—Can you proceed with this case? If the offence was committed in the presence of her husband, how can she be liable?

Marshman contended that a wife is liable for an offence committed in the presence of her husband where violence is used: citing the following passage from Russell on Crimes, vol. 1, p. 16, in reference to a femme covert. "And if she commit a theft of her own voluntary act, or by the bare command of her husband, or be guilty of treason, murder, or robbery in company with or by coercion of her husband, she ... le as if she were sole."

Coleridge, J.—On such an authority the case must proceed. But if the prisoner be convicted, I shall reserve the point for the consideration of the Judges.

The prisoner, however, was found Not Guilty.

Taunton, Thursday, April 3.

Reg. v. Eli Andrews and George Payne.

Evidence—Accomplice.

The confirmation of the evidence of an accomplice against one of two prisoners jointly indicted is sufficient. Sed quære?

The Court has no right to withdraw the evidence of an accomplice, even though unconfirmed, from the consideration of the jury.

The prisoners were indicted for burglary.

The facts were proved by an accomplice. Having detailed the manner in which the entry had been made, and the property carried off, he proved that the prisoners first took the goods to the house of Andrews, where they divided the spoil; Payne then carried his share to his own house, and hid it in an outhouse.

The confirmatory evidence against Andrews was, that he was seen in a public-house about seven o'clock with the prisoner Payne, the accomplice, and others; as against Payne, that some of the goods were found in his house.

Edwards, for the prisoners, submitted that the evidence of the accomplice as against Andrews was not confirmed in some material particular, shewing his connection with the transaction.

Coleridge, J.—I do not think it necessary that there should be a confirmation as to each of the prisoners; a confirmation as to one would be sufficient.

Edwards cited Rex v. Willes (2 Russell on Crimes, 964), and other cases.

Coleridge, J.—It is a question for the jury. I think it right to say that in my opinion the necessity for the confirmation of an accomplice has been stated too strongly in some of the cases. I do not wish it to be understood that I am overruling any of the decided cases; but it appears to me that even the testimony of an accomplice, though entirely unconfirmed, must go to the jury, accompanied, of course, by such recommendations as the judge in such case would feel it his duty to make. If a witness be admissible at all, I have no right to withdraw his testimony from the consideration of the jury, and the law having admitted the evidence of an accomplice, it is the province of the jury to determine its value.

Hadow, for the prosecution.

Edwards, for the prisoner. Guilty.

Exeter, Saturday, March 22.

(Before Mr. Justice Erle.)

Reg. v. John Haydon.

Murder by poison.

The term "deadly poison" in an indictment for murder need not be strictly proved. The word "deadly" is surplusage, and it will be sufficient to shew that the substance administered is capable of destroying life, without shewing it to be what is usually called "deadly."

The prisoner was indicted for the murder of an infant child, by administering to her a certain deadly poison, called spirit of hartshorn, with intent, &c. well knowing the said spirits of hartshorn to be a deadly poison.

It was proved by the medical men and the apothecary, that spirits of hartshorn was not sold in the shops as a poison, nor was it treated of as a poison in medical books. They should certainly not term it a deadly poison; and it was further proved that it was commonly bought and taken by the people of the neighbourhood for bodily ailments.

Cox, for the prisoner, submitted that spirits of hartshorn was not a deadly poison, and therefore that the evidence did not sustain the indictment, which charged not only that it was a deadly poison, but that the prisoner knew it to be a deadly poison. He cited from Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, p. 4, a case which occurred on the Norfolk Spring Circuit, in 1836, in which the point was raised, but not decided. He contended that the term deadly must have some definite meaning. It could not be construed to apply to every thing that, taken in excess, would destroy life. For instance, new bread, eaten largely, in some circumstances would produce death, but it could not be described as a deadly poison. What, then, was meant by the term? He would suggest that it was applicable only to those substances which are poisons in the common understanding of the term, and which by apothecaries and medical men would be described as such.

Erle, J.—The word "deadly" appears to me to be used merely in pursuance of an ancient form, and not to be essential to the validity of the indictment. It would be sufficient to describe it simply as a poison, and under that term would fall any thing calculated to destroy life. Substances harmless in themselves might become poisons by the time or manner of their administration. This seems to me the view most accordant with common sense, and therefore I hold this indictment to be good, even though it describes spirit of hartshorn as a deadly poison.

Not guilty.

Tyrrell and Kekewich for the prosecution.

CROWN SIDE.

(Before the Honourable Mr. Justice Jackson.)

Reg. v. O'Brien.

The testimony of a deaf and dumb person, who although intelligent and capable of communicating and receiving information by signs, yet cannot be made to understand clearly the nature and obligation of an oath—Held, to be inadmissible.

The prisoner was indicted for the murder of Thomas Mac Namara, by striking him a blow upon the back of the head, of which he died. The evidence, which was chiefly of a circumstantial nature, went to shew that the prisoner struck the deceased a blow upon the head with a spade, while they were both in a turf-bog, in which several persons were at the time occupied in drawing turf.

Catharine Heany, one of the witnesses for the Crown, deposed to having seen the prisoner and the deceased together upon the day named in the indictment on the bog, the prisoner having a spade in his hand; that she then lost sight of them behind a stack of turf for a short time, when she saw the prisoner going away towards his house with the spade in his hand, and shortly after she perceived MacNamara lying dead and bleeding from a wound in his head. The witness also stated, that her sister was with her both at the time she saw the prisoner and MacNamara together, and also when she afterwards saw his dead body.

It was then proposed by the Crown to examine Bridget Heany, who, it appeared, was deaf and dumb, and had been so from an early period of her life; Catharine Heany stated that her sister could make herself understood by signs, and that she (Catharine) understood them, and could make her understand her questions, and that she (Bridget) would speak the truth. That she had ideas of religion, and that she used to attend the duties of the Roman Catholic religion, and that the former priest of her parish could understand her and communicate with her by signs. Catharine Heany was then directed to administer to her sister the oath, which was repeated by the Clerk of the Crown; upon which she made several very curious signs to the deaf and dumb witness, not, however, employing the well-known finger alphabet by which deaf and dumb persons are able to hold conversation.

Coppinger, for the prisoner, desired to know what was the precise meaning of the signs and gestures used.

Catharine Heany stated, that they meant that if the witness did not tell the truth "the priest would kill her," and she stated that she had no doubt that the witness would tell the truth; but it appeared that the precise terms and nature of the oath could not be conveyed to the witness, upon which,

Coppinger, under these circumstances, objected to her testimony being received; it did not appear that the witness could clearly understand the nature of an oath.

Jackson, J.—The counsel for the Crown have done their duty in producing this witness, but I do not think that she can, with propriety, be examined.

The witness was then withdrawn.

For the Crown Bennett, Q. C. Keller, Q. C. and M'Dermott.

For the prisoner, Coppinger.

JANUARY SESSION.

Jan. 9.

Reg. v. Bateman.

Where a party receives a blank cheque signed, with directions to fill in a certain amount and to appropriate the instrument to a certain purpose, and he fraudulently fills in a different amount, and devotes the cheque to other purposes, he commits forgery.

But to sustain the charge, it is essential to negative every fact from which an authority to act as he has done might be presumed.

The prisoner was indicted for forgery under the following circumstances. He was clerk to Messrs. Sewell and Cross, and had been in the habit of getting blank cheques signed by the firm, and filling in the amount himself, to meet demands upon them. It was proved that on a certain day he brought the cheque in question to one of the partners and requested him to sign it, stating at the time that he had been told by Mr. Sewell to pay certain rent which was due from Mr. Sewell to a Mr. Gardiner, but that the amount was not ascertained. The cheque when completed was as follows:—

"No. 7476. London, Dec. 18th, 1844.

"London and Westminster Bank. Pay to 1238 or bearer 100*l.* "Sewell and Co."

At the bottom was written "pay in notes;" but neither this memorandum, nor the date, nor the amount was filled in when it was signed. The words "and Co." were across the cheque originally. The name of the firm was written by the partner above mentioned, who stated that he never gave the prisoner any authority to receive cash for the cheque or to appropriate it otherwise than for the rent.

Clarkson, for the prosecution, opened the case as clearly one of forgery. That where a party had authority to fill up cheques under certain circumstances, and with certain limitations, and he chose to do so for purposes of his own, and quite beside such authority (which he was in a condition to prove was the case in the present instance), the offence was undoubtedly committed.

Before the evidence was gone into, Ballantine and Wilkins, for the prisoner, suggested that as there would be no question made as to the facts, it might be convenient at once to discuss the law of the case.

Erle, J.—We cannot in a criminal case take anything as admitted, and therefore the evidence must be gone into.

In addition to the testimony given by the partner above referred to, it was then proved that the amount of the cheque had been received by the prisoner; and the notes were traced to the possession of parties to whom the prisoner had paid them on account of certain gaming debts of his own. It was admitted by the prosecution that the rent due to Mr. Gardiner was much larger in amount than the sum for which the cheque was filled up. Neither Mr. Sewell nor Mr. Gardiner was called.

Ballantine, on the case for the prosecution being closed, contended that there was no evidence to sustain a charge of forgery. How could a party be charged with forging an instrument which he had a lawful authority to make. Admitting that such authority was limited, still in this instance it had not been exercised to its full extent; inasmuch as the amount actually filled in was less than he was permitted to insert. Of what part then of the cheque could the forgery be asserted. It is true that there might be a subsequent misappropriation of the proceeds, but that could not be adduced in support of the present charge, although it might be available under a different one. It is necessary to look to the precise period when the cheque was completed, and if the prisoner had authority at that time to act as he did, no subsequent conduct could make that a forgery which was not one in the first instance. Again, the evidence of Mr. Sewell and of Mr. Gardiner is absolutely essential to the support of any charge at all. We know nothing of what were Mr. Sewell's directions to the prisoner, except as far as he himself stated them to one member of the firm, and that statement is not at all inconsistent with his having implicitly obeyed his instructions in appropriating the money as he has done. Neither can the jury be satisfied in Mr. Gardiner's absence that the rent has not in fact been paid.

Erle, J. to Mr. Clarkson.—Without now expressing an opinion upon this point, I will ask you whether you are content to rest the case where it is, without calling these gentlemen?

Clarkson.—I have sent for them, my lord, and expect them here every moment.

Erle, J.—I will wait them a short time for the chance of their arrival.

The witnesses however did not arrive.

Erle, J. observed.—I think the prisoner must be acquitted. It is clear that he had authority to fill up the cheque in some way or another; that was an authority derived from Mr. Sewell, and there is no evidence to shew that his directions were not to get a blank cheque filled up for 100*l.* and appropriate it as this has been. Moreover it should have been shewn that Mr. Gardiner did not authorize him to receive the money. He might, for any thing that appears in the evidence, have gone to that gentleman, have tendered him the cheque, and got it subsequently cashed by his directions. On this ground, therefore, the charge fails. But as some doubt appears to exist as to the law in cases of this sort, it is my duty to state, that I look upon the principle as laid down by the prosecution to be perfectly correct. If a cheque is given to a person with a certain authority, the agent is confined strictly within the limits of that authority, and if he choose to alter it, the crime of forgery is committed. If the blank cheque was delivered to him with a limited authority to complete it, and he filled it up with an amount different from the one he was directed to insert; and if after the authority was at end, he filled it up with any amount whatever, that too would be clearly forgery.

Patteson, J.—I quite agree with my learned brother that if the prisoner filled up the cheque with a different amount, and for different purposes than those which his authority warranted, the crime of forgery would be undoubtedly made out.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

Parliament has sanctioned the repeal (the auction duty, and thereby relieved th sellers of property from that which wa practically rather a vexation and an imped ment than a burden, for evasion was so eas that few large properties really paid the ta intended to be imposed upon them. Th Lord Chancellor has laid his Charitable Trust Bill on the table of the House of Lords. W shall give to its provisions the attention thei importance demands.

Malt, Hops, and Brewers.—Since the adjournment of the House for the Easter holidays there as been rather a paucity of Parliamentary papers; ne, however, came to hand on Saturday purporting o contain a series of accounts relating to hops and malt, and the number of persons licensed as brewers, ictuallers, &c. for the year 1843-44. It is printed in ursuance of a motion made by Mr. Alderman Humhery, M.P. for Southwark, and ex-Lord Mayor of ondon. It appears, firstly, that the total number f acres in land in Great Britain under the cultivaion of hops in the year 1844 amounted to 44,485 7-80ths, of which 9,001 lay in the collection of parishes in the district of Canterbury, 1,551 in the colection of Hants, 6,538 in that of Hereford, 1,134 in he Isle of Wight, 13,474 in the collection of Rocheser, 9,928½ in that of Sussex, and 1,252 in that of Vorcester. The gross total amount of the duty on ops of the growth of the year 1844 amounted to 56,240*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*; the old duty, at 1 12-20d. per lb. aving realized 140,322*l.*; and the new duty, at 8-20d. per lb. 103,716*l.* From the additional duty 5 per cent. under the Act of 3 Vict. c. 17, there ccrued an amount of 12,201*l.* The total quantity of ritish hops exported from Great Britain to various reign countries, from the 5th Jan. 1844, to the 5th an. 1845, amounted altogether to 153,849lbs. of hich 20,137 lbs. were the growth of the year 1842, 35,685 lbs. of the growth of the year 1843, and 1,103 lbs. of the growth of the year 1844. The prinipal customers abroad for our hops appear to be the Cape of Good Hope, Guernsey and Jersey, Hobartown, the Isle of Man, Launceston, New South Wales, New Zealand, Port Philip, St. Petersburg, Sydney, and Van Diemen's Land. The quantities of foreign hops exported from the United Kingdom in 1844-45, amounted to 38 cwt. only. The quantity of foreign hops imported into the United Kingdom in 1844-5 amounted to 267 cwt. chiefly from the United States of North America. We next come to the article of malt. The total quantity of malt made between the 10th of October, 1843, and the 10th of October, 1844, amounted to 4,617,217 quarters, of which 3,979,020 quarters were made in England, 478,562 in Scotland, and 159,665 in Ireland; of this quantity, 3,280,975 quarters were used by brewers and victuallers, and 420,332 quarters by retail brewers, making altogether 3,701,307 quarters so used. The number of persons licensed as brewers in the United Kingdom amounts to 2,695; the number licensed as victuallers, to 86,234; the number of persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk on the premises, to 31,729; the number licensed to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises, to 4,022; the number of victuallers who brew their own beer, to 26,715; the number of persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk on the premises who brew their own beer, to 12,603; and the number of those licensed to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises, and who brew their own beer, to 1,225. The bushels of malt consumed by each class are as follows:—viz. by brewers, 18,434,469 bushels; by victuallers, 7,813,338 bushels; by persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk on the premises, 2,961,017 bushels; and by those licensed to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises, 401,644 bushels. Such seems to be the substance of Mr. Alderman Humphery's return.

Newspaper Stamps.—A return of the aggregate number of stamps issued for newspapers in Great Britain and Ireland in each year from January 1842 to January 1845, was received at the office yesterday. It was obtained and printed on the motion of Mr. J. Brotherton, M.P. In 1842 there were issued in England 50,145,912 penny and 1,473,664 halfpenny stamps; in Scotland, 4,977,344 penny and 443,550 halfpenny stamps; in Wales, 440,200 penny and 10,830 halfpenny stamps. In 1843 England consumed 51,282,900 penny and 1,898,682 halfpenny stamps; Scotland, 5,293,726 penny and 243,150 halfpenny stamps; and Wales, 456,925 penny and 2,000 halfpenny stamps. In 1843, the number of stamps thus issued for England were, respectively, 53,933,843 and 3,738,128; for Scotland, 5,727,585 and 317,620; and for Wales, 479,700 and 7,000. Ireland took, in 1842, 6,099,656 stamps, and paid a net duty of 19,057*l.*; in 1843, 6,594,652, paying a net duty of 20,385*l.*; and in 1844, 7,018,617, paying a net duty of 21,586*l.* By the Act 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76, the purchasers of 10*l.* and upwards of these stamps are allowed 25*l.* for every 100*l.*

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BASTARDY BILL.

Friday, April 4.—Lord Stanley said that Government had received representations which made it highly desirable to reconsider the forms in the Bastardy Bill. Unfortunately, the legal gentleman usually consulted was out of town, which rendered it necessary to defer the committee until Monday.—The Duke of Richmond thought that all persons who had commenced appeals under the existing law were entitled to compensation for costs, and as the good principle had been established, he hoped the payment would be made out of the Consolidated Fund. (Cheers.)—The order of the day for the committee was then discharged, and fixed for Monday.

CORONERS' COURTS.

Tuesday, April 8.—The Marquis of Normanby also gave notice, that on Monday next he would put a question to some noble lord opposite as to the present state of the practice with respect to prisoners committed previously to the termination of an inquiry before the coroner. He would ask whether the Government intended to provide a remedy for the present state of things, which was a great scandal,—the conflict of different authorities for the possession of a person accused of murder?

COMMON LAW PROCESS BILL.

On the motion of Lord Campbell, this Bill was read a third time and passed.

CHARITABLE FUNDS BILL.

The Lord Chancellor laid on the table a Bill for securing the better administration of charitable funds in England and Wales; which was read a first time.

SANITARY REGULATIONS.

The Marquis of Normanby, in presenting a petition from the city of Limerick, signed by the mayor, on behalf of a meeting of the inhabitants, praying for the extension to Ireland of the contemplated sanitary measures, inquired when the proposed measure would be introduced in the other House of Parliament, and whether it would extend to the sister kingdom or not?—The Duke of Buccleuch said he could not state the exact period when the measure would be introduced in the other House of Parliament, but it would not be delayed for any great length of time. Ever since the report upon the subject had been completed, a measure had been in course of preparation; but it required a great deal of research and care, from the complicated nature of the subject, involving, as it did, the examination of no less than 400 local Acts of Parliament. He trusted, however, that at no very distant time the measure would be completed, and be hoped also that there would be ample time, after its introduction, for its full consideration by both Houses of Parliament. (Hear, hear.) With regard to the intention of the Government to extend its regulations to Ireland, he begged to say that he could see no reason why the provisions of the measure should not be extended both to Scotland and Ireland, and he hoped no difficulties would occur to prevent the measure being extended to both these countries. (Hear, hear.) — The Marquis of NORMANBY said that nothing could be more satisfactory than the explanation of the noble duke, and he now begged to present another petition on the subject from the town of Derby.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Lord CAMPBELL presented several petitions from various parts of Gloucestershire, complaining of the law passed last session abolishing imprisonment for debts under 20*l.* The noble lord said that he did not concur in the prayer of the petitions, although he should be quite ready to give his assent to any measure, the object of which was to prevent fraud upon creditors.—Lord COTTENHAM presented a petition from Lancaster praying for the total abolition of imprisonment for debt.—Lord DENMAN presented a petition, signed by upwards of 100 persons, complaining of the hardship endured by a bankrupt who had been confined in the Queen's Bench Prison for the last three years, because he conscientiously objected to take the necessary oaths in order to pass his examination. The petitioners stated that they had no doubt the person in question was a strictly honourable man, and was prevented from passing his examination and obtaining his certificate entirely in consequence of his conscientious scruples as to the taking of an oath. The petitioners also stated that the party referred to had been in a state of almost utter destitution, because he objected to take the usual oath in order to be entitled to the prison allowance. The petitioners prayed that some legislative measure might be adopted on the subject.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

WEDNESDAY, April 9.—Lord ASHBURTON said he had a petition to present on a subject which was frequently brought under consideration in their lordships' House; namely, the state of the law of debtor and creditor. The petition was signed by from 600 to 700 of the most respectable tradesmen of the town of Newcastle, and made the same complaints of the present law which were so often brought before the House in petitions.—Lord BROUGHAM said he agreed with his noble friend that there were some alterations necessary in the existing law, and he had always said so, but these alterations could easily be made without breaking down the present system, and that he did not think the petitioners wished to have done. He had himself a petition to present, most numerously signed, from traders residing in Westminster, and their prayer was, that they should be put upon the same footing in the case of small debts as creditors to a high amount, or those claiming debts above 20*l.* The latter had the privilege of examining the debtor, and other remedies which creditors to a small amount thought they also should be allowed to exercise.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

FRIDAY, April 4.—Sir G. GREY wished to ask the right honourable Secretary for the Home Department a question respecting a Bill on the subject of charitable trusts. At the commencement of the session, in answer to a question put by him, the right honourable gentleman stated that it was the intention of the Lord Chancellor to introduce a measure on the subject, without delay, into the other House. Two months of the session had now elapsed, and no Bill on the subject had been introduced, he therefore wished to know when this Bill would be introduced?—Sir JAMES GRAHAM replied that he had seen the draft of the proposed Bill, and he hoped that it would be shortly produced.

WEDNESDAY, April 9.—Mr. COWPER moved the second reading of the Fields Garden Bill.—Mr. B. ESCOTT contended that the House ought not to allow this Bill to go to a second reading. Mr. Cowper had stated that its enactments were not compulsory; but he scarcely expected that he would repeat that observation. The hon. member then pointed out several clauses which were compulsory, and contended that of all the bills professedly introduced for benevolent purposes, this was, in point of fact, the most monstrous and indefensible. The allotment system had been productive of good, because it was voluntary; but it was a most mischievous proposal to mix it up, as it was mixed up by this Bill, with an odious mode of levying relief for the poor. He moved that the Bill be read a second time this day six months.—Mr. COWPER defended his measure. He requested Mr. Escott to let the Bill go into committee, and then he would shew him that his objections—which were all objections of detail—were ill-founded. It depended on each parish whether this Bill should come into operation or not.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM considered the object of the Bill to be a very praiseworthy one. He hoped that Mr. B. Escott would not persevere in his objection to the second reading of the Bill. At the same time he must inform Mr. Cowper that there were in his Bill certain provisions, to which, if they were not previously altered, he should feel it his duty to object when the Bill went into committee. One of those provisions was that which made the poor-rates a security for the payment of the rents of these field gardens, and another was that which referred to the constitution of the local board.—Lord J. MANNERS defended, and Mr. HENLEY opposed the Bill.—Mr. J. S. WORTLEY said, that if this had been a compulsory bill he should certainly object to it; but it was not a compulsory bill, and he therefore considered it worthy of support. He hoped that the House would allow the Bill to go to a second reading.

The House then divided, when the numbers were—

For the second reading	92

The Bill was ordered to be committed on Wednesday next.

INFEOFTMENT (SCOTLAND) BILL.

On the motion of the LORD ADVOCATE the Infeoftment (Scotland) Bill went through committee pro forma.

The Heritable Securities (Scotland) Bill also went through committee.

INFERIOR LAW COURTS.

THURSDAY, April 10.—Mr. ESCOTT presented a petition from a barrister residing in the county of Southampton, complaining of malpractices in the small Crown courts, and praying for remedy.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Bastardy Bill has been stopped in its progress through the House of Lords, it having been discovered that Mr. LUMLEY'S Schedule of Forms is not exactly such as the Legislature ought to adopt without careful review and amendment. It is strange that they should have advanced to such a stage without one of our legislators having protested against the extraordinary course adopted by Sir JAMES GRAHAM in taking forms that have been pronounced invalid and illegal by the judges of the land, and not only legalizing them for the past, but prescribing them for the future. It is at least pleasant to find that the Lords are alive to the indignity (for such it is) thus sought to be inflicted upon the judgment of our Law Courts, and insist that the forms they are asked to sanction shall be, for the future at least, sufficiently accurate to reflect no discredit to the legislature from which they emanate, even though they should see fit to make a law to correct past blunders.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

WE have brought up arrears preparatory to the commencement of Term, for many cases are yet standing over for judgment, and in all probability these, with the addition of the judgments arising out of the Term itself, will make large demands upon our space. No incident of the week calls for particular notice.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, will oblige, by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

WHITEHALL, April 2, 1845.—The Queen has been pleased to grant unto Henry Aldridge, of Bentinck-street, Manchester-square, in the county of Middlesex, esq. son of James Aldridge, of Notting-hill, Kensington, in the said county of Middlesex, esq. by Elizabeth, his wife, the sister of Edward Bliss, late of Brandon Park, in the parish of Brandon, in the county of Suffolk, and of Berkeley-house, Hyde Park, in the aforesaid county of Middlesex, esq. deceased, her royal license and authority that he and his issue may, from grateful and affectionate respect to the memory of his said late maternal uncle, Edward Bliss, and in compliance with a request contained in his last will and testament, henceforth take and use the surname of Bliss only, and also bear the arms of Bliss only; such arms being first duly exemplified according to the laws of arms, and recorded in the Herald's Office, otherwise the said royal license and permission to be void and of none effect; and also to command that the said Royal concession and declaration be recorded in her Majesty's College of Arms.

MARLBOROUGH-HOUSE, April 5.—The Queen Dowager has been pleased to appoint Mr. Serjeant Henry Alworth Merewether to be her Majesty's Attorney-General; the Hon. James Stuart Wortley to be her Majesty's Solicitor-General.

SIR GEORGE STEPHEN.—We understand that Sir George Stephen, whose name is as honourably connected with the abolition of West India slavery as that of his father with the abolition of the slave-trade, has received and accepted the appointment of agent to the Bahamas by the colonial legislature.—Patriot.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

SHERIFFS' FUND SOCIETY.—Thursday the annual meeting of the supporters of this society, which was established several years since, for the purpose of rendering pecuniary assistance to the distressed families of persons confined in Newgate, and other metropolitan prisons, for debt or crime, and for assisting persons discharged from confinement, in order that they may be provided with the means of obtaining a proper livelihood, was held at the London Coffee-house. Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Sidney presided, and there were present Sir Moses Montefiore (late sheriff), Alderman Sir James Duke, Alderman John Johnson, and others. Mr. Cooper, the honorary secretary, read the report of the late sheriffs, Messrs. Musgrove and Moon, which referred at some length to the operations of the past year, and called attention to many interesting but affecting cases which had come before them (the sheriffs) in their official capacity. It appeared that the total amount received toward the Sheriffs' Fund and Permanent Fund had been 581*l*. 14*s*. of which 200*l*. 11*s*. 3*d*. had been received on account of the former, and 381*l*. 2*s*. 9*d*. for the latter. The sum of 107*l*. 19*s*. 6*d*. had been applied out of the Sheriffs' Fund for the relief of 385 poor persons in Newgate; 120 persons in Whitecross-street prison had also received as much relief as could be afforded. The sum of 60*l*. 11*s*. had been awarded from the Permanent Fund for the benefit of the Royal Asylum for Destitute Females. The remainder of the receipts had been added to the funded property, which now, amounts to 9,400*l*. in the Consols. Sir Moses Montefiore expressed a hope that arrangements would be made for the holding of an annual dinner, as he knew of no society that was more entitled to the support of all parties in the country. The suggestion was unanimously adopted, and the festival, at which one of her Majesty's ministers is intended to preside, was fixed for the 28th of May next.

DUELLING IN FRANCE.—The Court of Cassation met on Tuesday, to pronounce on the appeal of the Attorney-General against the decision of the Court of Orleans, which had acquitted M. Servient of the charge of manslaughter, for killing his adversary in a duel, on the ground that duelling constituted neither a crime nor an offence, and that there was no legal penalty against it. The Court, after hearing M. Ledru Rollin in defence of the decision, and M. Dupin, the Attorney-General, in support of the appeal, issued a decree, in which it stated, that "whereas no exception had been introduced by the Legislature in favour of duelling in the articles 295 and 296 of the Penal Code; that duelling could not be classed among facts which constituted neither crime nor offence, since, so far from being a case of legitimate defence, it is the result of a culpable agreement; that to view it otherwise would be to recognize the right of taking redress into one's own hands; and that, in infringing these principles, the Royal Court of Orleans had violated the law. For those reasons, the Court of Cassation reversed the decision, and directed the case to be tried over again by another tribunal."

COMPENSATION AND SUPERANNUATION ALLOWANCES.—On the 3rd instant was received from the Parliamentary publishers a return, lately presented to the House of Commons, relative to superannuation and compensation allowances. It hence appears that the total amount of "compensation" allowances remaining payable on the 31st of December, 1844, was 250,565*l*.; and the total amount of the "superannuation" allowances remaining payable at the same period of time 376,896*l*. allowing for certain deductions made pursuant to the provisions of the Act 4 & 5 William 4, cap. 24. The total amount of the compensation and superannuation allowances, taken together, was consequently 627,461*l*. Of the sums appropriated to the compensation allowan[ces] 14,247*l*. was swallowed up by the Ordnance, 49,155*l*. by the Admiralty, 28,238*l*. by the Customs, 25,930*l*. by the Excise, 25,282*l*. by the Stamps and Taxes, 4,533*l*. by the Treasury, 16,489*l*. by the War-office, 7,104*l*. by the Audit-office, and 9,650*l*. by the Exchequer.

IRISH CRIME.—Returns from the clerks of the Crown and clerks of the peace of the several counties, &c. in Ireland, of the number of persons committed to the different gaols thereof for trial during the year 1844, were laid upon the table on Thursday, pursuant to the Act 56 Geo. 3, cap. 120. We find, on perusing this paper, that the total number of committals for crimes in Ireland was as follows:—viz. in the county of Antrim, 131, 358, and 3; in the county of Armagh, 77 and 451; in Carlow, 76 and 271; in Cavan, 66 and 491; in Clare, 106 and 515; in Cork, 211, 1,754, 20, and 330; in Donegal, 66 and 232; in Downshire, 163 and 471; in Louth, 15 and 41; in Dublin county, 54, 247, 131, and 1,238; in Fermanagh, 29 and 221; in Galway, 219, 994, 24, and 24; in Kerry, 141 and 605; in Kildare, 44 and 144; in Kilkenny, 54 and 400, 18 and 7; in King's County, 58; in Leitrim, 33 and 356; in Limerick 85, 697, and 109; in Londonderry, 37 and 327; in Longford, 48 and 214; in Louth, 35 and 257; in Mayo, 134 and 767; in Meath, 44 and 272; in Monaghan, 70 and 348; in Queen's County, 75 and 521; in Roscommon, 114 and 549; in Sligo, 83 and 452; in Tipperary, 141, 171, and 1,390; in Tyrone, 126 and 374; in Waterford, 48, 410, and 57; in Westmeath, 71 and 274; in Wexford, 45 and 298; and in Wicklow, 75 and 349.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.—A return of the notes, securities, bullion, &c. of the Bank of England, as published weekly in the London Gazette, from the passing of the Act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 32, up to the present time, was ordered a short time since upon the motion of Mr. C. Wood, M.P. and is now printed for the information of the public. Taking the very last return afforded, it will be found, as far as concerns the issue department, that upon the 22nd ult. the notes in circulation amounted to 29,213,555*l*.; the Government debt to 11,015,100*l*.; other securities to 2,984,900*l*.; gold bullion to 13,177,831*l*. and silver bullion to 2,035,724*l*. Thus much for the issue department. Turning to the other, or "banking" department, it will be perceived that at the same period (the 22nd March, 1845), the capital amounted to 14,553,000*l*.; the public deposits to 6,890,121*l*.; the private deposits to 10,452,425*l*.; seven days and other bills to 992,192*l*.; public securities to 13,474,379*l*.; other securities to 12,535,169*l*.; notes to 9,673,205*l*. and coin to 786,869*l*. Hence it follows, that to meet the amount of notes in circulation on the 22nd ult. (29,213,555*l*.) there was an amount of bullion lying in the coffers of the Bank of 15,213,555*l*. or upwards of one-half the outstanding liabilities.

WILL OF THE LATE MR. WILLIAM STURGES BOURNE.—Probate of the will and codicil of the late Right Hon. William Sturges Bourne, late of Testwood, near Southampton, and of Upper Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, who died on the 1st of February last, at his seat, Testwood-house, in his 76th year, has just been granted to Mr. Frederick Moysey, one of the executors. A power is reserved to Anne Sturges, widow, the relict, to prove hereafter. The personal estate alone is sworn under 60,000*l*. The will and codicil were made in the year 1836, signed, "W. Sturges Bourne;" the codicil is in his own handwriting. He desires that he might be buried at Winchester, near his father, the late Rev. Dr. Sturges, in Winchester Cathedral. He leaves to the County Hospital, at Winchester, 100*l*. and to St. George's Hospital, Hanover-square, also 100*l*. He bequeaths a few legacies to his own relations, a year's wages to his servants, except Susan Hopkins, to whom he leaves a legacy of 20*l*. After the payment of all debts, expenses and legacies, he devises and bequeaths his real and personal estate to his wife for her life, and, at her decease, to his daughter Anna, then to her husband and their issue, on failure to his right heirs. The will is of moderate length.—Evening Paper.

WILL OF LADY HOARE.—The will of the widow of the late Sir H. Hoare, bart. banker, of Fleet-street, has been proved. Her own personal property is sworn under 8,000*l*. She bequeaths the bulk of the property to her daughter, Julia Lethbridge, the wife of John Hesketh Lethbridge, esq. for life, and after her decease for her children. Her son Henry is to have the picture of General Acland, and the china and plate, and the gold cup given to her late husband Sir Henry, by the general. There are several other bequests to the family. Her executors are B. Scott and Christopher Pearse, esqrs.

WILL OF DR. WILLIAM HEBERDEN, M.D.—The will of this gentleman, late of Cumberland-street, Marylebone, has just been proved. To his two sons and two daughters he leaves his property as follows:—To William, his eldest son, his divinity MSS. the presentation to the Rectory of Great Bookham, and a moiety of the tithes, with a gift of the parsonage adjoining. To Charles, his son, the tithes of Bevington and Blisbury. To his daughters Emily and Mary, the former 6,850*l.* in Consols, and to the latter the residue of the stock to be divided with her sister; also an annuity of 30*l.* to his housekeeper. The personal property was sworn under 9,000*l.*

CORRESPONDENCE.

PREPARING ABSTRACTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—So long as the question raised by myself in No. 82, and again by Mr. Bond in last week's number of your valuable publication, as to the exclusive right of the mortgagee's solicitor to furnish the abstract of title on a sale be an open one, undetermined by some acknowledged authority, there will be found many who will form their opinions in accordance with their interests. To my mind there is not a particle of doubt on the subject, and I shall in every case insist upon my right, as solicitor for a mortgagee, to furnish an abstract of all deeds in the possession of my client, and, in case my right to furnish such abstract be forestalled or called in question, I shall avail myself of the hint in the last paragraph contained in the letter of "T. H. A." in No. 83 of your journal, and refuse to produce the deeds. I have consulted many solicitors of extensive practice, and of great experience, and who invariably have recommended the course I have above suggested. In one case only will this course be no remedy—where the solicitor for the mortgagor is also instructed to act for the purchaser, and being acquainted with the title, he may, if he thinks proper, complete the purchase without an abstract, tender the mortgage-money and interest, and receive the deeds, and so far he may be justified, provided he does not charge the mortgagor for an abstract, which being unnecessary and not made, he would scarcely do. This, however, can occur but seldom, and only where the solicitor is perfectly acquainted with the title, and to save expense. It appears to me, therefore, that so long as the different law societies promulgate no rule, so long must every solicitor act on his own judgment. The remarks of "P. B. T." in No. 84 appear to me quite irrelevant. The case he supposes of the mortgage-money being paid off without the title-deeds being handed over, would, I fancy, not occur often in the experience of a prudent solicitor; and supposing the case to arise, how does it affect the question? If a mortgagor desires to pay off principal and interest, and take a reconveyance, no solicitor would think of saddling him with an abstract.

But how is it in practice on a transfer of mortgage? I need scarcely say that invariably the mortgagee's solicitor furnishes the abstract to the solicitor of the transferree, and, from strict analogy, there can be no doubt, I think, that the solicitor of a mortgagee is, in every case where an abstract is necessary or required, entitled to furnish it.

I am, yours, &c. A. F.

A POINT OF PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

With reference to an article which appeared in the LAW TIMES of the 29th March last, as to the respective rights of the solicitors of a mortgagor or mortgagee to furnish the abstract of title in the case of a sale by the former, and upon which point you therein solicited opinions, I beg to observe that, according to town practice, such right clearly belongs to the solicitor of the mortgagee. How could such practice be otherwise; for who ever heard of an abstract being framed from a copy, or an abstract from copies, and not from the original deeds? and who would be satisfied with such copies without the power to examine the same with the title-deeds, which the solicitor to the mortgagee might very properly refuse?

Yours, &c. A. N.

THE LAW LIST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Allow me to avail myself of the invaluable facilities afforded by your useful columns, to direct attention to, and if possible to correct, what I think is to many in the Profession no inconsiderable evil.

Every one would naturally imagine that the Law List, which does not appear till the 1st April in each year, should contain the names of all barristers and pleaders called and certificated in the previous Hilary Term. All who know any thing of printing must be aware that the insertion of a very few names in the body of a work nearly two months before it is published, could not be inconvenient, and that even if it were so, it could be easily done at least by way of appendix or "addenda."

How it is as to barristers I know not; but I was astonished to find that pleaders certificated in Hilary Term would not appear for the current year. The result is, that from Jan. 7 to April next year, that is, for full 15 months, all pleaders in that position will not be registered in the authentic roll of the Profession. The practical injury resulting from this must be as apparent as the injustice; and on remonstrating with the highly respectable publishers of the Law List, what was the only answer?—that it was for the sake of avoiding any difficulty, or of preventing any inconvenience? Confessedly there was neither difficulty nor inconvenience in the course suggested. All they urged was an arbitrary agreement or understanding with a Mr. Cockell of the Stamp-office, that no name should be received after January 1st. In vain I represented the result, and the ease with which it might be avoided. In vain I urged that it was exceedingly unsatisfactory to hear that the only reason why a great injustice and injury should be inflicted was an arbitrary agreement with some one else. What conceivable motive there can be for so yielding to mere paltry official caprice, I, for one, am ignorant. I am much more interested, however, Sir, in the remedy of this evil. And I beg to suggest that a Verulam Law List should be projected, the distinguishing feature of which should be that each Term a leaf be struck off (which could easily be inserted in the book) containing the names of gentlemen called, certificated, or passed in that term. Or if a new Law List be deemed unnecessary, would it not be a great convenience to the profession if there were issued each Term such a leaf to be inserted in the current number of the Law List? The evil I speak of of course attaches equally to attorneys, and could thus easily be remedied. As at present managed, the Law List is for those parties to whom alone it is of importance (viz. those who have not attained sufficient standing to render a year or two unimportant) worse than useless; a positive injury, as leading to the natural impression that they entered practice upwards of a year after they really did.

I remain, &c.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Many public bodies, such as commissioners under Improvement Acts, are empowered to raise money upon the security of their rates.

The principal upon such securities does not seem to be recoverable from the commissioners, but the holders sell and transfer them according to a form prescribed by the Acts. Sometimes they are sold above and sometimes below par.

Should the duty on the transfer be the same as upon a sale and conveyance, or as upon a transfer of mortgage? Each of those titles in the Stamp Act would seem to comprise the case in question.

I should like to know the opinion of some of my brother subscribers on the subject.

I am yours, &c.

TRANSFERS OF RAILWAY SHARES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Railway speculations now absorb so large a portion of the money formerly employed in mortgage and other investments, that I am surprised at the apathy with which solicitors regard the encroachments made upon their privileges by share-brokers. The deeds necessary to effectuate the transfer of registered shares are prepared by the brokers engaged in the business; and, although they make no specific charge for that portion of the transaction, they receive remuneration for it in another form, namely, in their charge for commission. Surely this calls for the attention of our law societies.

Whilst on this subject I am tempted to inquire why the whole of the business usually committed to a share-broker may not be properly transacted by a solicitor. There appears to be no distinction between negotiations for investments in mortgages, &c. and investments in railways and other undertakings, and yet we relinquish the latter to persons of a separate calling. Is it wise, in the present state of our profession, to abandon so large a field of legitimate and profitable exertion?

I am yours, &c.

CHANCERY ORDERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Every new order that is issued for the regulation of Chancery practice, seems to us to shew, more clearly than the last, the practical ignorance of the parties by whom these orders are framed. Complaints have been made, and in many cases with justice, of the imperfection of the copies made in the Masters' offices, to remedy which an order has been lately issued that the copies made in the Master's office should be similar to those obtained from the Record Office, on foolscap, written on both sides, and with six words in each line. Now, independently of the copies obtained from the Record Office being the very worst that could be selected as a model, on account of the confusion which arises from the practice of leaving a long blank wherever figures occur, we beg to say that it is the universal opinion of solicitors and their Chancery clerks, that this mode of copying is peculiarly inconvenient in the Master's office, where the documents left are frequently amended, without any limitation, as in the case of records, and where, in settling long reports, numerous alterations are always found necessary. If the Master of the Rolls would make an order that no copy should be allowed to go out of the Master's office without first being examined, he would be conferring a boon on solicitors. The present alteration has no other effect than that of giving the additional trouble.

A LONDON FIRM.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"G. G." (Staffordshire) thus writes on the subject of Abstracts of Title to Mortgaged Premises:—

Your correspondent "A. W." appears to entertain an opinion, as to the solicitor who ought properly to prepare these documents, which I conceive to be at variance with that entertained by the Profession generally.

It is submitted that the usages of the Profession never require the mortgagee to part with the possession of the abstract of title, whether freed or not from marginal notes; but his solicitor, on application, makes a copy of it, and prepares a separate abstract of the mortgage deed. This, however, is deemed a matter of favour; as the mortgagee might (were he so disposed) refuse to sanction any exposure of the title whatever. I conceive it, therefore, to be the interest of the mortgagor to secure the assent of the mortgagee to the sale, which would be implied from the solicitor of the latter preparing the abstract. Your correspondent, in styling such a proceeding "monstrous," can scarcely be serious. The question which immediately follows the observation alluded to appears to me as being nothing to the purpose; as I cannot conceive how the charges of the mortgagee's solicitor for the abstract can materially differ from those of the mortgagor's solicitor.

"J. C. B." (Manchester), thus expresses his opinion upon the point of practice raised by our correspondents as to the preparation of the abstract on a sale by the mortgagor:—

By examining the position of the attorneys for the mortgagor and mortgagee with a little care, I think it no difficult matter to settle the question as to furnishing the abstract. The mortgagor's attorney possesses an old abstract and copy draft mortgage, from which he supplies a purchaser from his client with abstract of title; and in this, I submit, he is fully justified; and if the purchaser is satisfied that such abstract is correct, and will forego the examination thereof with deeds, the mortgagee's attorney can have no right whatever to interfere, and his client must execute reconveyance or join mortgagor in conveying to the purchaser on the amount of his claim being paid off.

If, on the other hand, the purchaser insists upon examining the abstract with the deeds (which is almost invariably the case), then, I apprehend, the mortgagee's attorney is perfectly justified in refusing inspection of deeds for examination with any abstract prepared otherwise than by himself.

By each party, therefore, acting strictly according to his rights, every case will adjust itself without any general rule being promulgated as to the party who shall in all cases prepare the abstract.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1845.

TO READERS.

The new volume having introduced the Law Times to many new readers, perhaps it may be desirable to repeat the contract we have made with our subscribers, lest the advertisement columns of last week might occasion some discontent among them.

The understanding is, and strictly will it be fulfilled, that upon the average of a volume the advertisements shall not trench upon the reader's domain beyond the two outside leaves, and that to whatever extent beyond that proportion they may chance to extend, compensation shall be made to the reader in the shape of supplements.

During the season it must frequently happen that the Law Times, as the recognized medium for advertisements of sales of estates, &c. will be compelled to dedicate to them very varying space, according to the accidental influx. But our subscribers may be assured that any such excess shall be faithfully accounted for, and restored in the shape of supplements.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF QUARTER SESSIONS.

We beg to direct the notice of our readers both in the magistracy and of the Profession, to the proceedings of the Denbighshire and Flintshire Law Association, reported last week.

It appears that the members feel so keenly the importance of an advertisement of the Quarter Sessions being published in a central medium, where it may be readily found by the Profession, both in London and the country, without the present inconvenience of consulting the local newspapers, as the only places in which they now appear, and the magistrates having refused to expend the paltry sum such an announcement would cost, the Association has directed the Sessions to be advertised in the Law Times, at the cost of the funds of the Society.

This is a spirited proceeding on the part of the Association; but it reflects great discredit upon the magistracy that such a resolution should be rendered necessary at all. It is clearly the duty of the magistrates to see that their sessions are duly announced to the parties who are mainly interested in them. It is farcical to say that this is already done by the advertisements in the county newspapers. What lawyer, living out of the county, ever sees a local paper? And of those who reside in it, the chances are that one half at least do not chance to light upon the particular journals selected by the justices for their advertisements; for, be it known, they are not inserted even in all the county papers, but often only in those of the least circulation; party and other interests, and not the information of the public, usually directing the choice of the newspapers for this purpose.

The lawyers, who are scattered over the whole face of the country, and who are more interested even than the inhabitants of the county in the Quarter Sessions to which they may be called by business, ask of the magistrates that they may be supplied with information so necessary to them. They allege that they cannot be expected to take in all the county papers in England and Wales in order to find out the times appointed for the sessions; they say, that a ready means is afforded for such a necessary announcement to them through the medium of the Law Times, where those who seek, wherever resident, would be enabled at once to find it, and that the few shillings that it would cost the county ought not to be an obstacle to the carrying out of a plan which is so obviously desirable.

Many of the counties and cities have acceded to the request of the attorneys resident in them, and their Quarter Sessions are now regularly announced in the Law Times. We would suggest to the attorneys and Law Societies in the counties, cities, and boroughs, which have not done so, to present a memorial to the magistrates at the next sessions, setting forth the evil of which they complain, and requesting that the example of Lancashire and the other counties who have adopted the remedy proposed may be followed, and an order given for the announcement of their sessions in like manner.

Such a memorial would scarcely fail to effect the object desired; and if each Law Society would see that one is voted by its members, and presented to the magistracy in its own county, and in each of its cities and boroughs having a quarter sessions, success would be almost certain.

REPEAL OF THE AUCTION DUTY.

Heartily do we congratulate the Profession and the public on the repeal of the auction duty. Its practical operation was to impede the transfer of property, without materially benefiting the revenue. Everybody knew how easily the tax might be evaded, and in sales of land and large personal estates, the farce of buying in, and then selling by private contract, was so invariably played that the impost was lost to the Treasury, and whatever it yielded was obtained not from those most able to pay, but in the very cases in which it was least desirable that it should be levied, when poverty compelled a hasty disposal of effects.

But the impediment, although so often evaded, was yet a serious one to sales by auction, and probably one-half of the estates sold were disposed of by private contract purposely ... trouble and inconvenience with which the law surrounded a public sale. Now, however, that these are entirely removed, all properties will of course be submitted to public competition, because thus they could never reach a less price than by private sale, and might possibly fetch a greater one. Auctions now will be realities, and not mockeries, as heretofore; and the bidding at which the hammer descends will be the bonâ fide purchase. The profession of an auctioneer will become yet more important than ever, and as there will doubtless be a great influx of new competitors, it is of extreme pubiic concernment that they should be men of high character and station as well as of ability.

The Legal Profession being the chief employers of the auctioneers, and responsible to their clients for the selection of good men and true for the conduct of their sales, we could not more usefully employ the influence of the Law Times than in the exposition of the law and practice of sales by auction; of the selling prices of properties; the rights and duties of auctioneers; the qualifications required of them; the rules that should guide the solicitor in his choice, &c. &c. It is, therefore, our purpose to enlarge the department of the Property Journal by the addition of treatises, articles, correspondence, and intelligence on matters relating to sales of property by auction, and in which we invite the cordial co-operation alike of the Profession and of the auctioneers throughout the country, to both of whom it will be equally interesting and of equal practical utility.

So in time, as the plan becomes understood and its advantages seen, we hope to make the Journal of Property as important as it will be a novel feature of the Law Times.

SHAM LAWYERS.

The following advertisement appears in the Suffolk Chronicle of the 29th ult. The advertiser should be strictly watched :—

WILLIAM TURNER,
Auctioneer, Land Surveyor, Appraiser, LAW AND ESTATE AGENT,

Begs to inform the Public that he has taken an Office in Wangford, where he intends carrying on business in the above Professions, and trusts that with moderate charges and unremitting attention to business, to be enabled to obtain the support and patronage of the neighbourhood and public in general.

Southwold, 26th March, 1845.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The fifth number of Practice Cases and the seventh and eighth of Magistrates' Cases are published, completing the second Part of the latter. The ninth and tenth numbers of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases and the sixth number of Practice Cases are in the press.

The forms of Conditions of Sale are in the hands of the printer, and will be ready in a few days. They have been settled expressly for the Society by an experienced and skilful Conveyancer.

A further supply has been procured of the forms of General Retainer, and more of the bound volumes of that form for the office table are now ready for delivery.

Upwards of twenty of the Common Law and Magistrates' Forms are now in the press. They will be duly announced as they are completed.

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

By Alfred S. Taylor.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1844.

Lecture XI.

Mercury—Corrosive sublimate—Calomel—Symptoms—Post-mortem appearances—Quantity required to destroy life—Period at which death takes place—Chemical analysis.

We now pass on to the consideration of poisoning by mercury and its compounds.

Metallic mercury, in the state of vapour, is well known to be pernicious to health, producing paralysis and other disorders of the system. The most important mercurial poison is corrosive sublimate, but this substance is not often taken as a poison. In the Coroners' Report for 1837-8 there were about fifteen cases of mercurial poisoning, in twelve of which corrosive sublimate was the poison taken. This poison is commonly seen under the form of very heavy crystalline masses, or of a white powder. Its taste is powerfully austere and metallic, so that no poisonous quantity of it can be easily swallowed without the individual becoming immediately aware of it. It is very soluble in water, in which respect it differs strikingly from arsenic. Twenty parts of cold water (60°) and two parts of boiling water (212°) will dissolve one part of the poison. It is also readily dissolved by alcohol and ether; the last body takes up one third of its weight, and has the property of abstracting it from its aqueous solution, a principle which has been advantageously resorted to in separating the poison from organic liquids. It is soluble without change in nitric and muriatic acids, and it is a fact of some medico-legal importance that common salt renders it much more soluble in water. Corrosive sublimate, as its name implies, is a corrosive poison; it corrodes and chemically combines with the animal tissues; if it be much diluted with water, these corrosive properties are in great part destroyed; but it may, under these circumstances, act as a powerful irritant.

The symptoms produced by corrosive sublimate generally come on immediately, or within a few minutes after the poison has been swallowed. In the first place there is perceived a strong metallic taste in the mouth, often described as a coppery taste, and there is, during the act of swallowing, a sense of constriction and burning heat in the throat. In a few minutes violent pain is felt in the abdomen, especially in the region of the stomach, which is increased by pressure. Pain in the abdomen is, however, sometimes wholly absent. There is nausea, with frequent vomiting of long stringy masses of white mucus mixed with blood; and this is accompanied by profuse diarrhœa. The countenance is sometimes swollen and flushed, in other cases it has been pale and anxious. The pulse is small, frequent, and irregular, becoming scarcely perceptible as the symptoms become aggravated. The tongue is white and shrivelled, the skin cold and clammy, the respiration difficult, and death is commonly preceded by syncope, convulsions, or general insensibility. Suppression of urine has also been noticed among the symptoms. This symptom was observed lately in a well-marked case of poisoning by this substance, at Guy's Hospital. The patient lived four days, but did not pass any urine during the whole of that time. This poison differs from arsenic—1st, in having a well-marked taste; 2nd, in producing violent symptoms within a few minutes; and 3rd, in the fact of the evacuations being more frequently mixed with blood. The symptoms produced by corrosive sublimate, in the first instance, resemble those of cholera; if the individual should survive several days, they are more like those of dysentery, tenesmus and mucous discharges mixed with blood being very frequently observed.

Mercurial preparations are well known to have a peculiar effect on the salivary glands, increasing the flow of saliva; but salivation is rather an uncertain, and by no means a necessary symptom in cases of acute poisoning by corrosive sublimate. In many instances the patient dies too rapidly for this effect to follow; but even where he survives some days, salivation is not always observed. In a case related by Dr. Venables, where two drachms of the poison had been taken, and the woman survived eight days, this symptom did not exist. But another, reported by Mr. Wood, where half a teaspoonful of the poison was taken, salivation was profuse in the course of a few hours; also, in a case which occurred at Guy's Hospital, in February 1843, where two drachms had been taken, salivation commenced in four hours. In the chronic form of poisoning, where the dose has been small and frequently repeated, we may expect to meet with this symptom, with fœtor of the breath and sponginess and ulceration of the gums. Should the person survive some time, salivation is more commonly met with than not; but in looking for it as an indication of mercurial poison, a medical jurist must remember that some persons are wholly insusceptible of salivation. On the other hand, there are cases in which the salivary glands are most easily excited, so that the usual innocent doses of mercurial medicines have been known to produce salivation to such a degree as to cause death. Facts of this kind are of some importance, since charges of malapraxis may be easily raised in respect to them. Dr. Christison mentions a case in which two grains of calomel destroyed life by the severe salivation induced, as well as by ulceration of the throat. Another case was mentioned to me in 1839, in which five grains of calomel killed an adult by producing fatal salivation. From some cases related by Mr. Samuel, of Newark, it appears that two grains of calomel divided into three powders, were given in the proportion of one powder daily (two-thirds of a grain), to a little boy aged eight. This small dose produced the most violent salivation, sloughing, and exfoliation, from which he was some weeks in recovering. In another instance a little girl, aged five, took daily, for three days, three grains of mercury and chalk powder. Her mouth was severely affected, sloughing ensued, and she died in eight days. In a third case three grains of blue pill given twice a day for three days, making eighteen grains, were ordered for a girl aged nineteen, who complained of a slight pain in her abdomen. Severe salivation supervened; the teeth separated, and she died in twelve days. With respect to the effect of corrosive sublimate, Dr. Christison states that three grains of this substance, in three doses, caused violent salivation. When this state results from the use of mild mercurial medicines in small doses, we must refer the effects to idiosyncrasy. A person may die under these circumstances, either from simple exhaustion or from extensive sloughing of the fauces with exfoliation of the bones. When an individual has recovered from the first effects of acute poisoning by corrosive sublimate, he may die at almost any period from these secondary consequences. It is generally admitted by toxicologists that salivation may be intermittent, i.e. that it may cease and reappear without more mercurial poison, or any mercurial preparation being given in the interim, although such cases are rare. This important question was brought to an issue at the trial of Butterfield, at Croydon, in 1775. The deceased was supposed to have been killed by the administration of small doses of corrosive sublimate; and the fact of his having become salivated at or about the time of the alleged administration, was regarded as a proof of poisoning. In the defence it was urged that the deceased had been salivated for two months previously under a common mercurial course; that although the salivation had ceased for that period, it was probable that this was nothing more than a recurrence of the former; it did not prove that there had been any fresh administration of mercury in the interim. There was a difference of opinion on this point among the witnesses, as there probably would be in the present day, if each relied upon his own individual experience. However, one of the witnesses had known salivation to recur without a fresh exhibition of mercury after the long interval of three months, and the prisoner was acquitted. Cases are reported of salivation recurring even after longer intervals than this. Salivation is a symptom not necessarily connected with the exhibition of mercury, and therefore taken alone, can never furnish evidence of mercurial poisoning. It may come on spontaneously from disease in the salivary organs. It may also be produced by many other substances besides the preparations of mercury. Thus it has been known to follow the use of the preparations of gold, copper, bismuth, lead, iodine, iodide of potassium, croton oil, prussic acid, sulphuric acid, arsenic, and foxglove. Some have asserted that fœtor of the breath, a brassy taste in the mouth, and spongy and ulcerated gums, would indicate the salivation caused by mercury; but these characters have been equally met with in the salivation produced by bismuth.

Corrosive sublimate, as well as other mercurial preparations, is liable to produce gangrene of the mouth and fauces; a state which may equally occur from spontaneous causes; death is commonly the result. In a case of this kind, supposing any mercurial preparation to have been given medicinally, it may become a serious consideration whether death actually resulted from the mercury acting as a poison, or from natural disease. Several fatal cases have occurred within the last few years, among young children; and the subject has become a matter of inquiry before coroners. Salivation and its sequelæ are said not to be common among young children, as an effect of mercurial preparations, except where there is idiosyncrasy; but notwithstanding this, it is clear, from the cases already recited, that small doses of mercury may have a most violent effect on young subjects, and render the suspicion of poisoning probable. Of two children, whose deaths became the subject of investigation under these circumstances, one was affected with hooping-cough, and the other with measles. Powders containing calomel were prescribed in both cases; gangrene of the mouth followed, and the children died. There was some reason to believe, from the evidence, that the mercury had really produced the effect attributed to it, at least in one of the cases. It is proper to observe that this kind of disease, gangrene of the mouth, has been observed to occur in children, to whom no calomel, nor any mercurial preparation whatever, had been administered:—the subjects have been observed to be chiefly young infants, badly fed and clothed, and generally labouring under, or recovering from, fever, smallpox, measles, or hooping-cough. The disease has often been described under the name of cancrum oris. A case occurred in August 1840, in which a charge was made against a medical practitioner of having caused the death of a child, aged four years, by administering an over-dose of some mercurial preparation. The child was labouring under hooping-cough, some medicine was prescribed; but on the fourth day the child complained of soreness of the mouth, the teeth became loose and fell out, the tongue and cheek were very much swollen, and the child died in the course of a very few days from gangrene in the left cheek. The answer to the charge was, that not a particle of mercury had been exhibited, a fact clearly proved by the production of the prescription book of the medical attendant. This, then, was a case where the gangrene proceeded from spontaneous causes; and yet it is almost certain, that had any mercury been proved to exist in the medicine prescribed, a verdict affecting the character of the practitioner would have been returned. Sometimes the case may be of a doubtful nature. A boy, aged three years, while suffering under an attack of measles, took small doses of mercury by the prescription of a physician. Soon after the administration of the medicine the child became worse, the mouth became inflamed, dark, and discoloured, and the teeth dropped out. He died in a few days. A practitioner, who had been called in, pronounced that the child had been excessively salivated. Mercury had undoubtedly been taken, and it was proved that the person who had dispensed the medicine did not weigh it. An inquest was held and a verdict returned that the child had died from an over-dose of mercury. It is worthy of remark, that in cases of this description, the popular opinion is generally supported by that of some medical practitioner, shewing how easily members of the profession, as well as the public, are led to refer the effects to what, in many instances, is only an apparent cause. A child, aged about four years, suffering from hooping-cough, took, according to a prescription obtained from a dispensary, three grains of calomel on the 29th of October; this dose was repeated five times between that date and the 7th of November following. About this time the right cheek became much swollen, and there was great difficulty in opening the mouth, with very offensive breath. The gums and inside of the cheek became ulcerated, and on the 16th a sphacelus appeared on the right cheek of the size of a shilling, which rapidly extended, and the child died on the 28th. In a case recorded by Dr. Christison, where gangrene resulted from mercury, it was observed to occur on the skin, near the mouth on each side: it thence spread over the whole of the cheek and destroyed life in eight days. In general, however, it begins in the mouth or in the throat, and spreads onwards. Besides, it is quite possible that the spontaneous gangrene may present a diffused character. There are no general rules to guide a medical opinion; each case must be judged of by itself. The time of the occurrence of the symptoms, after taking the medicine, may be sometimes a good criterion; but this is not always applicable; for by mere coincidence the symptoms may supervene without being connected with the medicine. Then again, the symptoms may not have been caused, but aggravated by the continued use of mercurials. The fact of the dose of calomel, and other preparation, having been small, is no obstacle to the admission of the view, that it has really caused the gangrene; since cases have been already related, which shew that in certain constitutions small doses of mercury have produced the most alarming and unexpected effects. It is also not improbable, that the diseases under which such subjects have been observed to labour, may aggravate the effects of mercury so administered, and render them more prone to diseases of the salivary organs.

The post mortem appearances are chiefly confined to the alimentary canal. It affects both the mouth and fauces; the mucous membrane is softened, and of a white or bluish-grey colour; that lining the œsophagus is similarly affected, and partially corroded and softened. The mucous membrane of the stomach is more or less inflamed, sometimes in patches, and there are masses of black extravasated blood found beneath it. Occasionally the whole cavity has a slate-grey colour, from the partial decomposition of the poison by the membrane itself; beneath this the mucous coat may be found reddened. This grey tint of the mucous membrane has been considered by some to be indicative o the action of the poison on the lining mucous membrane; but it is not always present. In a recent case at Guy's Hospital, the mucous membrane was simply inflamed, and very much resembled the condition presented in cases of arsenical poisoning.

The coats of the stomach are sometimes corroded and so much softened that they cannot be removed from the body without laceration. Similar appearances have been met with in the small intestines and rectum. Perforation of the stomach is very rare as an effect of this poison; there is, I believe, only one case on record. Certain morbid changes have been found in the urinary and circulating organs; but these are not by any means characteristic of this variety of poisoning. Appearances like those described have been seen, not only where the case has terminated fatally in a few hours, but where it has been protracted for six, eight, and eleven days respectively.

Cases of poisoning by the external application of corrosive sublimate are rare; it acts energetically through the unbroken skin, producing severe local and constitutional symptoms, and even death. Two fatal cases of this kind have been reported by Mr. Ward, of Bodmin. A man, aged twenty-four, rubbed over every part of his body one ounce of corrosive sublimate, mixed with six ounces of hog's lard, for the purpose of curing the itch. In an hour he suffered from excruciating pain in the abdomen, and over the whole of the body; he said he felt roasted alive; he also suffered from intolerable thirst. The skin was found completely vesicated. He died on the eleventh day, having suffered from bloody vomiting, purging, and tenesmus. Ptyalism did not shew itself until thirty-six hours after the application of the poison. The brother of the deceased, aged nineteen, rubbed in the same quantity of the poison. The symptoms were much the same, but more aggravated. There was constant vomiting, with complete suppression of urine, and frequent bloody stools; the ptyalism was not so severe. He died on the fifth day. On inspection the stomach was found much inflamed, and partially ulcerated. The small intestines were also greatly inflamed throughout; and the lower portion of the colon and rectum was in a state of mortification. The bladder was contracted, and without urine. Thirty large worms were found alive in the stomach and intestines.

The quantity of corrosive sublimate required to destroy life is a question which it is somewhat difficult to answer with any degree of certainty, since it is only by accident that the quantity taken can be ascertained. A child, aged three years, died in twenty-three days from the effects of twelve grains of this poison. The smallest dose which has destroyed life was three grains. This was also in the case of a child, and the quantity was accurately determined from the fact of its having been made up by mistake for three grains of calomel, which the physician intended to order. It is probable that from three to five grains would destroy an adult. In its power as a poison it is therefore somewhat similar to arsenic. Persons have been known to recover who had taken very large doses, where remedies were timely administered, or vomiting promoted. In one instance lately recorded in the Journal de Pharmacie, a man recovered in three days after having taken one drachm of the poison; and Dr. Booth mentions a case where an ounce of corrosive sublimate had been swallowed after a full meal; and by timely vomiting the subject of this rash act escaped with comparative impunity.

In an acute case an individual commonly dies in from one to five days. But death may take place much sooner and much later than this. A person has been known to die from the effects of the poison in eleven hours, and in one instance of a child two years old, by whom twelve grains had been taken, death probably occurred in six hours. A case is reported by Niemann, in which a child aged seven was killed in three hours by eighteen grains of corrosive sublimate. The shortest case on record, although the period is only inferential, I believe to be the following, which occurred to Mr. Illingworth. A man, ætat. 30, was found dead on the 4th Dec. 1842, at half-past seven A.M. He had vomited some half-digested food, mixed with blood and mucus. On a shelf near him was a drinking-horn, containing about three drachms of corrosive sublimate. It was ascertained at the inquest that he had died from the effects of this poison. He had put water into the drinking-vessel, and had probably swallowed the poison while thus loosely suspended,—the exact quantity taken could not be ascertained. The deceased was last seen alive at half-past eleven the preceding evening, therefore only eight hours before he was found dead. When discovered, the face, as well as the extremities, was cold. From all the circumstances it was inferred that, even admitting the deceased to have taken the poison immediately after he was last seen alive, he could not have been dead less than six hours. This would carry the duration of the ___ to two hours from the time of taking the poison. There is probably no instance in which the poison has acted with greater rapidity than in this. Mr. Bigsley has published a case which proved fatal in two hours and a half; but the poison was a solution of the nitrate of mercury, not corrosive sublimate. On the other hand, the case may be protracted for several days. The following cases will not only shew this, but will also prove that the time at which the poison destroys life cannot be inferred from the quantity taken. In a case related by Dr. Venables two drachms of the poison killed a woman in eight days; about the same quantity destroyed life in six days in a case that occurred to Mr. Watson, of Edinburgh. In a third, reported by Sobernheim, three drachms did not kill for eleven days; while, in an instance recorded by Niemann, where one ounce of the poison was swallowed, the person did not die until the sixth day.

With regard to the treatment, if vomiting does not already exist, it must be promoted by the exhibition of emetics. Various antidotes have been suggested for this poison, and among these albumen mixed with water is, perhaps, the best fitted to counteract the effects of the poison. This remedy was proposed some time since by Taddei, an Italian chemist; and there are many instances of its efficacy on record. It appears to have had good effects, even when it was not taken until some time after the poison had been swallowed.

A man, aged sixty-eight, swallowed a drachm of corrosive sublimate. The usual symptoms appear to have followed, but he was not seen until about three-quarters of an hour had elapsed. His countenance was pale and anxious; his extremities cold, and the pulse small, hard, and frequent. Emetics were given to him, with the whites of six eggs, and after vomiting violently, he recovered in three days. There was some reason to suppose that the effect of the antidote was aided by the application of other remedial means. These remedies cannot be expected to be always successful. A case is related by Dr. Buckler (of Baltimore) of a young man who took about fifty-five grains of corrosive sublimate in a state of perfect solution, and albumen to the amount of a quart was afterwards administered to him, but nevertheless he died on the eighth day. In all cases, the entire expulsion of the poison from the stomach should be looked to, and the antidote may be given to aid the efforts at vomiting. The use of the stomach-pump is of questionable propriety; since the parietes of the stomach and œsophagus are commonly softened and corroded, so that very slight force in its employment might lead to perforation.

The chemical analysis of this poison, in the solid state, is as follows. It is entirely volatilized at a moderate heat, and in this property only, it resembles arsenic. It is very soluble in water; it is turned of a light scarlet colour by iodide of potassium, and of a yellow colour by potash; but by the hydrosulphuret of ammonia it is turned black. When it is rubbed on a clean surface of copper, with a mixture of one part of muriatic acid and two parts of water, a bright silvery stain is produced, which is entirely volatilized by heat. The metal may be easily reduced by heating it, when mixed, with three or four parts of carbonate of soda. Mercury is the only metal which is sublimed in globules, and therefore the experiment of reduction completely establishes the nature of this metal.

Corrosive sublimate is very soluble in water, forming a clear solution, which, when concentrated, has a faintly acid reaction, and a strong metallic taste. A small quantity of the solution may be first gently evaporated on a slip of glass, and then set to crystallize. If it be corrosive sublimate, it forms slender opaque, silky prisms, sometimes of considerable length, and intersecting each other. When a solution of iodide of potassium is dropped on them, they acquire a bright scarlet colour, and chloride of potassium is formed. These characters distinguish it from every other mineral poison, and all other substances whatever.

We resume our notice of this publication, before necessarily brief, limiting it chiefly to illustrative extracts. As of practical utility to our readers, we take two or three of the notes on leading cases.

TIME FOR THE DELIVERY OF GOODS.

Startup v. M'Donald (7 Scott, N.R. 269).

Wherever the terms of a contract are silent as to the time when goods are to be delivered or payment made, the law has long implied that such delivery or payment shall be within a reasonable time, leaving it as a question of fact, to be gathered from the circumstances of each case, what a reasonable time may be. (Co. Lit. 56 b.) Where the question of time has been left wholly open by the express terms of the contract, the law has been ever explicit to this effect, and exempt from judicial doubt, as in the cases of Ellis v. Thompson (3 M. & W. 445), Greaves v. Ashlin (3 Camp. 426), and very many others. But where the time of delivery has been generally though not definitely specified, as for instance, where the month or week, but not the day or hour, has been stated, and where the precise time was in question, more exact rules have obtained, and it is difficult to loosen the law from the terse rule in Bac. Abridg. (Tender, D), that delivery or tender must be made at "the uttermost convenient time" of the last day; and that "a tender is not good unless there be, after it is made, time enough, before the sun sets, to examine and tell the money, or to examine and take account of the goods; for if a man should be compelled to receive either money or goods in the dark, there would be great danger of his being imposed upon." And it has been also laid down in the old books, and acted upon in constant practice, that the party receiving the goods or money, is not bound to wait or attend at the proper place, for the delivery or tender of either, after such reasonable time shall have elapsed, although the day itself shall not have terminated. (Wade's case, Shep. Touch. 135.) And in all cases the law has regarded a tender at such time and place equivalent to performance and actual delivery. Questions of the time or place for the tender of rent and the presentment of bills are governed in great measure by customs which are amply definite (Com. Dig. Temps. D.E.F.); but do not affect the point mooted in Startup v. M'Donald, of which the chief facts and the decision were as follows.

An action of assumpsit was brought to recover damages for the non-acceptance of ten tuns of oil pursuant to contract. The jury found, by special verdict, that "the plaintiffs, on the 31st March, 1838, at the hour of half-past eight in the night of the said day, the said 31st of March being a Saturday, did tender and offer to deliver to the defendant, in the city of London, the ten tuns of oil in the declaration mentioned; that from the said hour when the said ten tuns of oil were so tendered and offered to the defendant, there was full and sufficient time, before twelve o'clock of the said 31st of March, for the plaintiff to deliver, and for the defendant to examine and weigh, and to receive into his possession the whole of the said tuns of oil." There was then a finding of a tender by the plaintiff, and a refusal by the defendant, who alleged "that the said hour of the said tender was a late, and by reason thereof, an unreasonable hour in that behalf" (the words of the second plea). The jury then found, in the same terms, that the said hour of half-past eight "was a late, and, by reason of its lateness, an unreasonable and improper time of that day for the tender and delivery of the said oil," and that there had been no earlier tender. A judgment in favour of the defendant was obtained in the Common Pleas (reported in 2 Scott, 480), and that judgment was reversed in error; Patteson, J., Williams J., Parke, B., Alderson, B., Gurney, B., and Rolfe, B. for the reversal; and Denman, C. J. for the affirmation of the judgment of the court below. It was held by this majority of judges, that the vendor on his part is bound to make tender at an hour which leaves a sufficient period in point of time to complete the performance of delivery and acceptance within the last day prescribed by the contract. That, furthermore, the vendee is not bound to wait for such tender of performance beyond the usual hours of mercantile business, or at any other than the place where the contract ought to be performed; so that if the tender were offered after the vendee had retired to rest, he would not be bound to get up to enable the vendor to perform his contract at an unreasonable hour; nor would he, the vendee, be guilty of default by absenting himself from the place of tender after such customary hours of business had closed; but that if the vendor had the good fortune to meet the vendee at the proper place, though after the close of such period, yet in sufficient time to complete the delivery and acceptance, and enable the vendee to examine the goods, the tender is good, the impropriety or unreasonableness of the hour notwithstanding; and that the vendee is bound under such circumstances to accept the goods so offered, and is liable in damages for refusing to do so. It was also laid down by Mr Baron Parke, "that where a thing is to be done anywhere, a tender a convenient time before midnight is sufficient. Where the thing is to be done at a particular place, and where the law implies a duty on the party to whom the thing is to be done to attend, that attendance is to be by daylight, and a convenient time before sunset." This distinction is, however, clearly operative only as to the duty of attendance, not of acceptance, when tender is made at the proper place, though at an improper time. Lord Denman, C. J. on the other hand, held, that "there ought to be opportunity as well as time. The known habits (his lordship remarked) of the contracting parties may be taken into the account. Supposing it to be clear that such delivery cannot be made without a certain force of labourers to receive and stow away the goods, and it is notorious that all labourers employed in that trade left their work at an earlier hour than that of the tender, I think a tender after that hour would be unreasonable;" and this especially "where the question is as to the delivery of bulky goods in a great commercial community, notoriously conducting its operations by certain rules known among all merchants."

The result of this decision must be regarded as introducing a relaxation of the law which governs the specific performance of the contracts in question. Delivery or tender is now complete, wherever performance and acceptance are physically possible, within the uttermost time limited by the contract, without regard to the convenience of trade, or the ordinary observance of business hours. The right, however, so to complete a contract clearly depends upon the accident of finding the vendee upon the spot. Mr. Baron Alderson expressly says,—"In this case the plaintiffs have had the good fortune to meet the defendant;" and on this chance the law turns. In the same judgment it is stated that "the party, therefore, who does not make his tender at that usual place, or during those usual hours, runs a great risk of not being able to make it at all. If the vendee be present, and the tender of goods be personally made as stated, the tender is complete, and an action lies for non-acceptance; but if he be not present, no action will lie against him for non-acceptance, but he will have, on the contrary, his remedy against the vendor for non-delivery.

This case may be noted in Chitty on Contracts, 3rd edit. pp. 108, 730.

EXECUTION OF A WRIT AGAINST THE GOODS OF A PARTNERSHIP.

JOHNSON and ANOTHER v. EVANS and ANOTHER (1 Dowl. & Lowndes, 935).

The equitable rights of partners inter se, and the claims of creditors of the partnership, have rendered the position of a judgment creditor against one partner, and the course which he should pursue, somewhat difficult to define with absolute certainty. It has however been generally understood, notwithstanding the doubt thrown out by Lord Tenterden in Burton v. Green (3 C. & P. 306), that the sheriff, under a fi. fa. against one partner, was bound to seize the whole of the partnership goods, and that by the seizure he became tenant in common with the other partner; and after he had sold the undivided moiety, the vendee became tenant in common in a similar manner. The law was laid down by Holt, C.J. in Heydon v. Heydon (Salk. 392), as follows:—"If he seizes but a moiety, and sell that, the other will have a right to a moiety of that moiety; but he must seize the whole and sell a moiety undivided, and the vendee will be tenant in common with the other partner." And in Jacky v. Butler (2 Ld. Raym. 871), it is said—"The property in the other moiety is not affected by the judgment nor by the execution." The practical bearing of this was exemplified in Bachurst v. Clinkard (1 Show. 173), in which a return of nulla bona was held to be false to a writ against one Dyke, partner with Brown and others, although the partnership goods had already been seized under a fi. fa. against Brown. This view was supported by Chapman v. Koops (3 B. & P. 290), and Fox v. Hanbury (Cowp. 449), and adopted by the Court of Common Pleas in the principal case.

But it is the clear rule of law, that a seizure by the sheriff under any one of several writs in his possession, is a seizure under all, and the proceeds must be applied according to the order in which the writs are delivered, and that no distinct seizure is necessary for each. (Drewe v. Lainson, 11 A. & E. 531; and as to ca. sa. see Barrack v. Newton, 1 Q. B. 525.) Now the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, protects all executions, not being under judgments upon warrants of attorney, executed by seizure of the goods before the fiat; and in Johnson v. Evans (1 Dowl. & Lowndes, 935), it became necessary to apply both these principles under the following circumstances.

Innes and Bracher were partners. Under a fi. fa. against Innes, the partnership goods were seized on November 22nd, 1839. A judgment, in an action adversely commenced against both partners, was obtained, and a fi. fa. issued thereon upon the 30th of November. A writ of fi. fa. was lodged with the sheriff, who made out a warrant thereon, directed to another officer, and not to the one in possession. Under this warrant no seizure was made, the law, as above stated, being probably supposed to render it unnecessary. On the 9th of December a fiat against both partners was issued; and upon the sheriff satisfying both writes out of the proceeds of the sale, which took place after the fiat, the assignees brought trover against him for the undivided moiety of the goods seized on the 23rd of November belonging to Bracher, and thereby liable to the partnership debts, on the ground that there had been no seizure to bring the case within the protection of the Act. A verdict was found for the assignees, with leave to the defendants to move for a nonsuit, upon the ground that the seizure was sufficient. The judgment was delivered in last Hilary vacation by Tindal, C. J. after the Court had taken time to consider, in favour of the assignees. The principles above laid down were reconciled by the consideration, that the seizure of the whole of the partnership effects was ex necessitate rei, because one partner had no distinct interest in any portion, but in an undivided moiety of the whole, and that consequently there was no change of property by the seizure of that undivided moiety which belonged to the solvent partner; and as the property in chattels draws to it the possession, the possession of the undivided moiety, not liable under the first writ, also continued in him. The statute meant "a real and substantial seizure for the purpose of satisfying the execution by actual sale," and here no portion claimed by the assignees could have been applied to the payment of the judgment debt against Innes; and consequently; that as there had been no actual seizure by the sheriff under the second writ, the assignees were entitled to recover in this action.

This case plainly points out, that the course in future to be adopted to secure the fruits of a judgment against a partnership, is to take care that a seizure is actually made upon the goods under the writ, and not to be satisfied with the delivery of the writ to the sheriff. It will also be the sheriff's duty in such cases to render the writ effectual by an actual seizure.

This case may be noted in Chitty's Archbold, p. 453, and Montagu & Ayrton's Bankruptcy, vol. 1, p. 765.

NECROLOGY.

THE EARL OF EGREMONT.

We have to announce the death of the Earl of Egremont, which event took place at his seat, Silverton Park, Devon, on the evening of the 2nd instant, after a short illness of eight days. Indeed, till the 31st ultimo, but little apprehension of any danger was entertained. George Wyndham, Earl of Egremont, Baron Cockermouth, and a baronet, was born in Aug. 1785. He succeeded his uncle, the late earl, Nov. 11, 1837; married Nov. 14, 1820, Jane, third daughter of the late Rev. Wm. Roberts, Vice Provost of Eton College, and Rector of Warplesdown, Surrey, but has no issue, and his titles are extinct. His lordship was son of the Hon. William Frederick Wyndham, the youngest brother of the late earl. He was a captain in the navy, having entered the service in 1799; lieutenant in 1806; commander in 1810; and captain in 1812. Was midshipman in his Majesty's ship Canopus, in Sir John Duckworth's action, off St. Domingo, February 1806; commanded his Majesty's sloop Hawke from 1810 to 1812; and commanded his Majesty's ship Bristol from 1812 to the end of 1814, in the Mediterranean, and at the siege of Tarragona.

The title thus become extinct was granted in 1749. The Wyndham family, however, is one of great antiquity, the descent being from Ailwardus, who, soon after the Norman conquest, was possessed of lands in Wymondham, in the county of Norfolk, from whom sprung Sir John Wyndham, of Crownthorpe and Fellbrigge, in the same county, who was knighted at the battle of Stoke, and was beheaded for his adherence to the house of York, on the 6th of May, 1503. His son, Sir Thomas Wyndham, died in 1512, leaving issue two sons, the youngest of whom, Sir John, married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of John Sydenham, of Orchard, county of Somerset, esq., and died in 1575, leaving four sons and four daughters. John, the eldest of these, died in his father's lifetime, leaving by his wife Florence, daughter of John, and sister and co-heiress of Nicholas Wadham, of Merrifield, county of Somerset, esq., an only son, Sir John Woodham, knt., who married Joan, daughter of Sir Hugh Portman, of Orchard, knight, and died in 1641, leaving nine sons and six daughters. Thomas, the third of these sons, was the ancestor of the Wyndhams of Crownthorpe, county of Norfolk; Humphrey, the fourth, was ancestor of the Wyndhams of Dunraven Castle, county of Glamorgan, and Clearwell, county of Gloucester; and the eighth, Sir George, was the ancestor of the Wyndhams of Cromer, county of Norfolk. Sir William Wyndham, the celebrated statesman, married first, Catherine, second daughter of Charles Duke of Somerset, in 1708. In October, 1749, Algernon, the seventh Duke of Somerset, was created Baron of Cockermouth and Earl of Egremont, with remainder to his nephews, Sir Charles Wyndham, bart., and Percy O'Brien Wyndham, sons of his sister Catherine, wife of Sir William Wyndham, before mentioned. Pursuant to the patent, on the death of the duke, without issue, on the 7th February, 1750, these titles devolved on the first-named nephew, Charles, the second earl, and grandfather of George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, who died in November 1837, and was succeeded by George Francis, now deceased.

SALE BY AUCTION OF THE FLEET PRISON.—On the 4th instant the sale of the first portion of the Fleet Prison took place in the front yard adjoining the governor's house, by order of the corporation of London, Mr. Pullen, jun. officiating as auctioneer. The lots disposed of consisted of the fittings-up and the materials of the governor's house, the strong room, the kitchen, and the various out-buildings of the prison. The lots sold fetched remarkably high prices; for instance, the bricks composing the governor's house sold for near 300*l*.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Friday, March 14.

Re COVENTRY CHARITIES.

Two petitions—Practice—Right to begin—Title petition.

A petition in the matter of these charities had been presented, on which the Vice-Chancellor of England had made an order which was appealed from. The respondents had also presented an original petition in this court, which had been opened.

Wakefield, for the appellants.

James Parker, for the respondents.

The question was who should begin, and the Lord Chancellor decided that Mr. Wakefield ought to go on.

Parker then objected that the petition was entitled only in Sir Samuel Romilly's Act, and that it ought to have been also entitled in the Municipal Corporations Act.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The petition must be presented under the Municipal Corporations Act, and therefore the petition will require amendment, and it must stand over for that purpose. The question is, whether the fiat of the Attorney-General is necessary before the petition can be presented at all.

Re · RAILWAY.

Costs of application under a railway Act.

Neate supported a petition for payment out of court of a sum of money which had been paid by the railway company for settled land of the petitioner taken under the powers of an Act of Parliament, and paid into court during the petitioner's infancy. The petitioner had come of age, and had executed a disentailing deed. He asked for the costs of this application against the railway company.

Osborne, for the railway company, contended that the Act of Parliament did not authorize the payment of these costs by the company. The only applications of the purchase-money of land belonging to infants taken by the company which the Act authorized were, first, in paying off incumbrances; secondly, in redeeming the land-tax; and, thirdly, in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses. An interim investment was directed until either of the above objects could be effected, and the company was bound to pay the costs of the requisite proceedings. But the Act did not contemplate the executing a disentailing deed, and therefore the present application was one not provided for by the Act.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the petitioner is entitled to have the money out of court, he is also entitled to his costs from the company. He has acquired the absolute interest.

Osborne.—But the Court is not at liberty to go beyond the express terms of the Act of Parliament in directing the company to pay costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Act directs the payment by the company of the reasonable expenses of a purchase, and of the reinvestment of the purchase-money in land, together with the costs, charges, and expenses of obtaining such reinvestment. Here an investment has been made by the purchase of other securities, and it is proper that an order should be made for the expenses of other proceedings necessary to render those securities available, as for the payment of the dividends. If the money had been taken out for the purpose of purchasing land, the company must have paid the costs. Now the petitioner cannot get this money out of court, he cannot get that to which he is entitled without an application to the Court which must occasion further expense, and which it is fair the company should pay.

Osborne.—The Act does not contemplate the tenant in tail disentailing his money and coming to have it out of court. The Vice-Chancellor of England held the words to be limited.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Act contemplates the payment of money out of court, and the words are general. This comes within the reason, and the justice of the thing requires that all the costs should be paid by the company. Ordered.

Re TWEEDIE.

Conveyance under 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, by the infant heir of trustee of lands in a colony—Evidence of colonial law.

Hallett supported a petition praying that a person might be appointed under the Act 1 Wm. 4, c. 46, s. 8, to convey to a new trustee lands in Demerara which had been vested in G. B. Whitehead as a trustee. Whitehead had died, and, by the law of Demerara, his son and his two daughters constituted his heir, to whom the legal estate had descended. By the 29th section of the Act it was expressly provided that the powers and authorities given by the Act to the Court of Chancery in England should extend to all land and stock within the dominions, plantations, and colonies belonging to the crown (except Scotland). There is also a similar clause in the Lunacy Act. The two daughters of Whitehead were in England, and the son was in France, and all parties concurred in appointing Dr. Tweedie as the new trustee. The Master had found that the deceased Mr. Whitehead was a trustee within the meaning of the Act, and had found that Mr. Hyde was a proper person to convey. The petition prayed the confirmation of the Master's report.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Some evidence should be produced to satisfy me what is the law in Demerara, and assuming it to be as stated in this petition, the order may be made under this Act. Let an affidavit on the point be made by some person competent to speak positively to the law of the colony. The petition must stand over for that purpose.

Hallett cited Re Welsh in Lunacy (3 Mylne & Craig, 292).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What have I to shew what is the law of Demerara? It appears that part of the property consisted of slaves, and I must have an affidavit to shew that slaves were deemed real property in Demerara, and that, on the death of Whitehead, the real property would vest in his son and two daughters as heir; and what is the proper mode of conveyance. The case you referred to, R. Welch, seemed to relate to the interest of the lunatic in the trust funds, and the Lord Chancellor said that that part of the Act which related to such cases was obscure. Petition to stand over.

Re WHARTON, a Lunatic.

Whether surplus money produced by the sale of lunatic's real estate under the act for payment of debts belonged to the heir-at-law or next of kin?—Conviction of heir-at-law.

Rogers supported a petition by the heir-at-law of the deceased lunatic for a reference to inquire whether the heir-at-law or the administrator was entitled to the surplus proceeds of an estate sold for payment of the lunatic's debts. The father of the heir-at-law, the petitioner, had been convicted of horse-stealing in 1820 and transported, but corruption of blood in cases of felony was now taken away.

Loraf, for a creditor of the heir-at-law, asked for a stop order, which was not objected to. The reference must be to inquire who is the heir-at-law of the lunatic, and whether the lunatic and his late heir, the petitioner's father, died intestate.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Who will be parties to that reference? How can such an ex parte proceeding decide a question of title? How can I with propriety make the order?

Rogers.—There is no defendant; if the real estate had not been sold, an ejectment might have been brought to try the title, but that is now impossible. The father of the petitioner has been found to have been the eldest brother of the lunatic.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There must be advertisements for the heir-at-law; there cannot be any thing more done. Reference ordered.

Re STUART, a Lunatic.

Committee's accounts—Practice in lunacy.

The late Lord Carhampton was the committee of the person of this lunatic. Sir Simeon Stuart, the committee of the estate, was abroad, had not passed his accounts for many years, and consequently had been suspended; and a receiver of the lunatic's estate had been appointed ad interim. The commissioner had reported that Mrs. Long, the lunatic's granddaughter, was a proper person to be appointed committee of the person, and that Mr. Smith was fit to be appointed receiver of the estate. The allowance for the maintenance of the lunatic was 2,000*l.* a year, the rents of her real estate amounted to 2,500*l.*, and she was also entitled to the dividends of a fund in court in a pending cause. A further sum for maintenance was sought.

Pole, for Wm. Stuart, one of the next of kin, urged that no further allowance ought to be made.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I never knew a case in which such neglect had taken place as in this lunacy. There had been no inquiry as to the lunatic's property. The petition suggests that nothing has been accounted for, and nothing done for years. There has been so much neglect, and so much misconduct in the affairs of the lunacy, that it must come before the Court as if for the first time. There must be an inquiry as to what the lunatic's property consists of, and what is the proper sum to be allowed for maintenance.

Re JOHN SMITH.

Lunatic trustee, not found lunatic by commission—Joint trustee.

A reference had been made to inquire whether John Smith, a person of unsound mind, but not found so by commission, was a trustee within the Act of 1 Wm. 4, c. 60. The report stated that he was such a trustee for part of the estate, but did not say for whom.

Rogers, for the petitioner.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The petition must be amended.

Re SMITH, a Lunatic.

Sale without a reference—Practice in lunacy.

Blunt supported a petition to confirm the sale of a leasehold estate of the lunatic without a previous reference to the commissioner. The lunatic was a publican in Golden-square, and after the death of his wife the business had been carried on by the eldest son, but he was losing the business. The lease had only produced 500*l.* and the only other property of the lunatic consisted of his stock in trade. The commissioner was unable to say what sum should be allowed for maintenance, but it was asked that 1*l.* 3*s.* per week should be allowed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the profits do not amount to that sum, then the whole profits must be allowed. The costs must stand over.

Re CLARKE, a Lunatic.

Allowance to lunatic's family—Costs.

Rasch supported a petition to confirm the commissioner's report that 2,000*l.* a year was fit to be allowed for the maintenance of the lunatic and his family. The report apportioned the application of the amount. One of the sons, Thomas, had 100*l.* a year allotted to him.

Geldart, for some of the parties, opposed the allowance of Thomas's costs, upon the ground that his conduct in the matter of the lunacy had been litigious.

Phillips, for Thomas Clark.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There is a considerable property, much more than sufficient to pay the living of the lunatic. The rest of the family receiving an interest under this report should not object to pay Thomas's costs.

Wednesday, April 9.

FRISBY v. STAFFORD.

Extension of time for payment of money into court—Contempt—Terms—Practice.

Tinney, for the defendant, applied to extend the time fixed by the decree in this cause for payment into court of a sum of money. The defendant's solicitor stated that he was engaged in raising the money by mortgage, but that owing to the length of the abstracts and other temporary difficulties, the money could not be obtained by the appointed day.

Teed and Freeling, contrà.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The affidavit should mention the name of the person who is about to advance the money, and that such person is ready to make the advance on a good title being shewn. The other side might then have an opportunity of contradicting that statement.

Freeling, for the plaintiff, then offered, that on the defendant consenting to the plaintiff being in the same situation as at present with respect to attachment on the expiration of the extended time, the required time should be given.

Ordered, and that the costs of the present application be paid by the defendant.

Friday, April 11.

Re CLARKE, Ex parte BUCKLEY.

Proof on promissory note—Joint and several liability—Banker's notes—Signing partner—Agency—Costs—The case of Hall v. Smith.

Where a banker signs a promissory note for himself and all the other members of his firm, although the form of the note is "I promise to pay bearer on demand, &c." it would, in the absence of decision, looking at the object and intent of the transaction, be a joint obligation of the whole firm, and not a separate liability of the signing partner: that, consequently, on the bankruptcy of the bankers, the holder of a note could not prove against the separate estate of the signing partner.

But the case of Hall v. Smith is an express decision of the Court of King's Bench to the contrary: and, therefore, the Lord Chancellor, though expressing a strong opinion, would not decide contrary to Hall v. Smith, without sending a case for the opinion of a court of law.

This was a special case stated in bankruptcy by way of appeal from the Court of Review. A fiat in bankruptcy had issued against John Clarke, Richard Mitchell, Joseph Phillips, and Thomas Smith, who were bankers at Leicester, under which Mr. Buckley, the petitioner, as holder of several promissory notes of the firm, sought to prove against the separate estate of Richard Mitchell, who had signed the note. It was in this form:—

"Leicester and Leicestershire Bank.

"I promise to pay bearer on demand five pounds, here or at Messrs. Deacon, Labouchere, Thornton, and Co. bankers, London; value received.—For John Clarke, Richard Mitchell, Joseph Phillips, and Thos. Smith. (Signed) "RICHARD MITCHELL."

The Commissioner admitted the proof as against the separate estate of Richard Mitchell, upon the authority of the case of Hall v. Smith (1 Barnewall & Cresswell, 407); but upon a petition by the assignees to the Court of Review, the proof was ordered to be expunged.

James Russell and Daniel, for the admission of the proof, relied upon the case of Hall v. Smith, and contended that the liability of Mitchell upon the notes which he had signed, was a several liability, and he alone might have been sued upon it when solvent. The case in the Court of Review had been decided by Sir George Rose, who held that, as between themselves, Mitchell was only a surety for the others, and that in administering the estate in bankruptcy the contract must be so dealt with, no demand of payment having been made before the bankruptcy.

The Lord Chancellor.—If a note in the same form had been signed by all the partners, each would have been liable.

Russell.—That is clear. (Clayton v. Gosling, 3 Barn. & Cres.) No demand was necessary to give a right against any estate administered under that bankruptcy. The notion that Mitchell, who signed the note, being a surety for his partners, taken up by Sir George Rose, was a surprise on all sides. (Sayer v. Clator, Lutwyche Rep. 696; March v. Ward, Peake's Nisi Prius Cases, 130.) In the latter case the note was substantially in the same form as the present, but signed by both parties, and it was held to be several as well as joint. If the note had been signed by two or more, each person signing would have been severally liable. The case of Hall v. Smith was referred to in a note to Bayley on Bills in the last edition published by Mr. Francis Bayley, the son of Mr. Justice Bayley, one of the judges who decided Hall v. Smith, and that note was taken from the learned judge's own note. In Lee v. Niron (1 Ad. & Ell. 204), and several other modern cases, Hall v. Smith had been cited as a sound authority. Suretyship is out of the question between the holder of the note and any of the estates of the bankrupt firm.

M. D. Hill and Cankrien for the assignees, contended that Hall v. Smith was contrary to principle, and was not in harmony with the commercial law of the rest of the world. In Story on Partnership the writer, after commenting upon that case, says, "this construction goes to the very verge of the law, and, perhaps, may be thought to deserve further consideration." This is the joint note of the firm.

The Lord Chancellor.—I don't think you cannot say Mr. Story objects to the case of Hall v. Smith so far as it relates to a separate liability, but as to its operation as a joint note. The point under consideration was whether it was a joint note.

Hill.—At that time it was settled law that it was a joint note. The notes of the Bank of England are in precisely the same form, only they are signed by a clerk; and it is a mere accident that the agent who in this case signed on behalf of the firm was himself a partner. In signing the note he acted as a mere agent for the firm. If an agent discloses the name of his principal, and if he had authority from his principal to enter into a contract, the agent will not be personally liable in any form of action. (Hall v. Ashurst, in Crompton & Meeson's Reports.) Here Mitchell signed the note only as agent; he had no other power to bind the firm.

The Lord Chancellor.—The liability depends upon the grammatical construction of the words, in conjunction with the intention of the parties.

Hill.—It would be contrary to the intention of the parties to hold the signing partner severally liable. If it is a joint note of the firm, it cannot be a several liability. If the agent promises for principal and has authority, he may rightly say, "I promise to pay," because that is according to the fact; and should I say, "We promise to pay," it would be speaking according to the legal effect.

The Lord Chancellor.—The last edition of Mr. Justice Bayley's book on Bills, which contains a reference to Hall v. Smith, was published in his lifetime, and he revised the notes, which shews that he adhered to that decision.

Hill.—It may be so; it nevertheless is contrary to principle.

The Lord Chancellor.—Is there any case in which Hall v. Smith has ever been called in question? It is difficult for me to overrule a decision which is directly in point.

Hill.—That case has not been approved of by the Profession. The mistake the judges there made was resting on the words of promise; but every agent promises; the question is, what does he promise? He does not promise to pay, but that his principal shall pay. (Lord Galway v. Mathew.)

The Lord Chancellor.—When I first read the note, the construction I put upon it was this:—"I, acting for Clarke, Mitchell, Philips, and Smith, promise to pay." I was not aware of the case of Hall v. Smith.

Hill.—Sir George Rose said the credit had been given to the firm, the value received for the note went to the firm, and asked whether, in such a state of things, the holder of the note was to prove against the separate estate; and neither does insolvency or bankruptcy of the firm excuse the holder from presenting his note.

The Lord Chancellor.—I shall state a case for the opinion of a court of law. My impression was, and is now, that it is a promise by Mitchell for the firm of which he was a member. I confess that if the case of Hall v. Smith had not been in existence, I should have decided this to have been a partnership debt; but I think I ought not to overrule that case, which has been decided so many years ago, and which has since remained unquestioned, without sending a case to a court of law.

Russell.—This being a question between two separate classes of creditors, the expense of the case ought to be borne by the estate.

The Lord Chancellor.—Let it be so. A case must be stated for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer: it is sent for the purpose of reviewing the case of Hall v. Smith.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Friday, March 14.

Samuel v. Samuel.

Will—Executory gift—Issue—Settlement for the sole use of females.

A testator, A. P. by his will appointed his executors to be guardians of his children until they should each severally attain the age of twenty-five years. He then directed that all property of whatsoever kind he might be possessed of, or which might accrue to his estate, to be equally divided among his four children, share and share alike. The testator then directed as follows:—"All moneys inherited by my daughters under this will shall be placed in the hands of trustees appointed by their guardians to be settled on them for the sole use of themselves and their lawful issue." One of the daughters having attained her age of twenty-five years, being unmarried, petitioned the Court (a suit having been already instituted by the executors) to have her interest declared by the Court. Held, that she was absolutely entitled to her share.

The testator Alfred Phillips, by his will bearing date the 10th of June, 183 , constituted, nominated, and appointed Mr. Philip Samuel and Mr. Deni Moses Samuel to be his lawful executors for all purposes, and guardians to his children until they should each severally attain the age of twenty-five years, which age, he declared, should constitute their majority. He then directed his executors to execute certain trusts with reference to his business. The testator then willed as follows:—"I hereby declare that I desire all property of whatsoever kind I may be possessed of, or which may accrue to my estate, to be equally divided among my four children, share and share alike, in the manner hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, that whenever my partner, Mr. D. M. Samuel, shall think fit to pay any money into the hands of my executors, such money shall be invested in any manner they shall think fit, for the benefit of my children; and I hereby give my executors unlimited power and control over the management of such property, and I desire that my daughters do not marry during their minority without the consent of their guardians had in writing; and I authorize them to give to each of my daughters such sum of money as dowry as they shall think fit; and in case that either of my daughters shall marry without the consent of her guardians before she shall attain the age of twenty-five years, she shall only be entitled to one half or moiety of her quarter share of my estate: and I hereby direct that all moneys inherited by my daughters under this will shall be placed in the hands of trustees appointed by their guardians, to be settled on them for the sole use of themselves and their lawful issue." The testator died very shortly after the execution of his will, and, under the circumstances, it was thought advisable to have the estate, which consisted of personalty only, administered under the direction of the Court. Accordingly a friendly bill was filed by one of the executors against his co-executor and the testator's children for that purpose; pending the suit, sums of money were paid into court to the amount of nearly 80,000*l.* to the credit of the cause. When Margaret, the eldest daughter of the testator, arrived at the age of twenty-one years, she petitioned the Court for the purpose of having it declared that she was absolutely entitled to one-fourth part of the moneys already paid in, as before stated. The Court made an order upon that petition for the payment of the dividends upon such one-fourth part to Margaret, without prejudice to the question raised by her petition, until the Court should further direct. The petitioner, however, having now attained her testamentary majority of twenty-five years, and being still a spinster, again presented her petition, praying that it might be declared that she was absolutely entitled to her share of the trust moneys, and that the same might be transferred into her own name, or that a reference might be made to the Master to approve of a proper settlement.

Swanston, Cooper, and Tripp appeared in support of the petition.—If the testator had said nothing about the settlement, but the bequest had been made to the daughter direct, it is manifest that she would have taken an absolute interest; and had there been nothing executory, the word "issue" must have had its own legal operation as a word of limitation. Where questions of this description arise upon a will, they are distinguishable from those springing out of a marriage settlement, for, in the latter instance, the issue of the marriage take their settled interests as purchasers, but in the case of a will they take as simple volunteers. Moreover, where the terms of a trust are well defined, there is no distinction in their construction, whether the trust be executed or only executory. In the present case the petitioner takes an absolute interest, for the words are perfectly clear and unambiguous. The sole reason for the testator interposing a trust for the separate use of his daughters was for the protection of their respective shares from the control of their husbands. There is not, according to the true construction of the will, any authority to make a settlement except it should happen that any one of the daughters should marry under twenty-five. Lastly, the trustees are to be appointed by the guardians, whose office is but temporary, and will expire with each daughter as she attains her age of twenty-five years. Whatever is done therefore in regard to any settlement must take place during the period of minority fixed by the testator.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I must look at the mere legal effect of the words and decide accordingly. Suppose now the testator had said that when any money shall come into the hands of his executors they should invest it for the only benefit of his daughter Margaret, thus confining the bequest to a single daughter, the subsequent passage of the will would stand in the singular number as follows—"to be settled on her for the sole use of herself and her lawful issue;" this would give it to her. I am therefore of opinion that Margaret is absolutely entitled to her share in the money.

ROLLS COURT.

Feb. 26 and 27, and March 3.

Connolly v. Butcher.

Will—Construction—Maintenance—Contribution of legatees to payment of debts.

A testator gives to his wife "the goodwill of a public-house, stock, &c. for the use of herself and her daughter, subject to the trusts that she and the daughter should live together, and that the wife should take charge and see to the maintenance and support of her daughter during her minority, with the advice of his executor, and if she disposed of the place, she should adopt the best means which might seem expedient for the future maintenance of the daughter during minority."

Held, that though the daughter married and left the mother under age, she was nevertheless entitled to something for her support till twenty-one.

The testator in the cause gave to his wife, Elizabeth Hersey, the goodwill of the Blue Pig public-house in St. Mary Axe, the stock in hand of fixtures, furniture, and household goods for the use of his said wife and his daughter, Sarah Hersey, but subject to the trusts that his said wife and daughter should live together, and that his said wife should take charge of and see to the maintenance and support of his daughter during her minority, with the advice of the plaintiff, Hugh Connolly (whom with his wife he appointed executor); and if his said wife should dispose of the Blue Pig, he desired that the plaintiff and his said wife should act jointly, and adopt the best means which might seem expedient to them for the future maintenance of his daughter during her minority. And he gave his daughter 330*l.* in the hands of his brewers, to be placed in the funds till his daughter attained twenty-one, and then disposed of for her advantage, as might be expedient. Also he gave 105*l.* in the funds to be transferred to the names of his wife and Connolly, and the dividends to be applied for the maintenance of his daughter till twenty-one, and then the principal to be divided between his sons William and Thomas. Also 100*l.* to his wife for the support of herself and her daughter. The testator died in Feb. 1829. Mrs. Hersey afterwards married Butcher, a defendant, and Miss Hersey married one Farrell before attaining twenty-one. A suit being instituted for the administration of the estate, it was found that the assets were insufficient, after payment of debts, to satisfy the legacies, which were accordingly liable to contribute proportionably to make up the deficit, which was a sum agreed upon. The principal question, however, was as to the bequest to Mrs. Butcher and Mrs. Farrell. And the cause now came on for argument.

Kindersley, Boston, Roupell, Willcock, and Purvis, for the different parties.

The following cases were cited: Robinson v. Tickell (8 Ves. 142); Jubber v. Jubber (9 Sim. 503); Gilbert v. Bennett (10 Sim. 371); De Witte v. De Witte (11 Sim. 41); Wood v. Wood (1 Myl. & Cr. 401); Wood v. Richardson (4 Beav. 174); Wetherell v. Wilson (1 Keen, 80); Pride v. Fooks (2 Beav. 430); Longmore v. Elcum (2 Y. & C. C.C. 363); Foley v. Parry (2 Myl. & K 138); Camden v. Benson (4 Law J. N.S. 256).

The Master of the Rolls.—This will disposes of the property almost all in specific legacies. The testator left a widow, two sons, and a daughter; but the wife and daughter seem to be the principal objects of his bounty. First he gives the house, &c. to his wife, for the use of her and her daughter. Something, one would think, the daughter took by those words; but the drawer of the will was very inaccurate. Then follows the direction that the wife shall take charge of the daughter, and if the wife should dispose of the house, &c.—shewing that she might—she should adopt the most expedient means for maintaining the daughter during minority, and so on. The will was proved by the widow and Connolly, and there being no assets to pay debts, the suit was instituted to ascertain the debts, &c. It would appear that the wife disposed of the first and last legacies at her pleasure, and that the debts were to be paid out of the specific legacies. First, the debts and the costs of this suit, so expedient and necessary for the protection of the plaintiff, ought to be paid by the partakers of the testator's bounty. The contest is as to the surplus after the contribution by the first and last legacies of the will. Now, I think it is not intended that the wife should have the legacies, subject to the support of the daughter till marriage only. There is something more than in the case of Camden v. Benson, because of the words following the use, viz. "subject to the trust." The daughter is to have maintenance up to twenty-one, though married. I put no faith in Pride v. Fooks, it is no authority. This case is such that I ought to allow something for the daughter's maintenance till twenty-one, but what I must refer to the Master to report, if the parties cannot agree.

FLACK v. LONGMATE.

The death of the mortgagee of real estate is the period to be considered as to the question of the mortgage being absolute or subject to redemption, and as to whether his wife be thereout dowable or not.

If interest were paid on the mortgage within the twenty years preceding the death of the mortgagee, his interest therein is personal, and his wife is not dowable, though a claimant to the equity of redemption has failed to establish his right, and there is not, nor is there expected to be, any other claim set up.

In July 1781, Sewell Mansell, claiming the equity of redemption of certain lands subject to a mortgage thereof in fee, conveyed the same to Abel Jenkins on trust to sell and pay off the mortgages and debts due and owing by him, and to pay over the surplus to him. In 1781, the mortgage was vested in Susanna Biou and Frances Biou; and on the death of Frances, it became vested in Susanna alone. Interest was paid on the mortgage up to 1816. Abel Jenkins died in 1802, having devised to James and Owen his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates upon the trusts therein mentioned. Susanna Biou died in January 1821, having devised her mortgage estates to Flack, who entered into possession and received the rents and profits. A suit was instituted by the devisees of Abel Jenkins in the lifetime of Susanna Biou, and revived after her death, for the redemption of the premises; but it was dismissed with costs, the purposes of the trust, beyond the mortgages, having been satisfied, and the title of Sewell Mansell not being established, or rather not having been put in issue. In 1830, Flack died, having by his will given his residuary estate to his four children, and an annuity of 200*l.* to his wife. A suit was instituted for the administration of his estate, and a decree was made in 1831; and on the 26th July of the same year, the Master made his first report. On the 31st July, there was a decree on further directions, and a reference to the Master to inquire of what real estate the testator died seised, out of which his widow was entitled to dower; and the Master reported that the testator died seised of the estates in question, and that they descended to his heir-at-law, subject to the equity of redemption (if any) of the mortgagor, but that the widow was not entitled to dower. The case now came on upon exceptions to the Master's report, and upon further directions.

Kindersley (with him Bailey), for the exceptions.—Flack, at his death, was mortgagee in fee in possession, and no recognition of the mortgagor's title had been made since 1816. Besides, in the suit of James v. Biou, and Owen v. Flack (2 Sim. & St. 600), the claimant was unable to make good his title, and there is, in fact, nobody to claim, nor any one entitled to the equity of redemption; it is, therefore, reasonable to suppose the fee has become absolute, and the heir-at-law is entitled absolutely, and therefore also the widow has a right to her dower. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Suppose the mortgagor to appear and claim, would not the widow have to account?] True, and so would the heir, &c. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It is curious to report that the estate belongs to the heir, subject to the equity of redemption, if any, and yet that the widow is not entitled to dower.] The Court will not so decree, for if it is a fee absolute, it must have the incidents of a fee absolute, and among them the being subject to dower. The Master was asked to consider it personal estate, but the objection was overruled, and the estate held to be real estate at the testator's death; and if so, the widow is entitled to priority.

Tinney (with him Stinton), for the residuary legatees.—The Master's finding leads to the conclusion that it was not property out of which the wife was dowable, for he makes it subject to the equity of redemption. In 1816 it was clearly a mortgage, and the equity of redemption, therefore, did not become forfeited till 1836. Flack took it by the express words of the devise as a mortgage, and at his death it was a mortgage, and therefore personal estate; and therefore it then went to the residuary legatees as such, though eventually it might become freehold. The wife therefore cannot claim.

Barber, for other parties.

Kindersley, in reply.—It is conceded that at law it is a fee-simple, and that the wife is dowable thereout. But it is said it is redeemable for twenty years. I admit that if it was argued to be irredeemable on the ground only of time, the point could not be maintained, but the ground was that there is no person claiming the equity of redemption at all, for there is no heir; so that the argument as to time does not apply. It is a windfall in the hands of the mortgagee, who cannot be called upon by the trustee, Jenkins, or his representatives, Owen and James, or their representatives, to have the estates redeemed, as the incumbrances, except the mortgage, are all paid off. The fee is therefore absolute, and the widow entitled to dower.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The case is unsatisfactory in the way in which it is brought forward; still I must make a decision. Here the widow claims dower, and it is therefore necessary to consider what the estate was at the death of the testator. That it was originally a mortgage estate there is no doubt. This mortgage was vested in Susanna Biou in 1816, but who was then or after entitled to redeem does not appear. She, however, was mortgagee, and received interest so late as 1816, probably from the proper source. Not long after a bill was filed by a claimant to the equity of redemption in her lifetime, and the suit was after her death revived, and ultimately the bill was dismissed in 1826. In the meantime, in January 1829, S. Biou died, having bequeathed her mortgaged estates to Flack, who received them and enjoyed them as mortgagee in possession. The person claiming had not proved his title, and there was no mortgagor, but only a right to redeem. He continued in possession, and did not know who had a right to redeem; probably he thought his own right absolute, and was congratulating himself as to the windfall which he had got. Now, to see whether the widow was dowable, we must look to the time when the mortgagee died, and at that time he had only a mortgage estate, and there was a right to redeem. We cannot look at the subsequent events which have happened. There may be no right in any one now, but did that state of things exist at the death of the husband of the widow who now claims dower? That is the real question. I regret that the quality of the property in this court is such as to exclude her from dower after the possession of it so long by the husband as absolute estate; it is a hard case. I overrule the exceptions, but without costs.

OKE v. HOOPER.

Practice—Attachment—Motion to take a bill pro confesso—Service.

The bill was filed on the 5th of October, 1843, and an appearance was entered by the plaintiffs on the 8th of November, 1843. The answer was put in on the 22nd of June, 1844, and on the 3rd of October following the bill was amended. On the 13th of November, 1844, an appearance was entered by the defendant, C. Wallis (a solicitor) himself in person, describing him as of 12, South-square, Gray's-inn, in the county of Middlesex. Besides this, the defendant had an office at a place in Cornwall. No answer being put in, an application was now made to take the bill pro confesso against him.

Prior, for the motion, stated that on various occasions they had called at Gray's-inn, but Wallis could not be found. An attachment having issued for want of an answer, they had endeavoured to serve it in Cornwall, but on inquiry it was found his family were gone from the place, and there was no trace of him. It was believed he was gone to France to avoid process. Under these circumstances, it was now moved to take the bill pro confesso. The attachment had issued only to Cornwall, not to Middlesex, and they had served notice by pushing it through the door of the office at Gray's-inn.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought the attachment must issue to Middlesex as well as Cornwall, as the notice was served in the former place.

Re TUGWELL.

On a petition for taxation of the payment of a bill of costs, the fact of payment at the time of delivery, without an opportunity for inquiry, is itself a very special circumstance.

The petitioner had occasion to have a mortgage of copyhold estates transferred to a second mortgagee, the first having called in his money; and at a meeting for the completion of the transfer, the solicitor of the first mortgagee presented his bill of costs for the transfer, &c.; and the matter being adjourned for a week, he presented it again, and was paid under protest. The items that were selected as overcharges were seven guineas for writing half-yearly each year for seven years to ask payment of interest on the mortgage, a charge for a common copy, and also an attested copy of a deed. A third charge was the expenses of two ladies (on whom, with four others, the legal estate in the premises had descended) going to Cheltenham and taking with them a solicitor from Devizes to surrender the estate; and a fourth charge objected to was a power of attorney by the husband of one of the ladies to surrender, but which by accident, not being directed to any one, became inoperative, and rendered the journey to Cheltenham useless, as the transfer could not be completed. At this meeting, however, the solicitor presented his bill of costs; and a week afterwards at a second meeting he presented it again, and was paid under protest. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—When was it paid?] On the same day it was presented.

Bazalgette now asked an order for taxation after payment, and stated the overcharges already mentioned as special circumstances. He had no objection to reasonable travelling expenses, but taking besides a solicitor from Devizes at a charge of two guineas a day for three days was not at all necessary.

Kindersley (with him Grove), contrà.—The bill of costs was made out at 61*l.* 0s. 3d. but by some mistake in summing up that was 10*l.* too little, and should have been 71*l.* 0s. 3d.; but it is not asked to rectify the mistake, we are satisfied to let it stand, and we are willing to arrange out of court. A great deal of trouble was taken about getting in the interest, and a great many things were done which were not charged, but if they were, they would amount to much more than a guinea a year. It was right that the ladies should have some one to direct them as to what they were to do, and the omission in the power of attorney was an accident.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I cannot help saying the respondents have acted well in endeavouring to arrange the matter out of court. I have had occasion to notice the contrary conduct so often, that it is gratifying to me to have it in my power to speak differently on this occasion. But the main question is, whether there are special circumstances to justify an order for taxation after payment, the party coming here in time. Now there is in this as in all these cases, this very special circumstance, that the bill is delivered when the payment is made. True, it was shewn some days before, but that was not enough; the bill was not complete, nor could it be. There were great expenses up to the last, and the bill was paid under these circumstances, that it was paid under the pressure of circumstances before deliberate inquiry. As to the items themselves, seven guineas may not be enough for the letters and correspondence, and as to the other matters stated, I cannot say whether they are chargeable; but considering the circumstances under which the bill was paid, and the doubtful items, I think there must be taxation. The proposal to arrange, however, is material as to costs, and I shall consider of that again.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Thursday, March 13.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BERRY.

Practice—Production of documents.

Documents mentioned in the answer to be in the defendant's possession, but not scheduled, and alleged by the defendants to the best of their knowledge and belief not to relate to the matters in question, ordered to be produced.

Fooks, in this case, moved for the production of documents admitted by the defendants to be in their possession. The suit related to a charity, of which the defendants, who were churchwardens and overseers of the parish in which the property was situated, were trustees. In the body of the answer, the defendants stated incidentally their possession of the churchwardens' and overseers' books, but they denied, to the best of their knowledge and belief, that the books related to the matters in question. The books were not mentioned in the schedule to the answer.

Osborne, for the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed the books to be produced.

MORRIS v. M'FEE.

Practice—Bill taken pro confesso.

Where it is proposed to take a bill pro confesso against a sole defendant, it is the more proper course to have the cause set down.

B. Gaselee moved, under the 1st Order of the 11th April, 1842, to take the bill pro confesso against M'Fee, who was the sole defendant. The only question was, whether the decree should be taken at once upon this motion, or the cause should be set down and appear in the paper. He mentioned Harrison v. Stewardson (2 Hare, 533).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought it would be the more proper course to have the cause set down for a certain day.

ROBINSON v. ASTON.

Practice—Partition suit—Infant defendant—Costs.

To a bill by a mortgagee for a partition, an infant defendant had not appeared, and the solicitor to the suitors' fund was appointed guardian ad litem, under the 28th Order of 26th Oct. 1842. At the hearing of the cause, it was directed that the plaintiff should pay the infant's costs and add them to his debt.

In this case a bill for partition was filed by the mortgagee of a life estate, [illegible] divided reversionary share in certain freehold property. One of the defendants, who was tenant in tail in remainder of an undivided share in the property, was an infant, and did not appear to the bill. Upon a motion made on behalf of the plaintiff under the 28th Order of the 26th Oct. 1842, the solicitor to the suitors' fund was appointed guardian ad litem for the infant. The cause being brought to a hearing, a question was raised as to the party by whom the infant's cost should be borne.

Taylor, for the infant, submitted that, according to the terms of the 28th Order of 26th Oct. 1842, the infant's costs should be paid by the plaintiff, who would be repaid as the Court might direct. In the case of Robey v. Whitwood, which was a foreclosure suit, the Master of the Rolls, on the 13th inst. adopted the course now proposed, and directed the plaintiff to add the infant's costs to his mortgage debt.

Wigram, Tripp, and Hitchcock, for other parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed the costs of the infant to be paid as proposed, and that the plaintiff should add them to his mortgage debt.

MONHAY v. INDERWICK.

Practice—Privileged documents.

A B acted as the solicitor of the defendant in the matters in dispute up to the time of the filing of the bill, when he ceased to act as solicitor in these matters, though he continued the defendant's solicitor in other business. At the defendant's request A B wrote for the defendant his observations upon the bill. Quere, whether these observations were privileged from production or not?

In this case R. Palmer moved for the production of documents mentioned in the defendant's answer, amongst which [illegible] which was [illegible] "Observations by Mr. [illegible] upon the bill." This document was alleged to be privileged, as Mr. Pritchard had been the defendant's solicitor previous to the filing the bill, though since that time he had ceased to be as to the subject-matter of the suit. He cited Greenlaw v. King (1 Beav. 137); Shore v. Lord Grosvenor (1 Keen, 311); and Lord Hardwicke (3 Hare 177).

Mills for the defendant, [illegible] for opportunity to make an affidavit [illegible] other documents, the case stood over until

March [illegible]—when R. P[illegible]

The VICE-CHANCELLOR [illegible] Mills.—This is so far from clear, that if [illegible] for production is to be made, I should [illegible] made by the Lord Chancellor. [illegible] stands the Mr. Pritchard was the defendant's [illegible] and particularly in the transactions [illegible] are the subject of this suit. After the bill was filed Mr. Pritchard ceased to be the defendant's solicitor as to these particular transactions [illegible] is not [illegible] to those transactions, but in other matters he does act as his solicitor. In this state of things, the defendant having to answer the bill wishes assistance with reference to such matters as occurred within the knowledge of Mr. Pritchard when he was the solicitor. Accordingly Mr. Pritchard writes his remarks upon a copy or brief of the bill, which remarks are sworn were received as instructions for the answer. I doubt very much, to say the least, whether an order for production can, under such circumstances, be made, but I should prefer that it should be mentioned to the Lord Chancellor.

FRANKCOMBE v. HAYWARD.

Wills Amendment Act—Appointment.

A B having a general power of appointment by deed or will over personal property, gave and bequeathed by her will "one moiety or half part of her property which she might be possessed of and entitled to at the time of her decease:"—Held, to be a valid exercise of her power of appointment.

In this suit the following question arose under the Wills Amendment Act. By a deed of settlement one moiety of the personal property settled was, upon the determination of the life interests, to go to the husband, and the other moiety was to go as the wife by deed or will should appoint, and in default of appointment to her next of kin. By the wife's will, after making certain specific bequests, she gave and bequeathed "one moiety or half-part of her property which she might be possessed of or entitled to at the time of her decease" to William Frankcombe, the plaintiff.

Schomberg argued that this was not an exercise of the power of appointment given to her by the settlement. By the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 27, it is enacted that "a bequest of the personal estate of the testator, or any bequest of personal property described in a general manner, shall be construed to include any personal estate or any personal estate to which such description shall extend (as the case may be) which he may have power to appoint in any manner he may think proper, and shall operate as an execution of such power unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will." In this case the power is not alluded to or intended to be exercised. The testatrix limits her bequest of property to that which she shall be possessed of or entitled to at the time of her decease. Here the property subject to her power of appointment cannot come under such a description, she not being either possessed of or entitled to it. Had she used only the words "my property," the 27th section might have applied, but she qualifies the words by that which renders them inapplicable to the property in question.

Nicholls, on the same side.

Rogers, Follett, and Babington, for other parties, were not heard.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The Legislature has said that where a testator by his will gives the personal estate of the testator, which means all his personal estate, it shall be construed to include any personal estate which he may have power to appoint, in any manner he may think proper, and shall operate as an execution of such power, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will. The first question is, what is the definition of "the personal estate of the testator"? and I consider it to be the personal estate of or to which the testator is possessed or entitled. It seems to me the same thing. Now here both expressions occur. Mr. Schomberg has very ingeniously argued that the testatrix has made a distinction by adding these words; but, construing the Act as I do, and I have considered the point before, I must put that interpretation upon it.

HOLCOMBE v. TROTTER.

Practice—8th Order of August, 1841—Service of subpœna—Husband and wife.

Where a husband and wife were defendants in a suit, and the wife had appeared to and answered the original bill, and the husband, upon being served with subpœna for himself and wife to a bill of revivor, entered an appearance for himself but refused to do so on behalf of his wife, the Court gave leave to the plaintiff to enter an appearance for her under the 8th Order of August, 1841.

Whether such leave would have been given under similar circumstances upon an original bill, quere?

Cole applied in this cause for leave to enter an appearance for one of the defendants under the following circumstances. A husband and his wife were defendants, and had appeared to and answered the original bill. A bill of revivor being necessary, the husband was, on the 13th of March last, served in the Queen's Bench Prison, where he was detained a prisoner, with a subpœna on behalf of himself and his wife. To this bill of revivor the husband caused an appearance to be entered for himself, but refused to do so on behalf of his wife. The plaintiff did not know where the wife was residing.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think I may venture to give the leave, but I do not say what I should have done if this had not been a bill of revivor to an original suit in which the wife had appeared and answered.

Saturday, April 12.

NEWENHAM v. PEMBERTON.

Service of subpœna—8th Order of August 1841.

Where a defendant was imprisoned for a misdemeanor, and neither the deputy governor of the gaol nor the visiting magistrates would allow him to be seen, the service of the subpœna upon the deputy-governor was held to be good service.

One of the defendants in this suit was imprisoned under a sentence for misdemeanor. Upon application being made to the deputy-governor of the prison in which he was confined for liberty to serve him with a subpœna, the deputy-governor refused to give the permission without an order from the visiting magistrates. The magistrates having refused to grant such an order, a copy of the subpœna was, on the same [illegible] served [illegible] Mr. Phillips, clerk to Messrs. Makinson [illegible] Sanders, who had before acted as the defendant's solicitors. Mr. Phillips stated that Messrs. Makinson and Sanders would not appear for the defendant, and accordingly Mr. Southee, the plaintiff's solicitor, personally applied to the visiting magistrates for permission to see the defendant, and upon their refusal a copy of the subpœna was left with the deputy-governor, the original being at the same time shewn to him. No appearance having been entered by the defendant, Prendergast moved for leave to enter an appearance for the defendant under the 8th Order of 26th August, 1841. He submitted that the service of the subpœna was good service.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—My impression is that it is good service; but if Mr. Colville doubts about it, you had better mention the case to the Lord Chancellor.

COHENS v. NAIRNE.

Pleading—Parties.

In a case of admitted intestacy, and where the right to administration is being contested in the Ecclesiastical Court, whether a creditor's suit should be instituted against both the contending parties, or only against the one in possession of the property—Quere?

This was a bill filed by two creditors against the brother of an intestate to restrain him from parting with the property of the intestate, &c. The brother was in possession of the property, but he and the nephew were contesting the right to administer in the Ecclesiastical Court.

Fooks moved for the injunction.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR asked why the nephew was not made a party?

Fooks submitted that it was not necessary, as the brother was the only person in possession.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—If it is an urgent case, I will not refuse the injunction on this ground. I will not decide the point; but my impression is that it is the practice to make both parties defendants.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Tuesday, April 15.

(Before Lord DENMAN, C. J., PATTESON, J. WILLIAMS, J. and WIGHTMAN, J.)

DOE dem. BRISE v. BRISE.

The officer appointed by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, s. 13 to certify a copy from any record in the custody of the Master of the Rolls as a true and authentic copy, must follow the words of the Act of Parliament. If he chooses to use words of his own, the certificate and copy are inadmissible in evidence.

Quere, whether under the statute of Victoria, an entire copy of any record is necessary, or whether, with regard to awards under an Inclosure Act, that statute is not to be construed together with the 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, s. 35, so that a copy of "any part thereof" will be entitled to admission.

Entry of the verdict—Costs.

Ejectment to recover possession of certain lands in the parish of Stewkley, in the county of Buckingham, tried before Mr. Justice Patteson, at Aylesbury, in 1842.

The lessors of the plaintiff sought to recover, amongst other lands, certain land which had been allotted in the year 1811, under an Inclosure Act (51 Geo. 3, c. 99), "An Act for inclosing lands in the parish of Stewkley, in the county of Buckingham"), [illegible]d, in proof of their title, they offered in evidence a document, which purported to be "an extract from the original" award of the Commissioners appointed [illegible]ler the local Act, with a certificate of the Deputy-keeper of the Records in the custody of the Master of the Rolls that the "extract" was a true and authentic "extract from the original." The admissibility of this document was objected to on the ground that an extract alone was insufficient, and that the statute required "a copy of the record;" meaning thereby the whole record. The learned judge, however, admitted it, giving the counsel for the defendant leave to move for a rule "to enter the verdict for the defendant as to the allotted land." Another objection was raised as to the identity of the allotted land, but the argument was now confined to the first point.

Byles, Serjt. having obtained a rule,

Gunning and Worlledge now shewed cause.—The Act relating to the custody and production of public records was the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, and the defendant relied upon the 12th and 13th sections of that Act. The 12th section was as follows:—"And be it enacted, that the Master of the Rolls or Deputy Keeper of the Records may allow copies to be made of any records in the custody of the Master of the Rolls at the request and costs of any person desirous of procuring the same; and any copy so made shall be examined and certified as a true and authentic copy by the deputy Keeper of the Records or one of the Assistant Record Keepers aforesaid, and shall be sealed or stamped with the seal of the Record Office, and delivered to the party for whose use it was made." The 13th section admitted "every copy of a record in the custody of the Master of the Rolls certified as aforesaid" as evidence in all courts of justice. But the record in dispute in this case was an award under an Inclosure Act, and the statute of Victoria must be construed together with the provisions of the General Inclosure Act (41 Geo. 3, c. 109), as far as they related to the award of the commissioners. In the latter portion of the 35th section of the General Inclosure Act, it was enacted that "the said award, and each copy of the same, or of any part thereof, signed as aforesaid, shall at all times be admitted, &c. as legal evidence." Now, these statutes in relation to the awards of commissioners under an Inclosure Act were in pari materiâ, and being so, they must be construed together. It was not the object of the Act of Victoria to alter the law with regard to the admissibility of public records in evidence. Its sole scope was to provide for their safe custody and preservation.

It repealed nothing in the former Act, and clearly intended to repeal nothing. The omission, then, of the words, "or of any part thereof," ought to be supplied from that former Act. The principle of construction laid down in various cases was, that when statutes were in pari materiâ, they were so to be read and construed together that effect should be given to their combined intention—not to the separate enactments of each. (Gale v. Laurie, 5 B. & C. 162; Duck v. Addington, 4 T. R. 447; Edwards v. The Bishop of Exeter, 6 Bing. N. C. 146.) In obedience to this rule of construction, a copy of "any part" of the award, as well as of the whole award, was admissible, and the rule must be discharged. [PATTESON, J.—The officer does not, in this certificate, use the word "copy" of the award, or of any part of it. He certifies it to be an "extract."] The words "extract," and "copy of a part," were synonymous. A true extract must be a copy. Besides, this objection was not raised on the trial, and could not now be urged. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The objection on the trial was that the certificate is bad. We can decide it to be inadmissible on any ground we please.] They also referred to the 3rd section of the Act of Vict. and cited Hine v. Reynolds (2 M. & G. 71).

Byles, Serjt. in support of his rule.—The defendant relied upon the plain and simple words of the Act of Vict. By a strict adherence to those words, no injury could be done. There were many modes of proving the contents of an award like this. The original award could be produced, or the enrolment which was made evidence by the General Inclosure Act, or a copy of [illegible] 'n came the [illegible] enacted that every copy of a record in the custody of the Master of the Rolls, "certified as a true and authentic copy," &c. should be received as evidence. By that section was of course meant a copy, not of the original award, but of the enrolment in the custody of the Master of the Rolls. Was this such a copy? No. It only purported to be an "extract." It was not certified to be even "a copy of any part" of the award; but the officer was only empowered by the statute to certify as to the authenticity of the copy of the whole award—not of a part. He had no authority to make "extracts." The words "copy" and "extract" were not synonymous. A piece cut out with a knife would be an extract, but it would not be a copy. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Here the officer certifies that it is an extract from the "original."] That was another objection. The original award was not in the custody of the Master of the Rolls, and an extract from that it could not be.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The question is not without difficulty, whether the power of making a copy "of any part" of the award given by the first Act is transferred to the second; but supposing this certificate to be under the first statute, and that supposition is the one most favourable to the plaintiffs, this rule must be made absolute. The words of the Act must be followed. Now what are the words of the Act of Geo. 3?—"And the said award and each copy of the same or of any part thereof," shall be admitted, &c. But this certificate refers to what it says is "true extracts from the original in the custody of the Master of the Rolls." The officer has not followed the words even of this Act, and we ought to be slow in allowing a variation from the form of an Act of Parliament.

PATTESON, J.—I was unwilling to reject this evidence on the trial, because the Act of Victoria does not seem to have intended any alteration as to the admissibility of copies of records; but it is not necessary now to determine that question. If the Act of Victoria had never been passed, and this case had come before us under the previous statute, the result must have been the same. The officer has not chosen to follow the words of the Act, and we cannot be sure by the language he has used that he means the same thing. In his certificate there is nothing about "a true copy," and I do not know whether by "a true extract from the original," he means the same.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion, on the short ground that the words of the Act of Parliament have not been followed.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

Byles, Serjt. then prayed that the "verdict as to the allotted land," should be entered for the defendant. That was the way in which the rule was framed, and the manner of entering the verdict would make a difference as to the costs. By the 74th rule of Hilary Term, 2 Wm. 4, it was provided that "no costs shall be allowed on taxation to a plaintiff upon any counts or issues upon which he has not succeeded, and the costs of all issues found for the defendant shall be deducted from the plaintiff's costs." There had been a doubt, whether this rule applied to actions of ejectment, but Mr. Welsby had furnished him with a note of a recent case in the Exchequer, in which it had been held to apply. (Doe dem. Beaumont v. Lewis.)

PATTESON, J.—I certainly intended, if the rule were made absolute, that the verdict should be confined to the lands which had been recovered. I did not intend that the verdict should be entered for the defendant as to the allotted land.

Gunning.—The only effect of the rule ought to be, that the writ of possession should be limited to the lands which have been recovered. The sheriffs will not let the plaintiffs into possession of the allotted land.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Unless we hear further, the plaintiff's verdict will be confined to the other land; the allotted land will be excluded.

Rule absolute accordingly.

DOE dem. CHARTERIS v. FINE.

M. D. Hill, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had in this case, on the ground of misdirection.

This was an action of ejectment, tried before the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, at Lincoln, when the verdict had been for the plaintiff, and it was brought to recover possession of certain lands lying on the coast, which had recently, by gradual accretions, risen from the waters. They were still occasionally inundated by spring tides, but at low water they were dry, and appeared covered with herbage. The lessor of the plaintiff claimed as frontager, upon the authority of Lord Yarborough's case (Rex v. Lord Yarborough, 3 B. & C. 91; 1 Dow. & Clerk, Ap. C., H. of L. 178); and, as owner of the land, he had built, at different times, two sea-walls, to keep back the sea. He had exercised other acts of ownership over the land, as by putting sheep thereon to consume the herbage. On the trial, the defendant had not gone into the question of title, but had rested his case on a possession for more than twenty years. The acts of user had certainly been rare, but their rarity was, perhaps, accounted for by the dangerous position of the land. There had been, however, some eviden[ce] of possession, if this piece of half-ground half-water were land in the ordinary sense of the word; but it had occurred to him that this was not land in the sense that a party was to be shut out by a possession for less than twenty years. A question might arise, when such land first became useful; and one person might think it worth possessing at one time, and another person at another.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The difficulty turns upon the point when the property really became land. We will consult the Lord Chief Justice.

REG. ON THE PROSECUTION OF LANGLEY v. THE MAYOR OF DOVER.—Kelly, Q. C. moved for further time for a return to a mandamus. The rule had been made absolute on the last day of the Term, Jan. 31, but, as had recently become usual, the mandamus had not been served until the 31st of March.

The Court granted three weeks, but then the return to be peremptory.

BELCHINS v. PAROLE.—Pashley moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground of an insufficient notice of trial having been served on the defendant. Rule nisi granted.

Ex parte DOWSEY.—Jervis, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why a prisoner now confined in the prison of the Borough Court of Liverpool should not be discharged therefrom. He was confined under the authority of a bench-warrant granted by Mr. Justice Wightman, but that warrant did not set forth, as was required by the statute 48 Geo. 3, c. 58, before whom the party was to appear, or in what sum he was bound to answer the charge against him.

Rule nisi granted.

HASSEL v. HEMING.—Assumpsit.—Upon an agreement to deliver 100 quarters of malt. Breach—Th[e non-de]livery. Tried at Warwick at the last assizes before the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas. Verdict for the plaintiff—damages, 100*l.* Humfrey, Q. C. in accordance with leave reserved, [mov]ed for a rule nisi to enter a nonsuit, on the ground that the plaintiff was no party to the contract. Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We will consult the Lord Chief Justice.

VERDISQUE v. LEPAGE.—Corry moved for a rule nisi to set aside a rule which had been taken out for a special jury in this case. The action had been entered for to-morrow, and the rule had not been served until last night. The rule had been taken out before six days next preceding the trial, in accordance with the requirements of the rule of Hilary Term 1828, but it had not been served until late last night. The action was on a promissory note, and the venue laid in Middlesex.

Rule nisi granted, and cause to be shewn early to-morrow.

DOE dem. DOWNE v. GOVIER.

A statement indorsed on a mortgage deed by the mortgagee, from which it appears that the consideration money was partly advanced by himself and partly by another person, does not make it necessary, for the admission of the deed in evidence, that it bear a stamp for each sum, instead of one stamp only on the aggregate amount.

Ejectment by a mortgagee.

When the mortgage-deed was produced at the trial, before Mr. Justice Earle, it appeared that it was a security for the loan of 420*l.* and it bore a 4*l.* stamp. Indorsed thereon, however, was a declaration by the mortgagee that he had only advanced 350*l.*; that the remaining sum of 70*l.* had been advanced by a third person; and that in the event of the property not realizing more than the 350*l.* he was not to be held responsible. Hereupon it was contended that the deed ought to have had a further stamp of 1*l.* 10s. because the facts were within a provision of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched. Part I. which is in these terms:—"And in case the same shall be made as a security for the payment or transfer to different persons of separate and distinct sums of money or shares in any of the said stocks or funds, the said ad valorem duty shall be charged for and in respect of such separate and distinct sum of money or share in any of the said stock or funds therein specified and secured, and not upon the aggregate amount thereof." The learned judge was about to reject the deed, when Reed v. Wilmot (7 Bing. 577) was quoted, whereupon the deed was admitted, and a verdict passed for the plaintiff.

Greenwood now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had. The words of the Act are clear; and in the case of Reed v. Wilmot, the fact that the money had been advanced by different persons first came out on the deposition of witnesses; in this case that fact appears on the deed.

By the COURT.—That fact appears from the deed, but in a form that makes it parol testimony. The right to sue is in one person only, though that person may be a trustee for another. We must abide by the law of Reed v. Wilmot. Rule refused.

THOMPSON v. SWINSTON and ANOTHER.

Where a plaintiff declared on a contract to effect an insurance of certain goods to be shipped to the West Indies, or to give notice if the insurance should not be effected, and the evidence shewed only a contract to effect the insurance—Held, that the judge was justified in amending by striking out the latter alternative of the contract as stated.

In this case the plaintiff declared on a contract to effect an insurance on certain wines that were to be shipped to the West Indies, or to give notice to him that the insurance had not been effected, and assigned breaches coextensive with the promise as set forth. The defendant pleaded the general issue. The parties lived in London: evidence of a custom that would support the promise as laid could not be given, neither was evidence tendered to shew that the contract had been specifically entered into in its terms as laid; but it was shewn that the plaintiff had said to the defendant after the loss of the vessel in which the wines had been shipped,—"You know I ordered you to insure," and that the defendant had replied, "You may have done so, but I don't recollect whether you did or not." The variance having been insisted on, an application to the judge to amend was made, which, at first, he refused; eventually, however, he made the amendment by striking out such parts of the declaration as related to the notice that an insurance had not been effected; and the jury, after hearing the counsel for the defendant, and his evidence as to the contract as amended, returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

Chilton, Q.C. now moved for a rule that should call on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered, or why a new trial should not be had. If the judge had power to amend, he ought not to have amended, except on terms; payment of costs, namely, withdrawal of the record, and postponement of the trial; but he ought not to have amended at all. (David v. Preece, 13 L. Jour. Q. B. 88.) The defendant, therefore, is entitled to have a nonsuit entered. The evidence was not sufficient to warrant the jury in finding a verdict for the plaintiff on the contract as amended.

By the COURT.—The question now is simply this, whether, after the amendment, the verdict was against evidence; we think that it was not. The question in the case was, whether the defendant had undertaken to insure; whether he had undertaken to give notice if he did not insure was wholly immaterial. The defendant knew very well that he had undertaken to insure; whether he had or had not undertaken to give notice, did not signify anything; the verdict is according to the justice of the case; and the only prejudice that has accrued to the defendant from the amendment is this: that he has not been allowed to take advantage of a variance wholly immaterial. Rule refused.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Wednesday, April 16.

Atkinson v. Stacey and Another.

License—Assignment—Grant—Parol evidence.

Kinglake, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi to enter a verdict for the defendant on the third issue, which had been found for the plaintiff in an action of trespass for seizing and carrying away clay. A license to raise clay had been granted to the defendant and one Dixon. The defendant had subsequently assigned all his interest to Dixon, who had, by a verbal agreement, assigned his interest to the plaintiff. An issue involving this latter fact had been found for the defendant, no evidence having been given at the trial to shew that an assignment had passed. The plaintiff had new assigned that the clay taken was other clay than that raised under the license. To this the defendant pleaded not guilty, and also that the "other clay" was not the goods and chattels of the plaintiff. The verdict as it stood was, that the clay was the goods and chattels of the plaintiff. It was submitted, at the trial, that the plaintiff had no property in the goods, there being no deed of assignment; that the right to distrain could only be conferred under the original license; and that there was no property in the clay except in the licensee. A license to search for and raise metals, and convert them to the licensee's use, passes an interest which, although capable of being assigned, can only be assigned by deed. (Muskett v. Hill, 5 Bing. N. C. 694.) Rule nisi.

Smith v. Moore.

A party who had been robbed put forth a handbill, stating that whoever would give such information as would lead to the apprehension and conviction of the offenders, should receive 20l. reward. A voluntary statement was made by the offender to the plaintiff, who suggested to a police officer that if he gave the party making the statement some refreshment, he would tell him, the police officer, something respecting the robbery. The prisoner was, upon this suggestion, taken into custody, and afterwards convicted. Held, that this was giving such information as was required by the terms of the handbill, and sufficient to support the action.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this cause should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection. The action, which was on promises for a reward of 20l. for discovering an offender, had been tried at Worcester Spring Assizes, before Platt, B. verdict for plaintiff for the full amount. The declaration was in the usual form; first plea, non assumpsit. second, that the plaintiff did not give such information as led to the discovery of the offender. It appeared in evidence that the prisoner had come to the plaintiff, and had made a voluntary confession, upon which confession he was subsequently convicted and transported. The question was, whether a person who merely receives a voluntary statement from an offender, brings himself within the right to recover the reward. (Lancaster v. Walsh, 4 M. & W. 16.)

Cresswell, J.—In this case the handbill states, "whoever shall give such information as will lead to the conviction of the offender, shall receive the above reward." Now, the plaintiff answers the terms proposed; he does give such information by which the prisoner is convicted.

Tindal, C. J.—The direction in this case was right. I have observed that, when parties are suffering under the loss of their property, they are extremely ready to give their promise, but slow to perform after the conviction of the offender. Rule refused.

Steadman v. Du Hamill.

Bill of exchange—Variance.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this case should not be set aside, and instead thereof a nonsuit entered, according to leave reserved. The action had been brought on a bill of exchange, by the indorsee against the acceptor. The bill, which was in the French language, was drawn and accepted in England. Upon the bill being put in at the trial, it was objected by the counsel that it was a foreign bill of exchange, and did not support the plaintiff's declaration, in which it was described as an inland bill of exchange; and the question is, whether this is a sufficient declaration as against the acceptor. (14 L. Jour. part i. p. 36, Exch.; Gale v. Walsh, 5 T. R. 239; Kearney v. King, 2 B. & Ald. 301.) Rule nisi.

Thomson v. Hardinge and Others.

Pleading—Liberum tenementum.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the defendants on the sixth issue should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection. The declaration was in trespass for entering a close of the plaintiff. The defendants pleaded several pleas of right of way, and sixthly, a plea of liberum tenementum; which 6th plea was traversed by the plaintiff. At the trial before Lord Denman, at the last Kent Spring Assizes, the defendants gave evidence to shew that the defendant Hardinge was lord of the manor, and that the close in which, &c. was a customary tenement of the manor, held at a quit rent; that a relief was payable; that the property passed by common law assurances, but that there was an admission at the Lord's Court, though not a surrender, and that in the case of a mortgage it was not usual for the mortgagee to be admitted. Lord Denman left this evidence to the jury, who, under his lordship's direction, found for the defendants on the issue raised by the 6th plea, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict on all the others. It was now submitted that by this evidence the plaintiff either had a freehold tenure or a freehold interest, which would in either case destroy the defendant's plea.

The party serving the rule had been unable to effect personal service, but it was apprehended that this rule might be served the same as any other rule of court, and did not require to be personally served.

Chanter v. Johnson.

New Trial.

Common count in debt for using the plaintiff's patent furnace.

Plea—Never indebted.

Verdict for plaintiff, damages 33l.

Martin, Q. C. now moved (pursuant to leave reserved) for a nonsuit, or for a new trial, on the grounds that there was no evidence to go to the jury of the license having been accepted, and that the count should have been a special one for not accepting the license.

Case cited: Chanter v. Dewhirst (4 Law J. 198). Rule nisi.

Rawlinson v. Clark.

Construction of a covenant in a deed not to Practice as a surgeon.

Semble, where two parties covenant by deed that one shall pay a certain sum as "liquidated damages," in event of a certain [a]ct being done by him, and the word "penalty" is not mentioned, the Court will construe these words strictly.

This was an action brought against the defendant, who was a surgeon, for a breach of covenant. At the trial it appeared that the defendant had sold his practice to the plaintiff, and at the same time had covenanted by deed not "to carry on or practise the business or profession of a surgeon or apothecary, either by residing or visiting a patient within three miles" of a certain street in London; it further appeared, that there was a clause in the deed, whereby the defendant covenanted to continue to reside in his old house of business for one year, and to practise in conjunction with the plaintiff during that time, with a view of introducing him to the various patients, for which he was to receive one moiety of the money received from such patients as he should attend during that time. Some short time after this year had expired, the defendant was sent for by a lady whom he had always been in the habit of attending, to attend her in her confinement, which he accordingly did; but at the same time it was shewn that the plaintiff was cognizant of this, and attended her himself with the defendant during the time of her confinement. There was also another patient of the plaintiff's proved to have been attended by the defendant; but it appeared that he did so for the plaintiff, he being ill at the time; it also appeared that this person had made a present of fourteen guineas to the defendant.

The jury found a special verdict, that the defendant had acted as a surgeon by visiting patients, but with both the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff. They also assessed the damages at seven guineas, being half of what he had received from the patient. The learned judge directed a verdict to be entered generally for the plaintiff for 500l. being the sum agreed to be paid as liquidated damages in event of the covenant not to practise being broken; but he at the same time gave the defendant's counsel leave to move to enter a verdict for the defendant, or to reduce the damages to seven guineas, should the Court think that the proviso in the deed for the payment of the 500l. could be treated as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages.

Crowder, Q.C. now moved accordingly, and contended that, upon this finding of the jury, the verdict ought to be entered for the defendant: that upon a fair construction of the deed, the defendant could not be held to have violated the covenant in question. That covenant had been inserted to prevent the defendant from injuring the plaintiff. Now, here the jury had found that what he had done had been to assist the plaintiff. Then as to receiving the fee, it might be he was bound to pay over that to the plaintiff; but it was a mere gratuity, and was not enough to bring him within the covenant.

Pollock, C. J.—I do not think the mere receipt of the fee by the defendant will decide the question. The question really is, the animus with which he did so; for he might receive it, not liking to offend the person offering it. I think you are entitled to a rule nisi on the first point.

Crowder.—Then, as to the second point, the verdict cannot stand for 500l. The question is, whether this is a case of liquidated damages; here the damage is easily ascertained, which distinguishes this case from the principle laid down by Tindal, C. J. in Kemble v. Farren (6 Bing. 148); it cannot be said here that the parties meant that the mere attending one patient was to subject the defendant to pay 500l. Davies v. Pentum (6 B. & C. 216) is in point, and is an authority for the defendant.

Pollock, C.J.—But in that case the words "penal sum" occur, which is not the case here. Whenever the word "penalty" occurs in a deed, the Court will adhere to that, and not to the words "liquidated damages." Therefore if parties want liquidated damages, they must exclude the word "penalty" from the deed. Here there is no such word as penalty, and it is clear that the parties meant liquidated damages, and that they agree that 500*l.* shall be paid by the defendant as such if a certain act is done by him.

PARKE, B., ALDERSON, B., and ROLFE, B. concurred.

Rule nisi to enter a verdict for the defendant, but refused as to the reduction of damages.

DOE dem. CLARK v. PARKER.

Miller moved to enter a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the lessor of the plaintiff would not proceed to settle the special case which it had been agreed between the parties to submit to this Court. The action had been tried before Mr. Baron Gurney, and that learned judge being dead, a difficulty existed in getting his notes of the case.

The COURT suggested that the best course would be to take out a summons, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause before Mr. Baron Platt at chambers with Mr. Baron Gurney's notes, as Mr. Baron Platt's clerk had been the clerk of Mr. Baron Gurney, and could transcribe his notes.

Miller acceding to this suggestion,

CHARLTON v. THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF LUDLOW and ANOTHER.

Quære, whether it is necessary for a corporation to authorize their attorney under their corporate seal to refer a cause to arbitration?

Semble, that the Court will not entertain so important a question when it is argued to determine a question of costs, unless at the peril of the party arguing it paying costs if he fail.

This was a rule calling on the Mayor and Corporation of Ludlow to shew cause why a certain order in reference made in this cause, and all the proceedings had under it should not be set aside, and why Downs, the attorney for the corporation, should not pay the costs of the application. It appeared that the cause which was at issue had been referred to arbitration in 1842, by a judge's order, and several meetings held under it; it further appeared that the order to refer was not under the corporate seal, nor was the attorney of the corporation authorized under their seal to refer. In moving for the rule it was contended, on the authority of Arnold v. The Mayor and Corporation of Poole (4 M. & G. 860, and 5 Scott, N. R. 741), that all the proceedings were void for want of an authority under the corporate seal to the attorney to refer.

Whately, Q.C. and Crompton now shewed cause.—There has been a subsequent ratification under seal by the corporation since the rule was moved for, therefore this rule must be discharged.

ALDERSON, B.—Then the only question is as to the costs of this application. Must not the corporation pay the costs up to the time of the ratification?

Whately, Q.C.—No, the attorney, it is contended, has a right to bind the corporation under an order of this Court, or else how is any railway or other chartered company to refer a cause in court? It is not the attorney who refers, but the Court.

Alexander, Q. C. contrà, was stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C. B.—The question is one of some difficulty, and the Court do not desire to discuss it on a mere question of costs. The party has obtained all he wants by the subsequent ratification by the corporation, and if you persist in arguing the question, you must do so at the peril of having to pay costs, should our opinion be against you.

ALDERSON, B.—In all subsequent cases, it will be better to take a verdict against the corporation subject to a reference.

PARKE, B. and ROLFE, B. concurred.

Rule discharged.

HAGGER v. BARKER.

Where an arbitrator who is a barrister makes a mistake in law, and which does not appear upon the face of his award, the Court will not interfere.

Semble, that there is no distinction between a mistake in the law of evidence and any other law.

This was a rule obtained by Butt, Q. C. to set aside an award, on the ground that the arbitrator had knowingly received improper evidence.

It appeared that at one of the meetings before the arbitrator, certain books had been tendered on behalf of the plaintiff, in which entries had been made by an agent of the plaintiff, principally from information derived from hearsay; but there were some entries that were unobjectionable. The admission of the books in evidence being objected to on behalf of the defendant, the arbitrator, who was a barrister, said, that in his opinion, the same strictness was not necessary in arbitrations as at Nisi Prius, and admitted the books; it was not, however, sworn in the defendant's affidavits that the arbitrator acted on the entries objected to.

Byles, Serjt. and Birch now shewed cause, and contended that, even if the books were not admissible, it was merely a mistake in a point of law.

Stopped by the Court, who called on Butt to support his rule.

Butt, Q. C.—There is a clear case made out here of the arbitrator knowingly admitting evidence improperly. Hall v. Hinds (2 M. & G. 874, and 3 Scott, N. R. 250) is in point, and is in favour of the defendant.

PARKE, B.—But this is merely a mistake in law.

POLLOCK, C. B.—It has been clearly decided, that where an arbitrator makes a mistake in law, and it does not appear on the face of the award, the Court will not interfere; and I cannot distinguish between a mistake in the law of evidence and any other law; and at the same time I am not prepared to say that in this case any mistake has been made, but it is not necessary to consider that question.

ALDERSON, B. and ROLFE, B. concurred.

Rule discharged with costs.

RICHARDSON and ANOTHER v. PALMER and OTHERS.

NEW TRIAL.

This was an action of assumpsit on a special contract by the plaintiffs to make two machines for the defendants for the manufacture of pins, and for which they were to be paid 30*l.* each, and 45s. a day for three years on each machine, for the working thereof.

The alleged breach was, that the defendants did not pay the said sum of 45s. to wit, for 49 weeks, and would not allow the plaintiffs to remain in the defendants' service to work the said machines.

A verdict was found for the plaintiffs.

Talfourd, Serjt. now moved to arrest the judgment, and for a new trial, on the ground that the breach was ill assigned, there being no contract by the defendants to keep the plaintiffs in their service, but merely to pay them 45s. a week for such time as the machines should be worked.

ISRAEL v. NOON.

Judgment on the issue of nul tiel record, practice in moving for—Costs.

J. W. Bankes moved for judgment in this case, on an issue of nul tiel record, and stated that the record was with the Master.

PARKE, B.—You must hand in a copy of the pleadings to enable the Master to compare them with the records. In all cases this should be done before the sitting of the Court, to give that officer time to do so. You must now wait until that is done before you can have judgment. You had better move again to-morrow.

Bankes then stated he wished to move also for costs.

PARKE, B.—Why ask for costs?

Bankes.—The plaintiff, was obliged to bring this action to recover his debt; the debt was under 20*l.* and the officer was enabled to bring on a fieri facias, which had been issued through the stratagems of the defendant; it was sworn that there were goods on which to levy, but that the defendant locked his doors and set the officers at defiance.

Case cited: Garnwall v. Barker (5 Taunt. 264).

Rule nisi as to the costs.

HEATH v. UNWIN.

Taxation of costs.

Jervis, Q. C. moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation.

The action was brought to try the right to a patent; the defendant pleaded not guilty, and several pleas, alleging that the plaintiff was not the true inventor, and that the patent was not a new one; a verdict was found generally for the plaintiff; but on a motion to this Court after argument, the Court directed a verdict for the defendant on the plea of not guilty, it being held that the process which the defendant had used was not an infringement of the patent. On the taxation, however, the Master had allowed the defendant the costs of many scientific witnesses, who had been called on the other issues, and it was contended that the defendant was only entitled to the costs of those who went to prove the plea of "not guilty." Rule nisi.

Whitehurst, Q. C. moved (pursuant to leave reserved) for a nonsuit or for a new trial, on the ground that there had been no delivery and acceptance within the Statute of Frauds, and also that the plaintiff had only acted as a factor in the matter, and therefore that there was no contract of sale between him and the defendants.

BAIL COURT.

Tuesday, April 15.

(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

REG. v. BIRD and OTHERS.

Certiorari to remove an indictment for a nuisance from the Sessions into this Court. The motion is not invariably absolute in the first instance.

Peacock moved for a certiorari to remove into this court an indictment found against the defendants at the last Middlesex sessions, for a nuisance in Spafields burial-ground. The grounds of the application were, first, that it is desirable that the case should be tried by a special jury; second, that important questions of law are likely to arise, particularly as to whether or not the act charged amounts to an indictable misdemeanor; third, that it is proper that there should be a view.

H. Wilde said that he was instructed to oppose the rule in the first instance, unless it were a rule nisi only.

Peacock.—The rule is absolute in the first instance in misdemeanors, but nisi only in felonies.

COLERIDGE, J.—The Master informs me that it is not necessarily absolute in the first instance.

Peacock.—It was so held in Reg. v. Spencer (8 Dowl. 127).

COLERIDGE, J.—I cannot assent to that; it may be that the other side have good cause to shew against the rule. In this case I think it should be nisi only. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE MAYOR AND TOWN COUNCIL OF SALFORD.

Mandamus to aldermen and assessors to proceed with the election of town councillors.

Hoggins moved for a writ of mandamus to be directed to the aldermen and assessors of the four wards of the borough of Salford, commanding them to proceed to the election of town councillors. The borough of Salford was incorporated by a royal charter, bearing date the 16th April, 1844, which provided for the election of the first councillors on the 12th of July, and for the aldermen and mayor on the following 20th. No provision was made for subsequent elections, or for the appointment of assessors, but the corporation was left to the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 76 (pursuant to s. 141). By s. 43 of the above Act, it is provided that the election of councillors for each ward shall be held before the aldermen and assessors of the wards respectively; and by a subsequent act the assessors are to be elected in March. The borough being divided into four wards, and two councillors retiring each year on the 1st of November, there were, in November last, eight to be elected; but in consequence of the charter not having made any provision for assessors, and the period for their election not having arrived, no election of councillors could take place.

COLERIDGE, J.—Why did you not apply before?

Hoggins.—We waited until the election of assessors in March, before whom the election of councillors must take place.

Hodges, on behalf of the corporation, appeared to consent to the mandamus, which had been rendered necessary by the peculiar circumstances.

Rule absolute in the first instance.

GEDGE v. ELGIE.

Motion to tax an agent's bill.

Lush moved, on the part of the defendant, for a rule to refer the plaintiff's bill to taxation. This was an action brought against an attorney by his agent; and the only question was, whether, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37, an agent's bill is taxable.

REG. v. BUCHANNAN.

Quære, whether it is an indictable offence under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, for an unqualified person to act as an attorney?

Horn, in the last Term, having obtained a rule for a certiorari, to remove the indictment found against the defendant at the last summer assizes for Kent (see 4 Law T. 320), now moved to quash the indictment. It appeared that the defendant was overseer of the poor and clerk to the guardians of the Chatham Union, and that in the latter capacity, and by the direction of the guardians, he prosecuted some appeal business in the borough court of Canterbury, whereupon this indictment was preferred against him for acting as an attorney, he, in fact, not being one, in contravention of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73. It was now sought to quash the indictment, on the ground that it charges no indictable offence, it being settled law that where an Act of Parliament creates an offence, and points out a specific penalty (as in the 35th section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), that that penalty alone can be resorted to. Crown Cases.

Serjeants'-Inn, Friday, Feb. 14.

(Before the Fifteen Judges.)

REG. v. WINTERBOTHOM.

Forgery—Indorsement of one of several executors.

The prisoner was convicted of forgery before Gurney, B. at Chester Winter Assize, on an indictment containing several counts. The first, and only material one for this purpose, charged the prisoner with having in his custody and possession a certain bill of exchange, as follows:—

"5,000*l.* Manchester, Dec. 20, 39.

'At seven days' sight pay to Mrs. Elizabeth Isherwood, widow; Miriam Isherwood, spinster; Anne Magdalen Isherwood, spinster; also Anne Maria Isherwood, now the wife of C. Bellairs, esq. on order, the executrixes of the late John Isherwood, esq. five thousand pounds in full for loss under policy No. 11012. "W. J. TATE.'

To the trustees of the Pelican Life Office, London."

He, the said prisoner, afterwards, to wit, on, &c. feloniously did forge, on the back of the said bill of exchange a certain indorsement, which said forged indorsement is as follows, that is to say:—

"Anne Magdalen Isherwood," with intent to defraud, &c.

At the trial it was objected, inter alia, that the bill of exchange mentioned in the indictment being made payable to Mrs. Elizabeth Isherwood, Miriam Isherwood, Anne Magdalen Isherwood, and Anne Maria Isherwood, or order, the executrixes of John Isherwood, was negotiable only upon indorsement by all the said payees, and therefore that the forgery of one of the said names was not a forged indorsement of said bill alleged in this indictment.

The objection being reserved,

Welsby now appeared in support of it, and contended that the forgery of one name out of four was not sufficient to bring the prisoner within the penalty of the law. One of many executors cannot indorse and bind his co-executors. Here the form of the bill required the indorsements of all four executrixes, and the single one charged in the indictment is inoperative.

Cases cited: King v. Thom (1 T. R. 487); Child v. Monnins (2 B. & B. 460); Burmester v. Hogarth (4 M. & W. 97).

E. V. Williams (with him Sir John Bayley, Davison, and Yardley), contrà.—This indictment follows the statute on which it is framed, 11 Geo. 4, & 1 Wm. 4, c. 66, s. 3, which speaks of "any indorsement on or assignment of a bill," and charges that the prisoner forged on the bill an indorsement of one; and the whole question is, whether this is an indorsement of the bill. Now, if all four are necessary, each and every of the co-executrixes must indorse. To make a forgery, the thing forged ought to be good if true. The indorsement of this one lady would be good against her if valid. An indorser may be treated as a new drawer, and how he could be sued is immaterial, if he could be sued in any way at all. All these parties might sue as executrixes, and any one might have released the debt, and transfer the property, so that the indorsement of one is such an indorsement as will make the prisoner liable on this indictment.

Cases cited: Rex v. Weeks (R. & A. 149); Penny v. Innes (1 C. M. & R. 439); Gwinnett v. Hubert (5 Ad. & El. 436); Jackson v. Hudson (2 Camp. 447); Hill v. Lewis (1 Salk. 133); Partridge v. Court (5 Price, 412); Heath v. Chilton (12 M. & W. 632); Catherwood v. Chabaud (1 B & C. 149); Shepherd's Touchstone, 484.

Their lordships held that the prisoner had been properly convicted.

REG. v. CARTER.

Uttering—Order to pay—Public officer of banking company—Proof of appointment.

The prisoner was convicted at the Yorkshire Winter Assizes, before Coleridge, J. on two counts of an indictment, for uttering the instrument hereinafter set out, which was described as an order for the payment of money, the intent being laid in one count to defraud one H. Dresser, as one of the public officers of the Yorkshire District Bank, and in the other to defraud H. Deeper and others.

"Thornton-le-moor, July 20, 44.

"Mr. Johnson.

"Sir,—Please to pay to James Jackson the sum of 13*l.* by order of Chr. Sadler, Thornton-le-moor, brewer.—The District Bank.—I shall see you on Monday. "Your obliged,

"CHR. SADLER."

Christoper Sadler was a customer of the Yorkshire District Bank, and had been, till shortly before the uttering, a brewer. The agent of the bank, to whom the instrument was uttered, stated that Sadler was not in the habit of drawing on the bank, but that if he had been certain of the handwriting being his, he should have paid the money; but it was not proved that Sadler, at the date of the instrument, or time of the uttering, had any effects in the bank.

Three objections were made. First, that Dresser was not proved to be the public officer. He was called, and stated himself to be so, and a shareholder; and an examined copy of the return furnished to the Stamp office was put in, in which he was stated to be so. This copy wanted the affidavit at the close of the return (see sched. A, 7 Geo. 4, c. 46), and of course the signature and the date were left in blank, but it was not objected that the return sent to the office did not relate to the period of the uttering.

Second—That in the case of a company acting under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, it was not allowable to lay the intent to be to defraud "one of the partners and others." As to this see the cases collected in 2 Russell, 104, n. (l.); but the objection was rested on the case of Steward v. Greaves (10 M. & W. 711), in which the Court of Exchequer held that the 9th section of the statute was imperative in civil proceedings, and that a creditor of the bank could sue only one of the public officers. It was also urged that the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 14, only applied where it would otherwise have been necessary to name all the parties.

Third—It was objected that the instrument was improperly described as an order for the payment of money; that it did not, upon the face of it, purport to be an order, nor was it shewn that the party whose signature was forged had any authority to order the payment.

The objections were all overruled and reserved for the consideration of the judges.

Hall now appeared for the prisoner.—As to the last objection, it is submitted that to make an instrument an order, a breach of duty must be involved in the disobedience of it. It is not the form but the legal effect of the instrument which makes it an order. This is "precatory," and if it had been a genuine instrument it would not have been an order. (Robert's case, 2 R. & R. 522; Gilchrist's and Rouche's cases, same volume.)

PARKE, B.—The question is, whether it purports to be an order for the payment of money.

Hall.—As to the second point, the intent could not be laid to be to defraud "one of the partners and others;" for under the Banking Act, as construed by Steward v. Greaves, the words "shall and may" have been held to be exclusial in civil proceedings. The public officer, therefore, alone ought to be the party put forward. And, as to the first point reserved, it is contended that the case fails on that count, because there was no proof that the party there named was the public officer of the company. His appointment could only be proved by the production of the certificate required by the Act.

Bliss, contrà, was stopped.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The judges will consider these points. It may not be necessary to hear any counsel for the Crown. Cur. adv. vult.

Their lordships held the conviction to be right.

REG. v. RADFORD.

Uttering.

Where the prisoner shews a forged receipt to a party claiming a debt to look at, but does not deliver it except on compulsion—Held, that he was guilty of uttering.

The prisoner was tried before Gurney, B. at the Chester Winter Assize, 1844, when it appeared that in 1840 he bought some stone from a quarry then managed by one Turner, for which he never paid, although frequent demands were made on him both by Turner and Forster, his successor. At length, in 1844, he asserted he had paid the bill in 1840, and had Turner's receipt for it. On this Forster went to the prisoner, who produced the receipt, and exhibited it to him to look at, but would not part with it out of his hand. Soon afterwards Forster and Turner both went to him, when he again produced it, and held it up for them to look at, but refused to part with it out of his hands. Forster, however, got it from him, and he was apprehended and indicted for uttering the receipt, knowing it to be forged. On the part of the prisoner it was objected that his acts did not amount to an uttering; but the learned judge overruling the objection, subject to the opinion of the judges, the prisoner was convicted.

Townshend now contended that the prisoner was entitled to an acquittal. The words of the Act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 66, s. 3, are "offer, utter, dispose, or put off," of which the second alone is material now, as the indictment is for uttering. The old Act 13 Geo. 3, c. 79, contains the words, "utter or publish," and in an indictment under that it was held that merely shewing a forged deed to a party was not an uttering or publishing within those words. (R. v. Shukard, R. & R. 200.) The law gives a peculiar meaning to some words, such as "uttering" and "publishing," which mean giving false colour to any thing. There must be a delivering over, a passing it, a publication, in order to comply with this legal definition. (Tremaine's Placita Coronæ, 135. There must be the same publication in uttering a forgery as in publishing a libel. There must be either a delivery of the paper or a communication of its contents. (R. v. Burdett, 3 B. & Ald. 111.) Here the contents of the instrument were not consigned to Forster, but he got them from the prisoner. The traditio was involuntary; and though there might be a tendering, that is different from uttering. Wherever the Legislature meant to guard against the mere production of an instrument, they used very different language. In 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 24, the Seamen's Enlistment Act, the words are "produce, utter, or make use of;" and in 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 59, s. 19, the words are "utter, deliver, or produce," which shew that this Act must be construed strictly, and confined to the legal sense of the language used. The 5th Eliz. is a still stronger illustration, for that Act says, "publish or shew forth in evidence." Uttering, therefore, means parting with or shewing forth in evidence, and it is submitted that the acts of the prisoner did not amount to either.

Cur. adv. vult.

No counsel appeared for the Crown.

Their lordships held the decision to be right.

IRELEND.

DUBLIN, April 16.

Yesterday, the several courts were opened with the usual formalities observed on the first day of Term.

John Willington, eldest son of James Willington, of Castle Willington, in the county of Tipperary, esq.

Three of the gentlemen called were Roman Catholics.

PROMOTIONS, &c.—The Lord Chancellor of Ireland has appointed the undermentioned gentlemen to the commission of the peace, upon the recommendation of the lieutenants of their respective counties:—Charles Boyle, esq. for the county of Monaghan; Thomas Carty, esq. for the county of Louth; Alexander Creighton, esq. for the county of Sligo; Joseph Holmes, esq. for the King's County; Edward Anderson, esq. for the county of Down; P. W. Filgate, esq. for the county of Louth; Robert Caldwell, esq. for the county of Down; Henry D'Arcy, esq. for the county of Tyrone.

There was a meeting of Benchers of the Honourable Society of the King's Inns on the first day of Term, at which most of the judges remained until near three o'clock. It was expected that their decision in Mr. Hardy's case would have been promulgated; but it is reported that they have not yet come to a formal decision on the subject.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

ONE topic, wholly foreign to this Journal, has engrossed the Parliament during the week. At such moments as these, all minor matters stand still, and accordingly we find every measure interesting to the Profession indefinitely postponed.

We commence the usual summary of the New Statutes of the present Session. The titles of all as yet passed are given; but their contents are quite unimportant, and need not notice or abstract.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

THE DUCHIES OF CORNWALL AND LANCASTER.—An account of the gross and net revenue of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ending December 31, 1844, and of the Duchy of Lancaster for the year ending Michaelmas-day 1844, has just been presented to both Houses of Parliament, by command of her Majesty the Queen. It is now printed and published. Taking the general statement, it appears that the total income arising from the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall, from the 1st of January to the 31st of December, 1844, amounted to the sum of 47,591*l.* and the total amount of the concurrent expenditure to the sum of 42,724*l.* leaving a balance of about 4,867*l.* in the hands of the Receiver-General at the close of the year. Of the revenue (47,591*l.*), the sum of 15,246*l.* arose from rents due to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, exclusive of 1,901*l.* arrears of rent, &c.; 6,566*l.* from fines on copyhold grants in the manor of Kennington and renewals; 15,741*l.* for the compensation in lieu of tin, coinage duties, post groats, and white rents; 2,460*l.* from the produce of the royalties of the coal-mines in the county of Somerset; 2,685*l.* from the produce of royalties and reservation of dues of mines in Cornwall and Devon. Of the amount expended (42,724*l.*) the sum of 4,991*l.* was appropriated to the salaries and allowances of the principal offices of the duchy, and their clerks, &c.; 1,275*l.* to the salaries and expenses connected with the new Stannaries Court; 1,270*l.* to superannuation allowances and annuities; 1,536*l.* to law charges; 4,073*l.* to repairs and permanent improvement; 2,500*l.* to investments in the purchase of beneficial leases; whilst a sum total of 22,877*l.* was paid to the trustees and treasurer of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, as the income accruing from his duchy. Adverting to the accounts of the sister Duchy of Lancaster, we find that the gross total receipts for the year ending Michaelmas-day 1844, amounted to 35,356*l.* and the gross total on current expenses to 29,241*l.* leaving a balance of about 6,115*l.* in the hands of the Receiver-General. The sum of 24,916*l.* was derived from rents and arrears; 1,127*l.* from fines on renewing leases; 1,217*l.* from sales, grants in fee, grants of rents and enfranchisement of copyholds, under divers Acts of Parliament; and 2,211*l.* from casual revenues. Of the amount expended, the sum of 6,994*l.* was appropriated to the salaries and allowances of the principal officers of the duchy and of the law officers of the County Palatine; 2,861*l.* to law charges; 1,248*l.* to annuities and retired allowances; 4,642*l.* to labourers' wages, expenses of manorial courts, land-tax, and a heap of other charges; 1,217*l.* to the purchase of stock; and 8,000*l.* was paid to her Majesty's Keeper of the Privy Purse. It hence appears that the Royal family (the Queen and the Prince of Wales) derived an income from the two Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster during the past year amounting altogether to about 30,000*l.* in round numbers, which is nearly half the amount of the annual value of the privy purse paid from the resources of the Civil List. In the Duchy of Cornwall Sir Henry Wheatley, the Receiver-General, receives 1,100*l.* and Lord De L'Isle and Dudley, the Surveyor-General, 1,000*l.* a year. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Lord Granville C. H. Somerset, receives a salary of 2,000*l.*; and Mr. Francis L. Holt, the Vice-Chancellor, 600*l.* less 63*l.* 9s. 6d. received by him for fees.

EXPENSES OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.—Returns of the salaries, fees, emoluments, &c. paid to counsel, solicitors, architects, agents, and surveyors, and other particulars in each year, from 1839 to 1844, both inclusive, have been embodied in a printed paper, and issued to the public, on the motion of Mr. Evelyn B. Denison, M.P. It appears that the fees and emoluments of counsel and solicitors amounted in 1839 to 137*l.*; in 1840, to 66*l.*; in 1841, to 818*l.*; in 1842, to 828*l.*; in 1843, to 718*l.*; and in 1844, to 1,334*l.*; of which 1,006*l.* went into the pockets of Messrs. White, Meadows, and Murray, solicitors, in London. The fees, travelling expenses, and emoluments paid to the architects employed, Messrs. Blore, D. Burton, R. S. Pope, and W. Railton, amounted in 1841 to 5*l.* 5s.; in 1842, to 1,028*l.*; in 1843, to 579*l.*; and in 1844, to 893*l.* The fees and emoluments paid to agents and surveyors amounted in 1840 to 11*l.*; in 1841, to 378*l.*; in 1842, to 618*l.*; in 1843, to 516*l.*; and in 1844, to 510*l.* It appears that during the last six years the sees of Chichester, Hereford, Lichfield, Oxford, Peterborough, Ripon, and St. David's, have been augmented to the total amount, in 1839, of 6,425*l.*; in 1840, of 7,000*l.*; in 1841, of 8,600*l.*; in 1842, of 8,489*l.*; in 1843, of 8,349*l.*; and in 1844, of 8,349*l.* Episcopal residences have been provided in the dioceses of Glocester and Bristol, Lincoln, and Ripon; in that of Lincoln at a cost of 14,788*l.*; and in that of Ripon at a cost of 14,611*l*. The cost of the episcopal residence for the bishop of Glocester and Bristol cannot be stated, the building not being yet completed. Reversions were sold, in the dioceses of Glocester and Lincoln in 1839 for a total amount of 11,514*l*.; in 1840, for one of 38,798*l*.; in 1841, for one of 3,900*l*.; in 1842, for one of 5,250*l*.; and in 1843, for one of 3,071*l*. In the diocese of Glocester and Bristol the estate of Stapleton has been purchased for the sum of 11,000*l*.; and in the diocese of Lincoln, that of Riseholme, for the sum of 37,406*l*. including the sum of 2,036*l*. the value of the timber.

Annuities.—A return of the number and amount of annuities granted and payable upon lives up to the 5th day of January, 1845, was ordered by the Hon. the House of Commons on the 13th of February last, on the motion of Mr. John L. Ricardo, M.P. for Stoke-upon-Trent, and was consigned to the Parliamentary printing-office a few nights ago. On an inspection of the return lying before us, it appears that the number of annuities granted and payable upon lives, per Act of 10 Geo. 4, c. 24, was as follows, viz.:—Ages from 20 to 30, 216 annuities, amounting altogether to 9,614*l*.; ages from 30 to 40, 705 annuities, amounting to 46,078*l*.; ages from 40 to 50, 1,706 annuities, amounting to 148,139*l*.; ages from 50 to 60, 2,768 annuities, amounting to 286,204*l*.; ages from 60 to 70, 3,428 annuities, amounting to 264,480*l*.; ages from 70 to 80, and upwards, 1,529 annuities, amounting altogether to 114,832*l*.; and, on the continuance of two lives, and the life of the longer liver of them, at various ages, 421 annuities, amounting to the sum total of 36,744*l*. Upon making the addition, it will be found that the gross totals on the 5th day of January last past were 10,773 annuities, amounting altogether to the sum of 906,094*l*. This paper is issued from the National Debt-office, and signed by Mr. S. Higham, the Controller-General.

Military Savings-banks.—An account of the amount of all sums deposited in the Military or Regimental Savings-banks, within the year ended the 31st day of March, 1844; of all sums withdrawn during the same period, and of the interest allowed upon such deposits, and also the number of depositors on the said 31st day of March, 1844, has been presented to Parliament, pursuant to the provisions of the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 71. It was ordered to be printed a few nights ago. It hence appears that the total amount of the sums so deposited was 15,069*l*. 3s. 2d.; the total amount of the deposits so withdrawn, 316*l*. 11s. 5d.; the amount of interest so allowed upon the said deposits, 96*l*. 10s. 1d.; and the amount of the balance due by the public, 14,849*l*. 1s. 11d. The number of depositors is stated to have been 1,890. The warrant establishing the Regimental Savings-bank was dated the 11th of October, 1843. This paper is issued from the War-office, and signed by Mr. Sydney Herbert, the new Secretary at War.

The University of London.—The following returns were obtained by Mr. Christie, the member for Weymouth, of the candidates for medical degrees, and the number who have taken such degrees, in each year, since the foundation of the new University in Upper Gower-street. From 1839 up to 1844, 268 persons presented themselves at the first examination for degrees as bachelors of medicine, of whom 176 passed; and 118 presented themselves at the second examination for the same degree, of whom 106 passed. During the same period 33 persons presented themselves for the degree of doctor of medicine, all of whom passed. The number of colleges in connection with the University of London appears to be 26, and the number of medical schools recognized by the said University (exclusive of 17 independent lecturers) to 63. The following are the only professional privileges attached to the degrees of the London University—viz. at the Middle Temple, exemption from the deposit of 100*l*. on entering as a student at that Inn and at King's Inns, Dublin, the saving of five terms in the period of studentship for the Irish bar. Graduates in medicine of the said University, being also licensed practitioners, are eligible to be medical officers of Poor Law unions. By the Act 1 Vict. c. 56, the provisions of 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 48, and 3 Geo. 4, c. 16, relative to the admission and enrolment as attorneys and solicitors of persons who may have taken the degree of B.A. or B.L. in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, are extended to the University of London. By the provisions here referred to the duration of the articles is reduced from five to three years in the case of such graduates.

The Salaries of Public Servants.—The usual annual abstract of accounts "of every increase and diminution which has taken place, within the year 1844, in all public offices or departments," has just been presented to both Houses of Parliament, pursuant to the provisions of the Act 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24. The House of Commons ordered that it should be printed on the 19th ult. It is stated by the official compilers of this return, under the superintendence of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. E. Cardwell, M.P. that during the past year, 1844, an increase took place in the number of persons employed in all public offices, &c. amounting in all to 617; and in the total expenditure, arising from the salaries, wages, allowances, and expenses thereof, amounting to the sum of 79,520*l*. The concurrent diminution was 62, as regards the number of persons employed, and a sum of 32,875*l*. as regards the expenditure. It accordingly follows that a net increase remains of 555 persons employed, and an extra annual charge upon the public purse amounting to 46,645*l*. The chief increase took place in the departments of the Customs (21,438*l*.), the Stamps and Taxes (11,242*l*.), and the Post-office (31,705*l*.) The principal diminutions are to be remarked in the Treasury, Excise, Audit-office, and Stationery-office; but the decrease bears but a small proportion to the concurrent increase.

Oxford and Cambridge Universities.—The following is the amount of the annual payments to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge charged on the land revenue of the Crown, and also of the amount of paper duty remitted to each, during the last ten years; moved for by Mr. Christie and Sir R. Inglis.—It appears from this statement, that the annual amounts payable out of the said Crown revenue to both Universities include a sum total of 299*l*. 11s. 2d. of which 151*l*. is appropriated to the Oxford, and 148*l*. to the Cambridge University. These sums are paid, apparently, to preachers, professors of divinity, law, and physic; to various colleges; to the principal scholars of Brasenose College; to the master and fellows of Winchester College; to the poor scholars of Oxford; to Trinity College, Cambridge; and to five exhibition scholars in Oxford University, at 3*l*. 6s. 8d. a year each, &c. A portion of the amount is chargeable on the land revenue of the Crown, under a Treasury-warrant of September 1833, and a portion under the authority of an Act of Parliament (22 Car. 2), entitled, "An Act for advancing the Sale of Fee-farm Rents and other Rents," and under that of the Pension Deed, 30 Car. 2. The total amount of paper duty remitted to the University of Oxford for books in the Latin, Greek, Oriental, or northern languages, and for Bibles, Testaments, Prayer-books, and psalm-books, amounted, in 1844, to 1,426*l*.; in 1843, to 2,746*l*.; in 1842, to 2,841*l*.; in 1841, to 3,299*l*.; in 1840, to 3,743*l*.; in 1839, to 3,052*l*.; in 1838, to 2,645*l*.; in 1837, to 1,784*l*.; in 1836, to 8,883*l*.; and in 1835, to 6,922*l*. The amount of duty concurrently remitted to the sister University of Cambridge was respectively (from 1844 backwards to 1835), 1,209*l*., 598*l*., 500*l*., 1,728*l*., 3,497*l*., 1,873*l*., 1,507*l*., 2,694*l*., 5,290*l*. and 3,448*l*. It appears furthermore that 500*l*. per annum is allowed to each University, charged on the Stamps and Taxes revenue, by the Act 44 Geo. 3, c. 98. The origin and authority of such payment is thus stated: —By the Act 21 Geo. 3, c. 56, an annual sum of 500*l*. was directed to be paid, from the 24th of June, 1781, to each of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, out of the almanack duty, grounded on the fact that the Crown had granted to the said Universities the exclusive right of printing almanacks, upon a supposition that the power so to do was inherent in the Crown. A court of law decided that the Crown had no right to confer any exclusive privilege, and the payments accordingly ceased. Parliament enacted, under these circumstances, that a similar sum should be paid to each University out of the duties then imposed upon almanacks; and the reasons for the grant are assigned in the 10th clause of the Act 21 Geo. 3, c. 56. Another return informs the public that the total number of stamps used for the conferring of degrees at Oxford during the last ten years amounted to 5,340*l*. and the total value thereof to 22,962*l*. viz. 342*l*. for D.D.'s, 330*l*. for D.C.L.'s, 132*l*. for M.D.'s, 74*l*. for B.D.'s 330*l*. for B.C.L.'s, 170*l*. for M.B.'s, 11,994*l*. for M.A.'s, and 8,916*l*. for B.A.'s. From 1833 to 1844 there appear to have been created 4 doctors and 10 bachelors in music. The total number of matriculations in the same University, from October 1833 to October 1844, amounted to 4,349, producing a stamp revenue, at 1*l*. for each matriculation, of 4,349*l*. The total amount of fees paid to the Stamp-office during the said ten years by the University of Cambridge for degrees conferred, was 27,686*l*. in which period there were conferred 117 honorary degrees, 23 mand. degrees, 52 of D.D. 15 of LL.D. 51 of M.D. 42 of M.L. 48 of M.B. 113 of B.D. 84 of LL.B. 2,225 of M.A. 3,486 of B.A. 1 of Mus. Doct. and 2 of Mus. Bach. The total number of matriculists amounted to 4,750, producing 4,750*l*. at 1*l*. for each matriculation.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAND DRAINAGE.

Monday, April 14.—Lord Redesdale gave notice, on the part of the Duke of Richmond, that he should on Thursday move for a select committee to inquire into the expediency of a legislative enactment being introduced to enable possessors of entailed estates to charge such estates with a sum to be limited, for the purpose of draining and otherwise permanently improving the same.

ENTAILED ESTATES.

Thursday, April 17.—The Duke of Richmond rose to bring forward the motion of which he had given notice. He did not anticipate any objection to the motion, and he would not, therefore, detain their lordships at any length. He ventured to submit the motion (the object of which was to enable the possessors of entailed estates to charge such estates with a limited sum, for the purpose of draining and other permanent improvements), because he had long been of opinion that they were bound to do their utmost to promote the welfare of agriculture in this country, and he believed thorough and extensive draining to be of the greatest advantage. There had long been an Act in Scotland, known as "Montgomery's Act," which allowed the possessors of entailed estates to spend money in improvements, and charge three-fourths of the sum so expended on the estate. He felt satisfied that he could shew to the satisfaction of a select committee that the adoption of a measure founded on his motion would be of the greatest importance to the possessors of entailed estates in this country. He should, therefore, conclude by moving "for a select committee to inquire into the expediency of a legislative enactment being introduced to enable possessors of entailed estates to charge such estates with a sum to be limited, for the purpose of draining and otherwise permanently improving the same."—The Duke of Cleveland thought his noble friend had chosen the best method that could be adopted in moving for a select committee. He had no doubt the result would be of the greatest possible practical utility.—Lord Ashburton said that the Bill which was formerly passed upon this subject, was one to which he at the time took the liberty of offering his opposition, being apprehensive of the result, requiring as it did that the person seeking to avail himself of its provisions should go through the Court of Chancery. He also considered that it did not afford a sufficient check to estates being charged without any adequate benefit, by securing the appropriation of the money to the improvement of the land. Care should be taken not to expose persons owning estates in reversion to have those estates charged without any effectual improvement being made on the land; and that the rights of property were not tampered with, and put in jeopardy. He would suggest to the noble duke that he should not charge the estates permanently with the expenses of draining, but to give a power something like the provision in what was called Mr. Gilbert's Act, for the building of glebe houses—namely, a power to carry the charge over a certain number of years,—ten, fifteen, or twenty years, and paying off the incumbrance by instalments. The motion was agreed to, and the committee nominated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

NEW WRIT.

Monday, April 14.—On the motion of Mr. Young, a new writ was ordered to issue for the county of Kent, in the room of Viscount Marsham, now Earl of Romney.

PAROCHIAL SETTLEMENT BILL.

Mr. S. Crawford, seeing the Secretary of State for the Home Department in his place, wished to ask him when he intended to proceed with the Parochial Settlement Bill.—Sir J. Graham said that he would proceed with it on Wednesday.— Mr. S. Crawford gave notice that, on motion for the second reading of the Bill on Wednesday, he would move that it be read a second time that day six months.

MEDICAL REFORM.

Mr. Macaulay wished to ascertain from the right honourable baronet opposite (Sir James Graham) on what day he intended to move the second reading of the Bill which he had introduced on this subject?—Sir J. Graham was anxious, if the House permitted him, to advance the Bill a stage on that evening, and to propose that the discussion should take place at a future stage, previous to which he would state whether he had any modification or alteration to propose in the Bill.

LAW OF MORTMAIN.

Tuesday, April 15.—Lord J. Manners gave notice that on that day fortnight he would move for leave to bring in a Bill to alter and amend the law of mortmain. (Hear, hear.)

INCLOSURE OF COMMONS.

The Earl of Lincoln postponed for a fortnight his motion for leave to bring in a Bill to facilitate the inclosure of commons and waste lands in England and Wales.

JUSTICES' CLERKS BILL.

Wednesday, April 16.—Sir J. Graham said he was desirous to have this Bill pass through committee pro formâ, in order to introduce some alterations. If the House had no objection to allow him to adopt this course, he would not proceed with any further stage for ten days or a fortnight. (Hear, hear.)

NEW STATUTES

Of the Sessions 9 Victoria.

[In this record of actual Legislation, we adopt the plan of giving the titles alone of the statutes of no general or professional interest; and analyses of the more important changes in the law, printing at length such statutes or parts of statutes, only as are of particular interest to our readers.]

Cap. I.

An Act to apply the Sum of Eight Millions out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the year One thousand Eight Hundred and Forty-Five. (March 18, 1845.)

CAP. II.

An Act to continue for Three Years the Stamp Duties, granted by an Act of the Fifth and Sixth Years of her present Majesty, to assimilate the Stamp Duties in Great Britain and Ireland, and to make Regulations for collecting and managing the same, until the Tenth day of October, 1845. (March 18, 1845.)

CAP. III.

An Act for the Appointment of Constables, or other Officers for keeping the Peace near Public Works in Scotland. (March 18, 1845.)

CAP. IV.

An Act to continue for Three Years the Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices. (April 5, 1845.)

THIS is a continuation of the Income Tax Act, Sec. 4 continues the power to the Commissioners to compound for duties.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

IT seems that a vigorous opposition is being offered to the Justices' Clerks Bill. A great number of petitions have been presented, chiefly against the clause that prohibits clerks from conducting prosecutions, and we perceive that Sir JAMES GRAHAM has announced his intention to make some alterations. Probably this will be one of them.

BASTARDY APPLICATIONS.

ON this subject our attention has been called to a point of some practical importance by the following letter:—

Sir,—The Poor Law Amendment Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, provides in sec. 2 that any single woman delivered of a bastard child as therein mentioned, "may ——— at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child, or at any time thereafter, upon proof that the man alleged to be the father" —"has within the twelve months next after the birth of the child paid money for its maintenance"—"make application," &c. &c. for a summons.

I wish to call your attention to the words "upon proof," and to ask, 1st. Whether such proof is a condition precedent to the reception of the application?

2nd. How such proof is to be made; whether by the mother herself or otherwise?

3rd. Whether the justice has authority to receive such proof upon oath, and to administer an oath for that purpose, in this preliminary and ex parte proceeding?

This is a sample of the sort of questions that arise out of our crude and illogical Acts of Parliament of modern days. Your obedient servant,

W. P. P.

Having looked carefully at the clause to which our correspondent refers, we feel no difficulty as to the construction to be put upon it. In order to prevent the obvious evils which would arise from allowing stale and long-delayed applications of this nature, the clause limits the period within which those applications are to be made. It provides, generally, that no such application shall be made after the expiration of twelve months from the birth of the child; but it engrafts upon that limitation an exception in favour of those cases in which "the man alleged to be the father of the child has, within the twelve months next after its birth, paid money for its maintenance;" and it throws the burden of proving that fact upon the party making the application; so that in every case in which it appears that more than twelve months have elapsed since the birth of the child, the mother is bound to prove a payment of money by the father for its maintenance within the twelve months. Beyond all doubt such proof is a condition precedent to the right of making the application; the jurisdiction of the justice depends upon it, as much as the jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions in appeals against poor-rates or orders of removal depends upon their being the next practicable sessions after the making of the rate or the order. (Reg. v. The Great Western Railway Co. 1 Bitt. & Sym. 85.) It stands upon the same footing as proof of the service of notice of appeal against a rate or order of removal, which, though in practice seldom required, has always been considered a condition precedent to the right of appeal. (Archbold's Poor Law, 2nd edit. 162, 545.)

As to the nature of the proof by which the fact of payment is to be established, it must be such as to satisfy the justice of the fact; no other rule can be laid down upon the subject. That the evidence of the mother is admissible for that purpose, there is no reason to doubt; nor is it imperative upon the magistrate to require that her testimony on this point should be corroborated by other evidence; but it would, of course, be desirable in any case to produce such corroboration, as the decision of this preliminary inquiry rests entirely in the discretion of the justice; and he might not improbably regulate his proceeding by analogy to the proceedings on the hearing of the application itself; when, by the 3rd sect. of the Act, the mother's testimony must receive some corroboration. The proof, however, of whatever it consists, must be strictly regular; if of the testimony of witnesses, that testimony must be upon oath; if of documents, they must be proved according to the established rules of evidence. The recent cases of Reg. v. The Justices of Bucks (1 Bit. & Sym. 192), decided upon the 3rd section of this very statute; and Re Jones, and Ex parte Gray, there cited, leave no room to doubt that the evidence must be taken upon oath: and the case of Reg. v. Onslow (1 Bit. & Sym. 178), decided only last term, is a conclusive authority to shew that where a statute makes it lawful to do a certain thing on proof of certain facts, that proof must be strictly regular, especially when the proceeding is of an ex parte nature, and carried on in the absence of a party whose interests are affected thereby; and the application by the mother of a bastard child for a summons against the putative father, under the 2nd section of the Act of last session, is not only an ex parte proceeding, but one of a penal character. The observations already made involve an answer to the third doubt suggested by our correspondent. The stat. 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 62, s. 13, provides, "that it shall not be lawful for any justice of the peace or other person to administer, or cause or allow to be administered, or to receive, or cause or allow to be received, any oath, affidavit, or solemn affirmation touching any matter or thing whereof such justice or other person hath not jurisdiction or cognizance by some statute in force at the time being;" and if, therefore, we be right in our interpretation of the duty cast upon the justice by the 2nd section of Poor Law Amendment Act, the question of payment by the putative father for the maintenance of the child within the twelve months, is a matter whereof the justice has jurisdiction and cognizance by a statute in force; but even if there had been no statutory provision as to the proof of that fact, the preamble to the stat. of Wm. 4 would render it clear that it was not intended to apply to the case supposed; for it recites that "a practice has prevailed of administering and receiving oaths and affidavits, voluntarily taken and made, in matters not the subject of any judicial inquiry, nor in anywise pending, or at issue, before the justice of the peace, or other person by whom such oaths or affidavits have been administered." That was the evil to be remedied; that was the practice against which the statute was directed; but, in the case now under consideration, the administration of the oath would take place in a matter, which was both the subject of an essentially judicial inquiry, and not, as was said by Lord Denman in R. v. Nott (4 Q. B. 779), "the semblance of a judicial inquiry without the reality," and was also pending and at issue before the justice.

We cannot conclude the observations suggested by the above letter, without expressing our surprise that after the litigation which has taken place upon points of the same description, more care should not be taken in the wording of Acts of Parliament. How much difficulty might be avoided by the careful rejection of all words of equivocal meaning; and by an attentive collation of all the different provisions of the same statute, as well as of other statutes in pari materiâ! The clause which we have been considering seems to us, we confess, more than usually free from the prevailing errors and obscurity of modern legislation; and yet in a different provision of that very clause, it is expressly provided that the deposition of the mother is to be "on oath." The insertion of those words in one part of a clause, and their omission in another, is of itself enough to raise doubts, which, however, fortunately, the uniformity of recent decisions is sufficient to dispel. THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE business of the Term has commenced vigorously. There is a long arrear of judgments to be delivered, but the Cause Lists are lighter than usual. Rumours are abroad of probable official changes. We lament to hear that there is little probability of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL being enabled to return to the active duties of his office. Should he vacate it, the SOLICITOR-GENERAL will take his place. As the foremost man at the Bar, Mr. FITZROY KELLY undoubtedly ought to have the Solicitor-Generalship. But it is said that this will not be, but that Mr. TURNER, of the Chancery bar, will be promoted to that honour. The Chancellorship will remain as at present. All this is rumour, but still probable in itself, and if changes are delayed, it will only be in consequence of the unsettled condition of the political world, which renders the tenure of office extremely insecure.

We shall continue to report all the written judgments verbatim immediately after their delivery.

ON THE GENERAL ISSUE.

IT is now more than eleven years since the New Rules of Pleading came into operation. During this period they have been the subject of frequent discussion, and their effect in most cases of ordinary occurrence is settled by numerous decisions. But it must not be supposed that the cases answer all the questions that can possibly arise. The litigation of two centuries has not removed every difficulty in the construction of the Statute of limitations, and the New Rules of Pleading introduced changes of no less extent or importance. Every new report teems with fresh evidence of the variety of opinions still entertained by practitioners. It will, therefore, be a work of singular practical utility to consider the cases with a view to extract the principles already established, and which must govern the course of future decisions. Such a treatise remains to be written; the digests and books of common reference, which state the authorities without commenting on them, do not supply the defect. We propose to offer, in a series of papers some cursory remarks upon the present effect of the plea of the general issue,—one small branch of this ample subject. No attempt will be made to exhaust even this limited field of inquiry; and the object will be rather to elicit discussion than entirely to satisfy doubts.

We commence with the ACTION ON THE CASE.

By the New Rules of Pleading, "In actions on the case the plea of not guilty shall operate as a denial only of the breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant, and not of the facts stated in the inducement, and no other defence than such denial shall be admissible under that plea;" and examples are added to illustrate the rule.

It is evident that a precise definition of the meaning of the terms "breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant" applicable to every case would ascertain and settle the effect of the rule; for the facts stated in the inducement, and every other matter not forming a part of "the breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant,"—if there be a third class of facts,—are, by the express words of the rule, not in issue under not guilty. But without attempting to lay down such a definition, we will endeavour to develope the meaning of the rule by an examination of the decided cases; premising some general observations which may serve to elucidate the subject of inquiry.

In the application of this rule, all reference to position in the declaration must, notwithstanding some contrary opinions, be abandoned as utterly useless. It is true that the words, "facts stated in the inducement," seem, at first sight, to point to those averments which precede the charging part of the declaration. But the other part of the rule, upon which, as before remarked, its construction turns, has no reference to position. A fact constituting in its nature part of the wrongful act charged, does not lose that character by being intermixed with introductory averments. If it were so, the effect of not guilty would vary at the will or caprice of the pleader. It is quite obvious, from the examples given, which drop all reference to place, that no such absurdity was contemplated. The rule, therefore, means by "facts stated in the inducement," those which properly form the subject of introductory averments; constituting what may be termed matter of inducement. And this conclusion is fully supported by authorities: see amongst others, Lewis v. Alcock (3 M. & W. 190); and Dunford v. Trattles (12 M. & W. 533, 534).

An action on the case consists in general of two main ingredients, the right of the plaintiff, which may be given by general law, or arise out of contract, and the infringement of that right by the defendant. Consequently, the facts averred in the declaration are in general capable of a similar division; and those which constitute the right of the plaintiff may together be called the inducement, while those that go to shew an infringement of that right by the defendant may well be termed the charge. The word inducement is also used in another sense, to signify matter introduced for the purpose of explaining the charge. The best example of this use of the word occurs in the action for defamation. There the rule is, that the Court will understand the defamatory matter in the sense which, taken by itself, it naturally imports; and if, therefore, it is requisite to impose another meaning upon it for the purpose of sustaining the action, it must be shewn, by proper averments, that the words are capable of bearing that meaning. Applying the foregoing remarks to the examples subjoined to the rule, it will be found that the distinction above laid down between the inducement and charge is in every case coincident with the division then made between the matters put in issue and those not denied by not guilty.

Declarations on the case usually annex to the act charged some qualifying epithet, as maliciously, wrongfully, and the like. Now it is very important to remark the broad distinction existing between cases where such words are used to describe some real quality of the act to be proved by circumstances annexed to it, and those where the same words merely express its legal character, without any reference as to facts. The badge of the latter use of such words is, that their presence will not supply the want of any material allegation, and that their omission will not substantially affect the declaration.

We will now proceed to the examination of decisions, commencing with some actions on the case, which are founded upon the infringement of general legal rights. As they exist independently of particular facts, the Court itself notices them, and therefore no inducement, in one of the senses of the word, is requisite: "in such cases there is no assertion of right, the whole matter alleged in the declaration is an act of injury."

This observation is cited from the judgment of Patteson, J. in Cotton v. Browne, 3 A. & E. 312. That was an action for indicting the plaintiff maliciously and without probable cause, and a plea, shewing specially a probable cause, pleaded together with the general issue, was struck out as unnecessary. The cases of Porter v. Weston, 5 N. C. 715, and Hounsfield v. Drury, 11 A. & E. 98, shew that not guilty denies the malice. Here the words maliciously and without probable cause, describe two real qualities of the act, each of which requires proof. (1 T. R. 544, Johnstone v. Sutton.) They are the very circumstances annexed to the proceeding which alone made it wrongful. It is upon the same principle that, where the scienter is material, as in actions for knowingly keeping dangerous animals, it is in issue under not guilty. (Thomas v. Morgan, 2 C. M. & R. 496.)

In actions for malicious legal proceedings, the averment of their termination is necessary, "to let the plaintiff in to aver falsity or malice" (Gibb, R. 174, Parker v. Langley), and therefore a declaration omitting it is bad on demurrer. (S.C.) It appears also to be a part of the evidence of the want of probable cause; for a plaintiff was nonsuited upon failing to prove the termination of the proceeding, though that had not been averred in the declaration. (Whitworth v. Hale, 2 B. & Ad. 695.) Merely as evidence, it would be sufficient that the proceedings should be at an end at the time of the trial, and no more would be proved by a verdict for the plaintiff upon a declaration omitting the averment. Still, the plaintiff, under those circumstances, would, it seems, be entitled to judgment. (Skinner v. Gunton, 1 Saund. 228, d.) According to these remarks, the averment removes the objection of a quasi estoppel, and also states a matter of evidence. In its former character it is no part of the wrongful act charged, and accordingly is held not to be in issue under not guilty. (Drummond v. Pigou, N.C. 114; Watkins v. Lee, 5 M. & W. 270; and Atkinson v. Raleigh, 3 Q. B. 79.) And if the fact in question is stated in the declaration, and not put in issue, the defendant cannot dispute it for the purpose of proving a probable cause. Admitting that not guilty does not deny the termination of the proceedings, and, as is evident, that it does put in issue the fact of the proceeding, and the defendant's participation in it, it is still possible that the general effect of the plea upon the proof would be to render unnecessary any evidence of the fact of the proceeding taken per se. That would be the case if the jury may infer its institution from the defendant's not having denied its termination; but it would be otherwise if negative pleas operate simply as a waiver of proof of the facts which they do not put in issue. Some remarks will be hereafter made upon the question here suggested.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

Foreign Office, April 15.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint Sir James Turing, bart. British Vice-Consul at Rotterdam, to be her Majesty's Consul at Rotterdam.

The Queen has also been graciously pleased to appoint Francis Waring, esq. British Vice-Consul at Alicante, to be her Majesty's Consul at Norfolk, in the United States.

Court of Common Pleas.—Tuesday the 15th inst. being the first day of Easter Term, the judges breakfasted with the Lord Chancellor, and afterwards proceeded to open, with the usual forms, the several law courts in Westminster Hall. The learned judges who preside in full court are, Lord Chief Justice Tindal, Mr. Justice Coltman, Mr. Justice Erle, and Mr. Justice Cresswell. Mr. Serjeant Channell and Mr. Serjeant Manning having been granted patents of precedence, took their seats accordingly.

George R. Robinson, esq. (Chairman at Lloyd's), and George Forbes, esq. having been appointed Deputy-Lieutenants of the county of Middlesex, on Thursday morning took the usual oaths of allegi and supremacy before Mr. Justice Coleridge.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

EASTER TERM EXAMINATION.

Notices of admission on the Roll of Attorneys have been given for Easter Term by	117 candidates
Of these there have been already examined	29
Leaving only	88
To which are to be added	5
Who have given examination, but not admission notices
The number for examination therefore is	93

The examiners have appointed the 29th inst. to take the examination. The articles of clerkship and assignments, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations appointed by the judges, must be left before the 22nd inst. at the usual place; and where the articles have not expired, but will expire during term, the candidate may be examined conditionally, provided the articles are left within the first seven days of term. The answers required in writing to questions are classed under the several heads of—Preliminary, common and statute law, and practice of the courts; conveyancing, equity, and practice of the courts; bankruptcy, and practice of the courts; and criminal law and proceedings before justices of the peace.

The Attorney-General's Health.—It is with real regret that we re-state, on authority which merits confidence, that there is no substantial improvement in the health of Sir William Follett. We would fain hope that a life rendered valuable to his connections by the personal virtues which adorn his character, and to his country by the talents he is known to possess, by the frequent proofs he has supplied in his political and professional course, will yet be spared. This, however, will depend on his total abstinence from business, and his removal from a sphere in which the fevered state of the constitution, drying up the springs of life, is stimulated by a natural wish to be present at, and to take part in, the strife of parties, and to assume the active duties of his post as first law officer of the Crown. Within these few days the reports of the changes which would be rendered necessary in the retirement of Sir William Follett as Attorney-General, have been revived; it is even stated that the arrangements are fixed, subject, of course, to that event. The Solicitor-General would become Attorney-General. The claims of Mr. Fitzroy Kelly to the thus vacated Solicitor-Generalship, on the grounds of party services and of high professional reputation, are very strong. Still many well-informed persons doubt whether Mr. Kelly would be the new Solicitor-General. Sir Robert Peel, it is believed, has no special wish to introduce Mr. Kelly to office, though he would have no objection to shelve him as a puisne judge, and thus relieve himself from the admitted claims which Mr. Kelly has upon him as Prime Minister. Mr. Turner, of the Chancery Bar, is mentioned as a very likely man for the Solicitor Generalship. If the state of Sir William Follett's health would have permitted him to take the seals, there is reason to believe Lord Lyndhurst would have relinquished them, to enable him to do so, and would have been introduced to a less laborious post in the Cabinet. The circumstances to which we have alluded preclude, however, the possibility of such an arrangement; and things will probably remain in the Chancery Court as they now are, until the course of public events, which are manifestly tending to an early break-up of the Peel Government, produces a complete change in all the offices of State.—Globe.

Easter Term.—The first day of Easter Term the Lord Chancellor gave his customary entertainment to the Judges and members of the Bar, at his mansion in George-street, preparatory to proceeding to open the several courts of law and equity. The Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, the Vice-Chancellor of England, Lord Chief Justice Tindal, the Lord Chief Baron, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Baron Rolfe, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr.

Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Coltman, Mr. Justice Cresswell, Mr. Justice Wightman, and the Recorder of London, attended. There were also present Mr. Commissioner Barlow, Mr. Commissioner Shepherd, and Mr. Commissioner Goulburn, as well as the following members of the Bar:—the Solicitor-General, Sir G. Wilson, Sir G. Rose, Mr. H. Twiss, Mr. Serjeant Merewether, Mr. Serjeant Channell, Mr. Serjeant Lawes, Mr. Serjeant Manning, Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, Mr. Cockburn, Mr. Pemberton, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Bethel, Mr. Whateley, Mr. Austin, Mr. Godson, Mr. S. Wortley, Mr. Turner, Mr. Wilbraham, Mr. Mathews, Mr. Teed, Mr. K. Parker, Mr. Walker, Mr. Russell, Mr. Anderton, Mr. L. Wigram, Mr. Hill, Mr. Millar, Mr. Wakefield, Mr. Kindersley, Mr. Tinney, Mr. Simpkinson, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pollock, Mr. Cooper, Mr. W. Romilly, Mr. Hodgson, Mr. Lee, Mr. Humfrey, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Parry, Mr. Wood, Mr. Parker, and Mr. Chilton. Of the Masters in Chancery Messrs. Dowdeswell, Duckworth, Senior, and Lynch alone attended. The company began to arrive shortly after eleven o'clock, and at half-past twelve the Chancellor, accompanied by the judges in their order of seniority, proceeded to Westminster for the purpose of opening the courts with the usual formalities. The unfavourable state of the weather very much detracted from the interest generally excited on similar occasions, but there were a great many persons congregated along the line of route, anxious to catch a glimpse of the learned dignitaries.

BUSINESS OF THE ROLLS COURT.—The book of causes before the Master of the Rolls, for hearing during Easter Term, and in the sittings after, if any, has just been issued, and it appears that there are in the whole before his lordship, 138; this number includes those causes which were in the list of Hilary Term and remained undecided up to the close of the vacation sittings, as also such new causes as have been set down since the issue of the list of Hilary Term.

EASTER TERM.—On Tuesday Easter Term commenced. The arrears of the common law courts amount in the whole to 217. In the court of Queen's Bench the number of new trials remaining undetermined at the end of the sittings after the last term numbered 114, including seven rules waiting the decision of the Court. In the Court of Common Pleas there are 23 matters in the remanet paper, including two for judgment, and one registration appeal case from York. There are 16 demurrers to be argued in the same court. The whole arrears of the Court of Exchequer amount to 41. In the peremptory paper there are two, and in the special paper 21, which number includes the demurrer, Baron v. Denman, esq. on which two other causes depend for argument. The present lists, compared to the number which have appeared on former terms, are comparatively light.

THE CORONER AND THE MAGISTRATES.—Mr. Baron Rolfe is reported to have assigned, amongst other reasons for his refusal to grant a habeas corpus for the removal of Connor from Newgate to the Coroner's Court, that it would be a dangerous proceeding, inasmuch as a great criminal might, by collusion or otherwise, effect his escape in the transit from one place to the other. It did not, perhaps, occur to the recollection of the learned judge that such an event did actually take place, not many years ago, in the case of the notorious Ikey Solomons. He was supposed to have bribed the officer to whose charge he was intrusted to connive at his rescue by a party of his friends, who surrounded the coach in which, after an unsuccessful application that he might be held to bail, he was being conveyed back to Newgate. He escaped; it was after a long time, and with much trouble, that he was recaptured; and thus the ends of justice had nearly been defeated.—Globe.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AUCTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As it will now doubtless become the general practice to submit all estates for sale to public auction, it would, we think, prove most desirable to settle the principle on which auctioneers should be paid on such occasions; for, without any reflection on that body, every practitioner must have experienced the great difficulty of arranging terms with the auctioneer, not only after, but even previous to a sale, and in too many cases, their clients have felt the unreasonableness of their charges. As sales will now be effected by public auction and deposits have to be paid, such deposits ought, we think, to be paid into a bank instead of to the auctioneer, for reasons so self-evident, that we need not here adduce them. In the hope of effecting some desirable arrangement in this most important subject, we would suggest that a committee, consisting of six London, and the same number of country practitioners, should be at once appointed by the London Law Societies, to consider and report thereon, which report, emanating from such a body, could not fail of carrying due weight with, and receiving attention from, all parties interested,—the public, auctioneers, and solicitors.

If the auctioneers decline all negotiation, then we see no practical objection to solicitors taking out the necessary certificate, confining the business to sales of real property; as we have already the trouble and responsibility of preparing the particulars and conditions of sale, and even at the auction are called upon to reply to all important questions.

We are, Sir, &c.

15th April, 1845. A COUNTRY FIRM.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"R. C." submits the following on the moot point relating to Abstracts of Title:—

Notwithstanding the arguments which have been adduced by your correspondent "A. F." and others, to the contrary, it does seem to me quite clear that the mortgagor's solicitor is entitled to furnish (if he have the means of doing so) the Abstract of Title prior to the mortgage, on a sale of the estate, inasmuch as, in fact, the equity of redemption which is in him can, under the circumstances, be the only subject of contract to be displayed upon the face of such abstract, and with this the mortgagee or his solicitor can have nothing to do. The mortgage is, in fact, scarcely a part of the title, but a blot or excrescence upon it, or, rather, an estate carved out of the fee, and which must be restored ere the contract for the whole estate can be completed. As to this part of the estate, then I should certainly think that the solicitor to the mortgagee, whose property that part is, is entitled to furnish the abstract; and it would be an unfair advantage for the mortgagor's solicitor to take, were he to prepare the abstract of the mortgage from the draft in his possession. By this course, the mortgagor's solicitor furnishing the abstract generally, and the mortgagee's solicitor furnishing the abstract of the security, the fair and equitable claims of all parties seem to me to be fully satisfied.

"T. M." (Market Harborough) thus comments on "the Abstract question."

I have just read the letter from "A. F." in your last. I agree with a former letter in your paper that it is monstrous for the mortgagee's solicitor to claim the right in every case to prepare the abstract where the estate is sold by the mortgagor, and when his solicitor has the materials to prepare the abstract; and if the plan "A. F." suggests of the mortgagee's solicitor refusing to allow an abstract not prepared by himself to be compared with the deeds, it will tend very much to prevent solicitors applying to other solicitors for loans, and also lead, in a great many cases, to the mortgagor's solicitor paying off, out of his own funds, the mortgage, and taking up the deeds with a receipt, and undertaking from the mortgagee to reconvey, &c. on request. I submit, the doctrine that a stranger to the mortgagor should do the principal part of the business for which he is to pay, should be confined within as narrow limits as possible.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Publisher begs to inform the Subscribers to the LAW TIMES that the subscription for the current half-year should be transmitted in the course of the ensuing week, by those who wish to avail themselves of the advantages of pre-payment.

Members of the Verulam Society are requested at the same time to forward their subscriptions for the current year.

The pre-paid subscription for the current half-year of THE CRITIC, henceforth to be published weekly, will be 8s. 6d. only.

The Indices to the fourth volume being now completed, the numbers for binding may be sent, through the post, in parcels open at the ends, with a mark by which they may be known, and of which the Publisher should be advised by letter, as also how, when bound, it is to be returned. If sent by parcel, advantage may be taken of the opportunity to inclose other books for the binder.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1845.

TO READERS.

The Index, the Reports, and some arrears of long standing, compel us to omit various leading articles that were in type. At this, the most busy season of the year, with the Courts, the Parliament, new Statutes, Legal Intelligence and Sales, all pressing upon us at once, and with the increased demands on our space consequent upon the plan of publishing the verbatim reports of the written judgments, we are compelled to curtail comments.

But we are pleased to be able to announce that by the erection of a monster printing machine we hope to be enabled to publish a double sheet of the LAW TIMES, whenever an influx of advertisements or a flood of reports shall make the enlargement desirable.

We beg to refer our readers to the remarks on Solicitors and Auctioneers in the Journal of Property, and to invite their cordial co-operation in the design there described.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

WE regret that the Forms of Conditions of Sale, so anxiously inquired for, are not yet ready for delivery. The fact is, that after they were in type, to insure the utmost accuracy, they were again submitted to the counsel by whom they were settled; the alterations made imposed upon the printer almost the task of recomposing; the proof had again to be revised and again corrected.

But the first Form is now almost completed. It will be ready for delivery on Thursday next. This will be a common Form of Conditions of Sale as applicable to Freeholds and Leaseholds, with a Form of Agreement subjoined.

No. II. will be Conditions of Sale for Copyholds.

Nos. III. to X. will consist of Special Conditions, to be annexed to the usual Conditions, as circumstances may require. The particulars of each will be stated as they are completed.

The convenience of such forms as these will be, that thus the Solicitor and Auctioneer will be enabled at the auction to place copies in the hands of bidders at a very trifling cost, and in sales of small properties in many lots, the saving of time and labour by means of them will be incalculable.

The prices will be, for the conditions and agreement (three pages), 3s. per doz.; for the special conditions (one page), 1s. 6d. per doz.

To members of the Verulam Society they will, of course, be supplied as the other forms, at one-fourth less.

A series of forms in Conveyancing, to comprise the common covenants and provisos in deeds, leases, and agreements, are now being settled by counsel, and will be lithographed.

Forms of cognovits and warrants of attorney will next be added to the list. But really so great is the labour of getting up such works with the care which alone will recommend them to the Profession, that we must ask the members to exercise some patience.

A USEFUL SOCIETY.

A SOCIETY is in course of formation for the purpose of procuring for the members the instruction which our wealthy legal corporations do not provide.

It is to consist of a limited number, say twenty-five or thirty, barristers desirous of obtaining information on those branches of science requisite for the due discharge of the duties of an advocate; such as medical jurisprudence, anatomy and physiology, manufacturing chemistry, mechanics, &c. &c. A trifling subscription would thus procure a series of practical lectures, in which the student will be enabled not merely to hear, but personally to conduct, the experiments.

Gentlemen who may be willing to take part in this endeavour to supply some of the defects in existing legal education, are requested to forward their cards to the Editor of the LAW

Times, and a communication will be made to them from the parties who have suggested this very excellent design.

SHAM LAWYERS.

Here is another of this noxious tribe. We are informed that the very existence of Stow and Burnet is unknown. It is a printed letter.

Bradford, Mar. 7, 1845.

Sir,—We are directed to apply to you for the sum of 4s., which is due from you to Mr. Jas. Ibbetson, and to inform you that unless the same is paid into his hands on or before Thursday next, we have his instructions to commence an Action-at-Law against you for the recovery thereof, without further notice.

We are, your's obediently,

Stow & Burnet.

Your immediate attention is desired, as no further notice will be given.

Addressed to Henry Burt.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The eighth number of Magistrates' Cases, completing the second part, and comprising those of the last Term, is now published.

The ninth and tenth numbers of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases will be delivered early next week.

The ninth number of Practice Cases is in the Press.

This will almost bring up arrears, and henceforth we hope the Reports will appear as soon after the close of the Term as is consistent with the research and care necessary for their preparation.

Some members have suggested that the Practice Cases would be rendered more complete and valuable by the addition of Practice Cases in Equity. What is the opinion of others? Would they be serviceable?

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Law of Nisi Prius; comprising the Declarations, Pleadings, and Evidence in particular Actions, namely, Bills of Exchange, Notes, Cheques, &c. Policies of Insurance in all cases, and in Ejectment. By John Frederick Archbold, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Vol. II. London, 1845. Richards.

Like all the works to which the name of Mr. Archbold is appended, the characteristic of this is its practical adaptation to the requirements of the man of business. They are eminently books for the office and the court; they supply precisely the information wanted for use, in a shape readily intelligible, and so arranged that it may be found without difficulty.

The first volume of the Law of Nisi Prius has been for some time in the hands of the Profession, and has received entire approbation; and now that the work is completed, it will be welcomed by many who would not purchase the single volume. We have not that first volume before us, nor have we seen it; we can, therefore, only speak of it from hearsay, and we can offer no opinion of its merits or account of its plan, other than that which we have above given from report. Our present notice must be limited to the second volume, just published.

As we know nothing of the general design and compass of the work, in the absence of the preface, we can but state the manner of the performance of the volume upon our table.

It is divided into three parts, of which the first treats of Actions on Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, Bankers Notes' and Cheques; the second, of Insurance, and the third, of Ejectment.

The method of treatment appears to be as follows:—

The form of action is described; then the declaration (and forms of various courts), with the cases bearing upon them; then the plea (varied and illustrated in like manner); then the evidence necessary to suppor. the plaintiff's case; then the evidence required for the defendant; and, lastly, the verdict, interest, costs, &c.

The cases are brought down to the latest time preceding the publication of the volume; copious notes are appended to the text; there is a table of cases, the number of which proves the labour expended upon the work, and an extremely copious index is subjoined.

The size of this treatise is most convenient; by means of a small but clear type and no waste of margin, the matter is compressed into a volume which may be carried in the portmanteau and the bag without being a burden, and all who have occasion to take their law-books beyond their chambers will recognize the vast advantage of having their portable law brought within the smallest compass consistent with clearness and accuracy. It is certainly a great recommendation to Mr. Archbold's Nisi Prius that it supplies the practitioner in both branches of the Profession with the information needed in the courts with the least possible burden to his bag, and this alone would secure for it attention, even were its intrinsic merits much less than they appear to be.

Should we chance hereafter to light upon the first volume, we shall be enabled to convey to our readers a better description of the plan and execution of [illegible] work than we can do from the fragment before [illegible] At present we can say no more of it than that if the execution of the first equals that of the second, it will be a very valuable addition to the practice shelf of the law library.

The Law of Judgments and Crown Debts as they affect Real Property. By Frederick Prideaux, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Third edition. London, 1845. Spettigue.

The third edition of a law-book is exempt from criticism; it has received the most unequivocal of verdicts, the approval of experience. It must have been tried in many circumstances, and proved faithful to its promises. Its counsels must have been followed frequently with safe results; they who bought once upon speculation must have bought the second edition from confidence, and a third edition will be accepted without question as a sure improvement of that which had been already pronounced good.

In this edition Mr. Prideaux has extended his comments to Crown Debts, and with some other topics he has brought down the cases to the present time. Particular attention is given to the recent enactments with reference to judgments and crown debts, as these immediately affect the whole of the debtor's lands, and a purchaser should never complete his contract without considering whether the property which is the subject of the purchase may be affected in his hands by any pre-existing incumbrances of this nature. The importance to the practitioner of such a treatise as this will be obvious.

With these few remarks we submit this new edition of Mr. Prideaux's successful work to the attention of our readers.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

THE AUCTIONEER AND THE SOLICITOR.

The repeal of the Auction Duty will necessarily produce an immediate and entire revolution in the system hitherto adopted for the sale of estates and other properties of large value. The sale by private contract, before resorted to in the great majority of cases, purposely to avoid the burden of the auction duty or the risk and trouble of evading it, will rarely again be heard of, for sellers will always prefer the chance of a better price in the public market. At the most moderate calculation, the number of sales by auction will be doubled, and to the same extent will be enlarged the business and consequent importance and influence of the Auctioneers.

Whatever affects the Auctioneer, for good or for ill, must also deeply interest the Solicitor. The Auctioneer is mainly dependent upon the Solicitor for his employment, and the Solicitor is dependent upon the skill and integrity of the Auctioneer for the advantageous disposal of the property intrusted to his charge. No Auctioneer can flourish unless he enjoys the confidence of the Solicitors, to whom, in the vast majority of cases, he must look for his retainers.

Being thus intimately connected, thus mutually dependent, with the assurance that henceforth they will be brought into still more frequent communication, it is of extreme importance to both that they should proceed with a full understanding on both sides of the terms upon which business is to be conducted. In brief, it appears to us to be very desirable that the Auctioneers, at least all those of them who are intrusted with the sales of estates, should take rank as a regular Profession, recognizing among themselves fixed laws of professional etiquette in the conduct of their business, the violation of which should be followed by the same expulsion from an honourable place among their fellows as is visited upon offences of a like nature in other professions.

For the purpose of present argument, we assume now that which, in future articles, we propose to prove in detail, namely, that it is to the Solicitor a matter of vital moment that he should employ a good Auctioneer, and that to be a really good Auctioneer demands education, integrity, natural ability, knowledge of business, the manners and feelings of a gentleman, and the guarantee of station in society, and respectability of connection. The Solicitor, therefore, is much concerned in the preservation of the position of the Auctioneers, and it will be for the interest of the Legal Profession to give their cordial aid to any measures that may be likely to advance that object.

At this moment we have a special motive for asking the attention of the readers of the Law Times to this topic. It may be in their power to contribute much to the end we have indicated. As thus:—

The increase of auctions will, no doubt, occasion a great and sudden increase in the number of Auctioneers. As it is a profession that appears to require no previous training, which every man fancies himself fitted to follow, there will be multitudes of competitors in all parts of the country, the greater portion of whom will be necessarily altogether unfitted for the responsible post for which they will offer themselves.

It is probable that anxiety to obtain some business on any terms will tempt these new men to all kinds of irregular practices. Offers will be made to the sellers of property to conduct the sale, at charges not merely unrecognized, but unremunerative, in hope that the mere show of business might bring business. The consequence of such an unfair competition will inevitably be to lower the tone of the entire Profession, and to destroy the character which it is now more than ever important that the Auctioneers should maintain.

It is in the power of the Solicitors to prevent this threatened mischief. Unaided by them, no Auctioneer of the better class could subsist. If they will not countenance the adventurers, who will doubtless offer themselves, the danger we have described will be avoided. Our earnest recommendation to the Legal Profession is, to require in the Auctioneers they employ a high standard of character and attainment; to encourage no new applicant who has not both; and to prefer the established men, unless they have the most satisfactory assurance that an aspirant is in all respects a fit candidate for admission into the acknowledged ranks. The reasons for this we will state more particularly hereafter.

It is because the Solicitors are so much concerned in the position of the Auctioneers that we have resolved to enlarge the department of the LAW TIMES entitled the JOURNAL OF PROPERTY, and make it a novel and prominent feature, by devoting special attention to all matters affecting the relationship of Solicitor and Auctioneer; the law and practice of sales by auction; the correspondence of Solicitors and Auctioneers on subjects connected therewith, or with their mutual interests; the prices at which estates and properties are sold, and such other information of a similar nature as experience or readers may suggest as likely to be of practical utility. In this design we shall have the aid of the highest legal ability. Arrangements are in progress with eminent Lawyers to supply the legal information necessary for all engaged in sales by auction, whether Solicitors or Auctioneers. The cases on the subject of auctions will be specially reported, and accompanied with explanatory notes; but we must rely upon the Auctioneers to supply us with statistical and other facts, such as the results of their sales, communications as to the selling values of various species of property, and other matters that may properly fall within this department of the LAW TIMES.

There is another reason for this arrangement. The readers of the LAW TIMES will have noticed that it has been adopted by the principal auctioneers in the metropolis as the medium for their advertisements. There is little doubt that ere long it will be the recognized organ for the circulation, among the class by whom it is especially important they should be seen, because they are the principal buyers, of the announcements of all the sales of estates and large properties throughout the kingdom. The want of such a central medium, where all sales may be found, has long been felt, and now it has become indispensable both to the Solicitor and to the Auctioneer. The LAW TIMES, from the very nature of its circulation, and as the established Journal of the Legal Profession, affords unequalled advantages for supplying the defect.

And that it may be enabled to become that which it promises to be, the JOURNAL OF PROPERTY for the United Kingdom, without trenching on any of the space hitherto devoted to purely legal intelligence, arrangements are now in progress by which, whenever required by influx of advertisements, an addition of eight pages will be made to the present sheet. For this purpose, a huge printing machine, the largest in the metropolis, is now in course of erection, and in two or three weeks will be ready for use.

Auctioneers whose advertisements are numerous will be treated with for the regular insertion of all their property sales on very liberal terms; and the LAW TIMES, which will henceforth have a special interest and utility for them, will be supplied to them regularly on the same terms as to Solicitors making prepayments.

THE following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words . . . . . 5s.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

REVENUE OF THE RAILWAYS.—We have now before us the official railway returns made up for the last three months, being that quarter of the year in which the traffic is smallest and also least subject to fluctuation. It appears that the aggregate receipts from traffic, since the 1st of January, on the principal public railways, amounts in round numbers to 1,210,000*l.* while last year it only reached 1,054,000*l.* at the same period, being an increase of 156,000*l.* on the quarter. Of this increase we find that 26,000*l.* belongs to the Great Western; 12,000*l.* to the London and Birmingham; 11,000*l.* to the Grand Junction; 5,000*l.* to the North of England; 6,000*l.* to the London and Brighton; 10,000*l.* to the Manchester and Leeds; 21,000*l.* to the Midlands; 22,000*l.* to the South-Eastern; and 5,000*l.* to the Eastern Counties and North-Eastern. Among the smaller lines we have an increase of 1,200*l.* to the Chester and Birkenhead, 3,000*l.* to the Edinburgh and Glasgow, 3,400*l.* to the Glasgow and Ayr, 3,000*l.* to the London and Blackwall, 9,000*l.* to the London and Croydon, 3,500*l.* to the Manchester and Birmingham, 3,700*l.* to the Newcastle and Carlisle. Of the lines not opened last year we have on the Yarmouth and Norwich at present an increase of 26*l.* per week, and on the Newcastle and Darlington an increase at the rate of 200*l.* per week. Some of these amounts are effected by extensions of the line, &c. but the greater part arise solely from the steadily increasing trade of the country. —Railway Chronicle.

Public Sales.

[In future the results of such sales only as are advertised in the LAW TIMES will be published in this list, and reference will be given to the advertisements, it being found that, without the particulars, the results of sales are of no practical value. As sale by auction will in future be generally resorted to, auctioneers in town and country advertising in the LAW TIMES are requested regularly to forward the results of the sales so advertised.]

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, April 17.

JOBSON v. LOXDALE.

New trial.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the defendant in this case should not be set aside and a new trial had.

It was an action of assumpsit, tried on Thursday before Mr. Baron Platt, for the use and hire of certain carriages and horses, and for the value of divers quantities of provisions supplied to divers persons at the defendant's request. These goods were supplied by the plaintiff, who kept an hotel at Shrewsbury, during a contested election for the office of coroner; and the only question on the trial was, whether the defendant, who had been the agent of one of the candidates, was personally liable. The learned serjeant moved on the ground that the verdict was against evidence.

By the Court.—We cannot disturb the verdict unless the learned baron who tried the case is very much dissatisfied with it. We will consult him on the point.

INSKIP v. HARPER and OTHERS.

New trial.

Whately, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the plaintiff, with 2s. 6d. damages, should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of the misdirection of the Lord Chief Baron, before whom the case was tried at Stafford.

It was an action of trespass for entering the house of the plaintiff, and for forcing him out of his said house and keeping him in custody, and for seizing divers goods of the plaintiff, &c. The Lord Chief Baron had directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, but had added, "I should be sorry to tell you to give a farthing or the smallest coin of the realm, but if you give one or two shillings, that will be plenty." The jury had given 2s. 6d. upon this recommendation, but also had ordered the goods which had been improperly seized to be returned, and this had not been done.

Lord Denman, C.J.—The Lord Chief Baron clearly expected that the goods would be returned. That had better be looked to. If they are not returned, you may have your rule.

RAY v. THOMPSON.

New trial.

Knowles, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and the verdict entered for the defendant, or why there should not be a nonsuit, or a new trial. It was an action of assumpsit tried at Liverpool before Wightman, J. for breach of an agreement "to sell a ship, the Anne," of Sunderland, for 1,200*l.*, 600*l.* to be paid in cash, and 600*l.* by an "approved" bill in London, six months after date. The declaration alleged the plaintiff's readiness and willingness to pay according to the agreement, and issue was joined on that fact. Upon the trial it appeared that the plaintiff had expressed his readiness to give such a bill as would be "approved" of, but had not actually tendered a bill for the approval of the defendant. The learned judge held that this was a sufficient compliance with the allegation of "readiness and willingness" in the declaration, and on that misdirection the rule was now moved. A distinction was to be drawn between payment by money and by any other means. The assertion that a man was ready to pay the money would be sufficient; but the only evidence of readiness and willingness, with regard to any other mode of payment, was by a tender of the thing itself. Here an inspection of the bill was absolutely necessary to see whether the names were approved of.

Lord Denman, C. J.—You may take a rule.

WILSON v. ROBERTSON.

A plea of justification placed on the record in an action for libel, but abandoned on the trial, is no evidence of express malice.

Murphy, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict found for the defendant in this case, on the ground of misdirection. It was an action for libel tried before Wightman, J. at Durham. The defendant pleaded a plea of justification, but on the trial no witnesses were called in support of it. Under these circumstances, the counsel for the plaintiff requested the learned judge to direct the jury that the fact of putting a justification upon the record, and bringing no witnesses to prove it, was in itself evidence of express malice. The learned judge refused so to direct the jury, and for his omission on that point the present rule was moved. The dictum of Lord Abinger, C.B. in Warwick v. Foulkes (12 Mee. & W. 508), was strong to shew that a plea of justification placed on the record, without any attempt made to support it, was evidence, though it might be slight evidence, of express malice.

Lord Denman, C. J.—Warwick v. Foulkes only decides that the fact of putting a plea of justification on the record may be taken into account by the jury in estimating the amount of damages. That case assumes that the defendant is wrong; but it is quite new to me to say that by itself the plea of justification is such evidence of express malice as could cause any change in the verdict itself. It is no evidence of express malice, and my brother Wightman did right in refusing to put it to the jury. Rule refused.

MOORE v. DOLFORD.

New trial.

Barstow moved for a rule to set aside the verdict found for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit. It was an action against the executor of Thos. Dolford, for use and occupation, and upon the common money counts, tried before the Lord Chief Justice at Guildhall. The pleas were, first, Non assumpsit, and secondly, a set-off due to the defendant. The replication to the set-off was, Not indebted modo et formâ. On the trial the plaintiff proved his demand, and the defendant a set-off to a larger amount. The plaintiff, to get rid of the set-off, then proved a discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act in 1841, and that the subject-matter of the set-off was contained in the schedule. For the defendant it was objected, 1st, that this evidence was inadmissible under the general replication, and that it ought to have been specially pleaded; and secondly, that the debt of "Thomas Dolford" had been inserted in the schedule as that of "Samuell Dolford," which description precluded the discharge from being a bar to the debt. On the first point, which was the more important, he now submitted that, though the new rules did not apply to replications, the plaintiff could not, on a set-off, be in a better condition than if he were the defendant in an original declaration in debt. (Chapple v. Durston, 1 Cr. & Jer. 9.) The Court would look at this case as if it had occurred before the new rules, and then the discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act must have been pleaded. (Bircham v. Creighton, 10 Bing. 11.) It had been held in a recent case in the Exchequer (Phillips v. Sherwin, not yet reported), that the discharge under the Insolvent Act did not extinguish the debt. A debt was not extinguished even in bankruptcy, which was a stronger case. (Newton v. Scott, 9 Mee. & W. 434, confirmed in error, 10 Mee. & W. 471.) On the second point he relied upon the 69th section of the Insolvent Debtors Act.

MAY and WIFE v. BURDETT.

New trial.

Cockburn, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment in this case should not be arrested, or a new trial had, either on the ground of misdirection or of the verdict being against evidence. It was an action on the case for keeping a monkey, which had attacked and wounded the female plaintiff, tried in Middlesex before Wightman, J. Plea, Not guilty. In moving for an arrest of judgment, he submitted that the declaration disclosed no sufficient cause of action. It alleged that the defendant "kept a certain monkey, knowing the same to be of a ferocious nature," &c.; and that "the said monkey had attacked and lacerated the said Sophia, the female plaintiff," &c. The declaration did not set forth that the defendant had negligently kept, but merely that he had kept, this ferocious animal, which it was quite lawful for him to do. [Denman, C. J.—This declaration would apply to the trustees of the Zoological Society.] Exactly. The declaration ought to shew such circumstances as implied negligence. There were certainly precedents both ways. There were two forms given in 8 Wentw.; one in the present shape, and the other alleging negligence. In 2 Chitty's Pleading, p. 403, it was stated in a note, that "before H. T. 4 Wm. 4, it had been usual to insert a second count that the animal had not been properly secured, but as there now could only be one count for the same subject-matter, one was omitted;" and the pleader had omitted the one that ought to have been retained. From any thing that appeared in this declaration, the injury might have been produced by the plaintiff's own folly. (Mitchil v. Alestree, 1 Ventr. 295.) He also moved for a new trial, but that part of his rule was refused. On the motion for an arrest of judgment,

The Court granted the rule.

SOLOMON v. LAWSON.

Libel. Tried before the Lord Chief Justice at the last assizes for the county of Surrey. Verdict for the plaintiff—damages 500*l.* It was an action against the publisher of the Times newspaper, for inserting in that journal two letters injurious to the character and prospects of the plaintiff.

Shee, Serjt. to-day moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment should not be arrested, or why a venire de novo should not issue, or why there should not be a new trial, on the ground of excessive damages. The declaration contained two counts, and the first commenced with an inducement that before and at the time of committing the grievance in the said declaration mentioned, the plaintiff was a merchant and hotel-keeper at St. Helena, and that he had purchased a schooner and fitted it up with wooden tanks and cisterns for supplying fresh water to the vessels calling at St. Helena, and that he had from these tanks supplied the ship Moffatt with fresh water. It then went on to allege that the defendant had published of and concerning the said vessel, and of and concerning the water supplied to the said vessel by the plaintiff, and of and concerning the plaintiff in his trade and business, the following libel. He submitted that this first count was bad. It did not appear upon the face of it that the libel was imputed to the plaintiff, on the contrary, from the letter itself, it clearly appeared that it applied not to the plaintiff, but to the authorities of the island of St. Helena. It was necessary to set out a libel verbatim, in order that the Court might judge of its reference to the plaintiff (Gutsole v. Mathers, 1 Mee. & W. 495), and if, from the alleged libel, it was clear that there had been no intention to impute any thing to the plaintiff, no formal averment would supply the defect. The second count was also bad. The inducement set out the first letter, the alleged libel of the first count, and averred that it was "in substance as follows," &c. and then went on to allege, that after having published the first libel, the defendant had then published "of and concerning the plaintiff, and of and concerning the water, &c. and of and concerning his conduct in selling the water, &c and of and concerning the first letter, the following letter" (setting out verbatim the second of the two letters above given). Now it was distinctly laid down, that if the whole of a libel were set out, it was wrong to allege that it was "in substance" as follows. (Wright v. Clements, 3

B. & Ald. 503.) In all cases it was necessary to set out every word of the libel. (Zenobio v. Axtell, 6 T. R. 162; Cook v. Cox, 3 M. & S. 110.) Here the second letter contained no libel by itself, and the first was not properly associated with it, in consequence of the allegation "that it was in substance as follows."

Denman, C. J.—We think that you are entitled to a rule to shew cause why judgment should not be arrested, or a venire de novo award d, if only one of the counts should turn out to be b

De Medina v. Groves.

New trial.

Watson, Q.C. moved for a ... e to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a nonsuit entered, or a new trial had. It was an action for money had and rece 1. Mrs. Medina, the mother of the plaintiff, had, in 1810, mortgaged some houses to a Mr. Strahan for 1,000*l.* Strahan left England, having appointed the defendant, Mr. Groves, the manager of his affairs. Mr. Groves brought an action in Strahan's name against Mrs. Medina for not repairing the houses, and the plaintiff, her son, gave a cognovit for the sum of 1,000*l.* to cover the breaches, upon which judgment was entered up. The principal became du · in August 1812, and in November of that year Strahan assigned to Mr. Groves the mortgage and the judgment debt, which was recited in the deed, and appointed Groves attorney to recover it. Under this judgment a sum of money had been levied by Groves, which was now sought to be recovered. The grounds for the present rule were, that the plaintiff was estopped from disputing the judgment, and that ... was no evidence of fraud; and Duchess of Kin ... 's case (20 How. St. Trials) was cited. Rule granted.

Bolam v. Shaw.

Amendment of variance—Contract ... ... ting.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a farmer, against the defendant, for removing his son, who had been placed with him to learn the farming business, without due notice. There were also common counts for feeding, boarding, &c. but not for instructing. It was tried before Wightman, J. at the assizes for Northumberland, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 52*l.* 10s.

Knowles, Q.C. now moved to set aside the verdict and enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages, pursuant to leave reserved. The grounds were, that the contract was not proved to be in writing, for the only material letter put in was one from the defendant to the plaintiff, in which he had stated he considered the agreement to be for two years, but if he (the plaintiff) wished, there should be an option reserved to each to put an end to it at the end of any half-year, with a month's notice. No answer was given by the plaintiff, and therefore there was no acceptance; nor could the common counts support the verdict, for the defendant's son in fact remained only two days after the commencement of the half-year, the pay for the whole of which was 52*l.* 10s. by the agreement.

White v. Pery.

Substitution of debt to support a fiat—Pressure to justify payments to creditors.

M. D. Hill, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff in this case, and for a new trial, for misdirection, and because the verdict was against evidence.

It was an action by assign · s against the bankers of the bankrupt. The misdirections complained of were—1. That Lord Denman, C. J. had led the jury to believe that to constitute a pressure which would justify payment of moneys to a creditor, at different times, pursuant to an arrangement, there must be pressure on each occasion. Crosby v. Crouch (11 E. 256) was cited. 2. That the petitioning creditor's debt, which was put in issue, was not proved by shewing a substituted debt by order of the Lord Chancellor, when the debt upon which the original fiat issued never had any existence at all. Here a stranger to the bankrupt, holding a bill of exchange upon which there was an indorsement in his name, became the petitioning creditor, but ultimately discovered that the indorser was another person of the same name. Muskett v. Drummond (10 B & C. 153) was cited. The facts were detailed at great length to shew that the verdict was against evidence, and the Court granted the rule upon all the points. Rule nisi.

Manor of Runcorn.

This was an action of ejectment, tried before Mr. Justice Williams, at Chester, and a verdict was found for the lessor of the plaintiff on the said demise.

Jervis, Q. C. now moved for a new trial, or a verdict for defendant upon points reserved, for misdirection, because the verdict was against evidence, and for surprise. The land in dispute was a narrow strip between the "pool" of the Bridgewater Canal and the road, and the boundaries of the manor of Runcorn, and the title to much of the township of Runcorn were involved. It was objected on the evidence,—1. That there was no evidence of a manor at all, as the incidents proved, viz. casting essoigns and paying fines, might have belonged to a leet. 2. If a manor was proved, there was no evidence of wastes. 3. If the manor was proved, the existence of wastes in Runcorn was not. 4. If the land had been taken for the Act, then the plaintiff could not recover; and whether it was so taken should have been left to the jury. (6 Geo. 3, c. 96, s. 84.) 5. The nullum tempus Act did not apply, because prerogative process had not been employed.

Reg. v. Great North of England Railway.

Indictment against a corporation.

S. Wortley, Q. C. moved to enter a verdict for the defendant on some points appearing upon the record, and also upon the evidence. This was an indictment against the company, containing counts at common law and counts upon the statutes under which the company is formed, for obstructing certain roads and bridges. The points taken were,—1. That an indictment for misfeasance would not lie against a corporation. (Anon. 12 Mod. 559; Reg. v. Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, 3 Q. B. 223; Gorell v. Shanland, 5 B. & C. 485; Reg. v. Scott, 3 Q.B. 543.) Where the doing a certain thing is a condition precedent to another act, an indictment might, perhaps, lie; but that is not so here. 2. In the counts upon the statute there was a fatal variance between the allegation and the evidence. The obstruction was charged as arising under the second of the Acts establishing the company, but was proved to have been under the first. 3. Then the eighth count was uncertain, for it did not ... the bridge, so that there was no obstruction by ...

Warrant of commitment for not finding sureties—Liability of committing magistrate.

A verdict was found for the defendant, the learned judge having directed the jury that he was not liable if he acted bonâ fide, and that the commitment was not void.

Godson, Q. C. now moved to set aside the verdict for misdirection. The plaintiff had been ordered to find sureties to keep the peace, and on his failing to do so was committed by the defendant. The warrant, however, did not specify the number of sureties required, or the amount, or the time for which he was committed. (4 Bl. Commen. 254; 2 B. & Ald. 278.)

Clutterbuck v. Halse.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict found in this case for the plaintiff, damages 22*l.* 9s. 4d. and to enter a nonsuit. It was an action of assumpsit by a widow residing in the neighbourhood of Gloucester against the defendant, who was an attorney in that city. The declaration set up a special contract, that the defendant, having been retained by the plaintiff in his character of attorney, to institute legal proceedings against a Mr. Rayner, and having issued out a writ of summons in that suit, on the retainer being about to be withdrawn, promised the plaintiff, in consideration that she would not withdraw such retainer, but would continue the same, that he, the said defendant, would save her harmless from all the expenses and costs of the suit, &c. The declaration then contained the usual averment that the plaintiff confided in the said promise of the defendant, and continued the retainer. The suit proceeded, came on for trial before the sheriff, when a verdict was found for the defendant, and the present plaintiff had to pay the amount now sought to be recovered. The evidence of the contract upon which the plaintiff relied was a letter to her from the defendant, in the following words:—

"Yourself v. Rayner. Madame,—I am so satisfied as to the result of this case, that I do not hesitate to take the consequences upon myself. Do not, therefore, feel alarmed, as I will go on at my own expense."

Three questions had been raised upon the trial, and upon these three points he now moved for his rule: 1st. That the letter, if evidence of the contract at all, was an agreement th... above the amount of ... stamp. (Wrigley v. ... That it was an undert... default or miscarriage of another within the Statute of Frauds (29 C. 2, c. 3, s. 4), and that no consideration appeared on the face of the instrument. (Tomlinson v. Gell, 6 Ad. & Ell. 564; Green v. Cresswell, 10 Ad. & Ell. 453; Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10; Hawes v. Armstrong, 1 B. N. C. 761.) 3rd. That the contract was not sufficiently set forth in the declaration. There was also another point, arising on the construction of the letter, whether the defendant meant any thing more than that he would go on with the suit without charging the plaintiff any thing unless she were successful.

Stokes v. Boycott.

New Trial.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi to set aside the verdict found for the plaintiff and for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and of the verdict being against evidence.

It was an action of replevin, tried before Platt, B. at Shrewsbury, for taking the cattle of the plaintiff at Framlingham, in the county of Salop, on a certain common called Rudge Heath. The avowry alleged that the locus in quo was the soil and freehold of the defendant. The plea in bar admitted the defendant's title, but set up the plaintiff's right of common under the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71). It appeared on the trial that Rudge Heath was a large tract of open land 400 or 500 acres in extent, used by the defendant, who was lord of the manor, as a rabbit-warren, and that for the last thirty years the plaintiff, a large farmer in the neighbourhood, had been in the habit of openly sending his sheep to depasture on the heath. Upon the acts of enjoyment thus exercised he rested his claim, but the defendant contended that his use of the common never constituted an enjoyment within the meaning of the statute; that his right to send his sheep had always been resisted, and that a constant rustic warfare had been going on between the parties quite inconsistent with that enjoyment which alone would give him a prescriptive claim as a commoner. The learned Baron on the trial held, under the 4th section, that unless the defendant had shewn that his interruption of the plaintiff's right had been acquiesced in for a year, the latter had established that right, but he submitted that there had never been such an enjoyment as gave the plaintiff a right which required that continuous interruption contemplated by the 4th section. There had in reality been no enjoyment at all.

JAMES v. BROOK.

New Trial.

Watson, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment in this case should not be arrested, or a nonsuit entered, or a new trial had.

It was an action of slander tried before Coltman, J. at York, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 45*l.* The plaintiff was a superior officer of the police force in Leeds, and the third count of the declaration stated that "the defendant had spoken of and concerning the plaintiff, as such superior officer of police, the following words; that is to say, "I (meaning the defendant) saw a letter two or three days ago regarding an officer of the Leeds police force (meaning thereby the plaintiff), who is superior in rank to Child (meaning thereby another officer of police inferior in rank to the plaintiff), which stated that that officer (meaning the plaintiff) had been guilty of conduct unfit for publication." There was no innuendo, and this was the whole of the slander alleged in the declaration. The statement that a man had seen a letter which said that the conduct of another was unfit for publication surely could not constitute slander. There was no imputation of crime, and no allegation as to the plaintiff's conduct as an officer of police.

Lord Denman, C.J.—You may take a rule nisi to enter a nonsuit.

Assignees of Johnson v. Wolsey.—Cockburn, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the plaintiff in this case should not be set aside, a nonsuit entered, or a new trial had. It was an action of trover by the assignees of a bankrupt to recover the possession of two pictures of considerable value, one by Claude and the other by Ruysdael. The pleas were—Not guilty, and Not possessed. On the trial it appeared that the pictures had previously to the bankruptcy been sent by the bankrupt to a picture-dealer of the name of Grattan; that he had handed them over to one Pennell to be sold; that Pennell had placed them in the possession of the defendant, who had taken a gallery in Pall-mall, which they shared together, each having the disposal of half the gallery. Johnson, the owner of the pictures, became a bankrupt, and the assignee demanded them from the defendant, who refused to deliver them up without an order from Pennell, by whom they had been intrusted to his keeping. This was only a qualified refusal, and did not amount to a conversion. (Alexander v. Southey, 5 B. & Ald. 247.) On this ground he moved for a nonsuit, but he also moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence as to the fact of possession.

Lord Denman, C. J.—You may take a rule on the alternative.

DOE dem. DAYMAN v. MOORE.

New Trial.

Crowder, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi to enter a nonsuit. It was an action of ejectment to recover possession of a cottage at Exeter, which had been in the uninterrupted possession of the defendant for forty years. But a question arose under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. The lessor of the plaintiff was the son of Peter Dayman, who on the marriage of the defendant with his daughter had put him into possession of the messuage. Upon what terms he had remained in possession did not appear, but no rent had been paid. By the 15th sec. of the above Act it was enacted that when the possession was not adverse at the time of the passing of the Act, the right of entry or distress should not be barred until after five years. The Act passed in 1833. Dayman, the father of the lessor of the plaintiff, made a will in 1837 and died. At the date of the will he would have had a power of entry or distress. He never entered, but by the will he devised his property to his wife for her life, and after her death to the lessor of the plaintiff. The latter claimed under the will of 1837, and the question was whether that devise could be considered equivalent to an entry as against the defendant, who had been in possession for forty years. He submitted that it could not, and that the power of entry &c. was now completely barred.

SCHLESINGER v. FLUSHEIM.

A deed by which two persons agreed to work a certain patent upon certain specific terms, and A was to be paid a certain sum, and B to supply all the capital, and to be entitled to the whole of the residue, contained a concluding clause that the parties should not be, and were not, by virtue of any of the previous conditions, partners. Held, that this did not so absolutely bar A from receiving money due to the supposed firm as to justify B's asserting that he had received it by false pretences. Semble, such a clause has no effect at all.

This was an action of libel tried before Lord Denman, C. J. and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 50*l.* and Cockburn, Q.C. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. It appeared that the plaintiff and defendant had entered into an agreement for working certain patents, with the clause above stated; but to the world they appeared as partners. The plaintiff having received some debts due to the partnership, upon which the defendant had written a letter to other creditors, charging the plaintiff with obtaining money under false pretences, this action was then brought, and in justification the deed was set out, and it was contended that it constituted the plaintiff and defendant partners only sub modo, and as between themselves the plaintiff had no right to receive any money, and that it ought to have been put to the jury in that way.

Patteson, J.—There was no false pretence in the plaintiff obtaining the money. To say the least, he had such a fair shadow of right as would have been an answer to any indictment, and I doubt very much whether parties who have entered into a partnership deed can insert such a clause as this to have any effect even between themselves.

The rest of the Court concurred.

DOE dem. STORER v. NIELD.

A sale under a power which directs that the proceeds shall be applied by the trustees in a certain manner will convey a good title, although the proceeds are not so applied.

This was an ejectment tried at Chester before Mr. Justice Maule, and a verdict found for the defendant, with leave to move.

Humfrey, Q. C. now moved accordingly.—The lessee of the plaintiff was the original devisee. The defendants purchased from the trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, under a power contained in the will, which required that the proceeds of any sale under it should be laid out for the same uses and trusts as contained in the original will. It was contended that the trustees, not having done this, the sale was invalid.

Petersdorff now moved to set this aside and enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 148*l.* 4s. The pleas were, Not guilty, and Not possessed. The plaintiff had purchased paper of defendant, which was to be held by defendant until wanted for use by the plaintiff. In the invoice credit was given by bills for three and four months, of 74*l.* 2s. each, and stated that the bills should be renewed, without specifying, however, for what periods; and also stated that the plaintiff was not to be charged for warehouse-room. No conversion was proved before the day upon which the first bill became due, and as on that day it was not paid, it was contended that no subsequent conversion would give a right of action to the plaintiff. It was now moved that the period was immaterial, because the property passed absolutely by the contract; or if not, that the bill was not dishonoured. No presentation, or refusal to pay had been shewn. Crawshay v. Homfray (4 B. & Ald. 50) was cited.

Rule nisi.

DOE dem. WILLIAMSON v. GLADMAN.

Effect of attornment to the mortgagee by tenant of mortgagor let in after the mortgage.

Lush moved for a new trial in this case.—There were two demises; the first by Maria Williamson, and the second by Plumer, both laid October 12, 1844. Maria Williamson had mortgaged the premises to Plumer, and afterwards the defendant had become tenant to her. On October 14, 1842, he had attorned to the mortgagee, and contracted to pay rent from Michaelmas 1840. Notice to quit had been served by Plumer on June 9, 1843, at the expiration of the current year after the end of the half-year from the service. It was now urged that the demise here laid on October 12th was too soon, although one laid on October 15th would have been good. The attornment operated only from the day of its execution, and there was no retrospective tenancy created by it. (Evans v. Elliott, 4 A. & E.) Rule nisi.

[illegible]E v. MERRITT.

Will money had and received lie for a sum settled by mistake in an account between the parties?

Money had and received.

This was an action for money had and received, tried at the last Wilts assizes before Mr. Justice Erle, and a verdict for plaintiff, 24*l.* 19s. with leave reserved to enter a nonsuit on the following ground:—It appeared that there had been a settlement of accounts between the parties in 1843, and a certain sum had been allowed to the defendant, which he had paid for the plaintiff. Subsequently it was discovered that the sum had been allowed in a previous settlement. At the trial, Kinglake, Serjt. objected that the action would not lie, but the learned judge thought that it was analogous to the cases where there had been a settlement between three parties and a transfer of the debt, but reserved leave to Kinglake, Serjt. now moved accordingly, citing Wharton v. Walker (4 B. & C. 163) as exactly similar to the principal case, and distinguishing the instances referred to by the learned judge, on the ground that there was an original liability, and a transfer of that liability with the consent of the parties. He also moved on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, and for a misdirection.

Rule nisi for a nonsuit only.

LAYTON v. HURRY.

Construction of 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 59, as to sale of beasts impounded.

Trespass quare clausum, and seizing of horses, and selling two.

Pleas, 1st, Not guilty; 2nd, Not possessed; 3rd, as to the impounding and selling, that the defendant was possessed, and distrained the animals damage feasant, and sold two for the expense incurred.

Replication, de injuriâ.

Verdict for the defendant on the second and third issues, and for the plaintiff on the first.

Byles, Serjt. now moved for judgment, non obstante veredicto, on the third issue, or for a repleader, or for a new trial, for misdirection, and because the verdict was against evidence.

It was submitted that the evidence of the defendant's possession, although it proved that the plaintiff was not in possession, did not prove that the defendant was. Then, cattle damage feasant can only be distrained upon the locus in quo (Com. Dig. Distress); and here it was proved that they were seized off the premises. No account of the keep was put in, and according to the 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 59, one animal is not to be sold for the expense of all: at least, if this is allowable, it should have been alleged in the plea that it was necessary to sell two, or the fact of its being necessary should have been left to the jury. The learned judge considered that it was matter of replication or new assignment. But the statute does not empower any other sale but in respect of the expenses caused by the animal sold. Rule nisi.

Doe dem. Simpson v. Johns.
Stamp Act.

V. Williams moved for a new trial on a stamp objection. New parcels had been included as security in a transfer of mortgage, and no deed stamp affixed besides the ad valorem duty. (Lant v. Peace, 8 A. & E. 248.) —— Rule nisi.

Bilton v. Trewheller.
Trover—Breach of agreement.

James moved, pursuant to leave, to enter a nonsuit — verdict for the defendant. It was an action of trover to recover a promissory note for 52*l.* 10*s.* given by the plaintiff to the defendant, on condition, as alleged, that he would withdraw opposition to the discharge of the plaintiff's brother at the Insolvent Court, and procure his discharge. Some mistake occurred, and although there was no opposition, the case went into court, and the 2*l.* 10*s.* was said to have been added to repay the defendant the counsel's fees, when the opposition was withdrawn. It was therefore contended that the plaintiff could not recover, for by the payment of the 2*l.* 10*s.* the defendant obtained a lien upon the note, even if he had forfeited his claim to the 50*l.*

Rule nisi, not to go into the new trial paper.

Dobson v. Blackmore.
Injury to enable a reversioner to bring an action on the case for nuisance.

This was an action on the case for a nuisance in obstructing the river Thames by erecting the Waterman's Pier at Greenwich, to the injury of the plaintiff, as tenant in possession of certain houses approached by the river, and also as reversioner to others. It was tried before Lord Denman, C. J. at the last Surrey Assizes, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, with one shilling damages.

Shee, Serjt. now moved for a nonsuit or a new trial in arrest of judgment and a venire de novo. There were counts laying the injury to the plaintiff as tenant in possession, and counts laying the injury to him as reversioner. It was submitted that there was no evidence of any particular injury to him, which was essential. (Wilkes v. Hungerford Market Company, 2 Sc. 146.) 2. That the reversionary interest could be injured by none but a permanent obstruction, as any other would be liable to be abated at any time; and that the obstruction here proved was a temporary one. 3. That the counts charging an injury to the reversion were bad, because they shewed it to be a public nuisance, and therefore abateable. [Patteson, J.—But is it not stated in terms that the obstruction was injurious to the reversion?] Yes, still that will not make the counts good. Rule nisi.

Griffiths v. Lewis.
The originator of a slanderous report is not justified in repeating it when asked, in the presence of others, by the party of whom the slander is spoken.

This was an action of slander tried before Lord Denman, C. J. at Hertford; verdict for plaintiff, 10*l.*

M. Chambers now moved for a new trial, for misreception of evidence, for misdirection, and also for a venire de novo, as a general verdict had been given upon several counts, one of which was bad. The slanderous words complained of had been uttered in plaintiff's shop, in answer to a question put by the plaintiff to know whether he had previously said "that the plaintiff's son used two balls to his mother's steelyard," when the defendant answered, "Yes," and repeated the charge. It was contended that this being an answer to a question, it was a privileged communication, and although it might have been used as an admission of a prior slander, it could not be relied on alone, and that the question of malice ought to have been put to the jury. (Toogood v. Skyryng, 1 C. M. & R. 181; Padmore v. Lawrence, 11 A. & E. 380; Blake v. Pilford, 1 M. & R. 198; Warr v. Jolly, 6 Car. & P. 497.) Evidence of loss of an individual customer was admitted when it was not laid in the declaration.

Patteson, J.—There was no misdirection. If slanderous language is used, and any one is asked if he said so, and he replies, yes, and repeats it, it is not privileged communication. If you ask a person who did not originate it, to tell you what he knows about it, then the case is different. The distinction is clearly laid down in Smith v. Matthews (1 M. & R. 151).

Williams, J. and Wightman, J. concurred.

Lord Denman, C. J.—The proposition contended for is, that the deliberate uttering of slanderous words at one period gives the party a right to repeat them when the party injured calls for satisfaction. No authority is required to disprove such a proposition, and in truth it is contrary to all the authorities.

Rule refused.

The question as to the insufficiency of the 6th count was postponed for consideration.

Miers v. Green.
On a dissolution of partnership A covenants with B, the retiring partner, to pay certain debts due from the firm. Can B recover upon this covenant for any debts which he has not actually been obliged to pay?

Cockburn, Q.C. moved for a rule nisi to reduce damages from 509*l.* to 163*l.* It was an action in covenant by one partner against another for not paying certain debts due from the firm, according to his covenant. He proved that he had been forced to pay 163*l.* and that a judgment had been recovered against him for 342*l.* more, but which had not been satisfied. The question was, whether he could recover before actual payment. No authority was cited.

The Court suggested it should be turned into a special case. To be turned into a special case.

Stuart v. Wilkinson.
Inconsistent verdict.

Jervis, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and enter it for the defendant, on the ground that it was a substantial finding for him. It was an action of trover for two heifers tried at Chester, and the jury returned the following verdict:—"We find for the plaintiff with the lowest possible damages; each party ought to pay their own costs, because there was a double fraud." Upon this a verdict had been entered for the plaintiff.

By the Court.—We can make nothing of this, unless it be, as you contend, a verdict for the defendant. The rule will be granted, but we recommend a stet processus. Rule nisi.

Doe dem. Molesworth v. Sleeman.
Is evidence by reputation admissible of boundaries of a reputed manor?

Greenwood moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Mr. Justice Coleridge, who tried the cause at the last Devon Assizes, held that when a manor was shewn to be only a reputed manor, evidence of reputation of its boundaries was not admissible. The question in dispute was, the right of the lessor of the plaintiff, as lord of the manor of Atherland, to strips of land eighteen feet from the hedge, called in Devonshire "landscores."

Williams v. Wentworth.
Derby sweeps—"First horse" means the horse that is declared the legal winner.

This was an action brought to recover the amount of the stakes in a Derby sweep, consequent upon the Running Rein decision. By a judge's order the defendant paid the sum into court, and admitted the receipt to the use of the drawer of the card upon which was the name of the horse that was the first horse at the Derby, and that the plaintiff was holder of a card with Running Rein thereon. At the trial, before Lord Denman, C. J. his lordship had held "first horse" to mean the horse that won the race, and not Running Rein, and nonsuited the plaintiff.

Jervis, Q. C. now moved to set this aside for misdirection, and contended that "the first horse" must mean the one that first passed the winning-post.

The Court took the same view as Lord Denman, C. J. and the rule was Refused.

Tuesday, April 22.
Re Carus Wilson.
Habeas Corpus.

The Court of Queen's Bench will not receive affidavits to shew what the law is in an inferior jurisdiction in the Channel Islands, in contradiction to the return made thereby a competent Court to a writ of habeas corpus, in order to ascertain whether a prisoner has been properly committed by it for contempt of Court. But the Court will interfere where no judgment has been given by such inferior Court, or where the sentence is by an incompetent Court.

Courts are themselves the judges what tone and manner amounts to a contempt of Court.

Mr. Wilson appeared in court.

Peacock, in the absence of Kelly, applied for further time to oppose the return to this writ, on the ground that Mr. Wilson had only lately seen the return.

Lord Denman, C.J.—The facts and all the points have been long and well known; there is no sufficient ground for further postponement.

Kelly, Q.C. then applied for leave to file the affidavit of Mr. Laplace, a Jersey barrister, upon the law of the island on committals for contempt of Court, without a warrant in answer to the return. This was in the nature of an attachment, and therefore of a criminal proceeding, within the terms of the statute 56 Geo. 3, c. 100, s. 3.

The Solicitor-General.—This writ was not issued under the authority of that statute, and only under it can further affidavits be filed.

Kelly, Q. C. in reply.—The cases are analogous to criminal proceedings; and unless we put in affidavits shewing what the law of Jersey is, how can we contend against an act the validity of which depends on that law?

Peacock claimed to be heard on the same side.

The Solicitor-General objected.

Lord Denman, C. J.—We have no objection to hear you; but as the Court does not usually hear two counsel on a preliminary point, this indulgence must not be drawn into a precedent.

The Solicitor-General.—This Court cannot constitute a court of appeal, and sit in judgment on the laws of Jersey. The return states the prisoner was in custody under an adjudication by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and this Court cannot, therefore, enter into any discussion as to whether the Royal Court of Jersey has or has not exercised its discretion with propriety.

Their lordships deliberated for several minutes.

Lord Denman, C.J.—The return to the writ alleges that the prisoner was placed under a sentence of the Royal Court of Jersey, for a contempt committed therein, under the custody of the viscomte and gaoler of the island. It is now proposed to offer an affidavit to shew what the law of Jersey is, and that it has been untruly stated in the return. The question now before the Court is, whether that affidavit can be received by us. I take it to be an exception running through the entire law of habeas corpus that this Court cannot exert its power where the prisoner appears to be in custody under the legal judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction. If the affidavit purported to shew that this return was fabricated, and the prisoner was not before the Royal Court of Jersey, then the affidavit might be received. Were we to receive it, we should constitute ourselves a court of error to review the proceedings of foreign and other courts, and be constantly called upon to reverse their proceedings. If a prisoner were convicted of murder, the Court could not interfere to review the sentence, without doing vital injury in delaying the course of justice, and perhaps in compelling criminals to be set at large. This principle has at all times been acted on, and we feel bound to give credit to other courts for having acted with propriety. Recently, a person was committed by an order of the Master of the Rolls. This Court, upon seeing the order, would not inquire whether it was made in his lordship's house or at the Rolls Court, but took for granted that the order was made in the manner and circumstances which the law required for its validity. The affidavit cannot be received.

Patteson J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The statute applies only to cases where prisoners are detained without any process at all. This is a return by the officer in whose hands the prisoner is in custody. He is imprisoned by sentence of the Court of Jersey. All that is in the return about the law of Jersey is wholly immaterial. It is sufficient that he is in custody by the authority of the Court. The affidavit to shew what the law is, is not receivable therefore.

Williams, J.—The most favourable view of this case is that this writ issued at common law. This affidavit is wholly unauthorized in that case. It is very different from affidavits to shew that there was no judgment, or no competent Court. It is only a matter of common courtesy to suppose the power was exercised according to law. Neither is any principle of natural justice violated; for it is not urged that the party should not have a remedy in the Isle of Jersey; and this I do say, that we are bound to see that justice be done in all parts of the Queen's dominions. These affidavits are not receivable in evidence.

Wightman, J.—The affidavit relates rather to matter of law than of fact. Whether under other circumstances the affidavit might be received, I will not say, but it is not receivable under these.

On the return itself,

Kelly, Q. C. argued at considerable length, that the words of the protest implied no contempt of the Court by Mr. Wilson, and he had no other resource than that of protesting against the composition of the Court, before the interlocutory judgment was given. It would have been too late to have done so afterwards. The words of the sentence were that this tone was inconvenable, or unbecoming, but that did not imply contempt. In the next place, the sentence was bad, because there was no warrant of commitment. [Patteson, J.—There never is a warrant for the sentence of any Court of assize or session, in sentencing a prisoner. There was no necessity for one.] Then he is to be confined till he begs pardon, but of whom, and for what is he to beg pardon? On these grounds the judgment was clearly erroneous and informal.

Peacock followed on the same side, and on the necessity of a warrant cited Furlong v. Bray (7 Taunt. 83).

The Solicitor-General (with whom were Wortley, Q.C. and J. W. Smith) argued that the decision of the Court on the reception of the affidavit decided the whole question. The Court had already just decided that it would not review the decision of a competent Court. The prisoner had been committed by the Court, if not by warrant, because none was needed. In Re Clarke (2 Q. B. 619) the contempt was undoubted of interrupting the Court by repeated interruptions. [Lord Denman, C.J.—I don't find that stated so strongly in the return as you put it.] His tone and manner were inconvenable—which means indecent. Of this manner and tone the Court, who were not present, could not possibly judge, without violating the principle they had just set up, that the Jersey judges must be presumed to have done rightly, and to have passed a legal sentence. (Rex v. Suddis, 1 East, 306.) The pardon required was clearly for the offence committed, and it would have been sufficient to have said he begged pardon according to the sentence of the Court.

Peacock replied.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We can decide this case on the return made. We must give full credit to the Court for having acted rightly. This party has been committed to prison for an alleged contravention of the law, which renders him liable for a contempt committed against the Royal Court of the Island of Jersey. If the return had shewn on the face of it that anything unjust or absurd had been done, that would have been a good ground for interfering. This occurs with regard to decisions in the colonies, which are made sometimes in the absence of the parties, under circumstances opposed to principles of justice. Here, however, the question was, whether the conduct of the prisoner amounted to a contempt of the Court, and this question it is the unfortunate duty of Courts to decide for themselves. Now, words which in themselves are most innocent may be rendered offensive by the tone in which they are uttered, and may or may not have amounted to disrespect. In this case the Court of Jersey has decided that they did, and this Court cannot interfere or consider the propriety of an adjudication which all courts make with extreme reluctance, an instance of making which has not occurred in this court for more than a century: it is an exercise of authority which no judge of this court would wish to revive except in a case of the most urgent necessity. Far best is it for Courts to pass over mere words of temporary passion, which do not convey premeditated insult; and most reluctantly ought the power of committing for contempt to be exercised. The Court of Jersey has exercised its discretion, and a warrant is clearly not needed for any sentence a Court passes. The prisoner, therefore, must be remanded.

PATTESON, J.—Courts must decide for themselves what is a contempt. Here the prisoner was repeatedly warned to be more cautious in his expressions. I do not put the case on the protest, but the manner of it. There is an appeal to the Queen in Council, but we decide on grounds independent of that. The Court of Jersey has acted, and they are the judges.

WILLIAMS, J.—It is obvious that words that would be innocent spoken respectfully, may be very improper when spoken in a different manner. They who were present are the only persons who can decide upon the tone and manner used by Mr. Wilson. Mr. Kelly has assumed that the manner was not disrespectful, but the return states that it was in a tone of contempt and impropriety:

Dabiturque licentia sumpta pudenter.

I think that we must uphold the sentence of the Court of Jersey, and that the prisoner must be remanded until the fine be paid and the pardon asked.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

[The bailiff here attempted to arrest Mr. Wilson in court, who exclaimed, in a loud tone, "Where is your warrant?" A colloquy ensued.]

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—Let there be no conversation here. The prisoner is remanded to the custody whence he came from.

HARRIS v. REYNOLDS.

Pleaders must briefly state the points to be argued in the margin of special demurrers in the Queen's Bench, in default of which they will be struck out of the paper.

A plea of an arbitration pending is not a plea in abatement, and is bad as a plea in bar to an action for the same subject-matter.

Demurrer, Assumpsit for work and labour, and goods sold; to which it was specially pleaded that the subject-matter of the action had, previously to action brought, been referred by mutual consent.

PATTESON, J.—What is this demurrer about? I have over and over complained of demurrer-books without a brief statement of the points for argument in the margin. I will not be compelled to wade through the mass of nonsense of which special demurrers consist to find out what they mean.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I too have frequently complained of the same practice; it is like wandering in a wood to wade through the wilderness of words in these special demurrers to extract the points. I wish it to be understood that hereafter all such demurrers shall be struck out of the paper.

Peacock.—The plea here does not amount to accord and satisfaction, and is bad, for it does not deny the debt, but on the contrary admits it, and merely says that there was an agreement to refer. An arbitrament without performance, is no satisfaction. (Allen v. Milner, 2 Cr. & Jer. 47). [WIGHTMAN, J.—Suppose that the arbitrator had made his award after action brought and judgment recovered, what would be the effect?] The only course in that case would be for the other party to bring an action for having sued contrary to the agreement. The arbitrator has merely to discover what is the debt, and this alone cannot amount to an accord which is executed. It is executory only. (Bayley v. Homan, 3 B. N. C. 915; Good v. Cheesman, 2 B. & Adol. 335.)

Butt, Q. C.—This is in the nature of a plea in abatement, and like a plea of another action pending. We have both agreed to refer. (Kill v. Hollister, 1 Wils. 129.) If an action pending is a good plea, why not an arbitration? There is no objection taken to the commencement or conclusion in the demurrer.

Peacock, in reply.—This plea is no plea in abatement, as it does not commence or conclude as one in accordance with R. G. 4 Wm. 4. It is a plea in bar. The judgment to a plea in abatement is respondeat ouster; here it is final. It can only be known that it is a plea in abatement by its proper conclusion and termination. (2 Saund. 209, c.) Moreover, it must be pleaded within four days, and this was not.

Butt, contrà, cited Vivian v. Jenkins (3 Ad. & Ell. 741); Steward v. Graves (10 M. & W. 731).

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This is clearly a plea in bar, and not a plea in abatement, and is undoubtedly bad.

PATTESON, J.—It is quite clear that it is a plea in bar, and if so, it is admitted that it is bad; or, whether admitted or not, so it is. A plea in abatement must be pleaded in four days. This has not been pleaded for eleven days.

WILLIAMS, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

Butt applied for leave to amend.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Certainly not. I do not like amendments after argument.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

EKIN and ANOTHER v. FLAY.

Unless expressly provided to the contrary, wherever a local Act exempts horses, &c. from second tolls which repass the same day, that exemption extends to a down-coach drawn by the same horses, but being a different vehicle and with different passengers to the up-coach of the same day.

Assumpsit.—This was a special case, after issue joined in an action to recover 6*l*. 16*s*. being half the amount paid by the plaintiffs as proprietors of two stage-coaches, called the Telegraph, running daily between Cambridge and London, in respect of tolls for the coach, to the defendant as lessee of the tolls, being 4*d*. on each horse for 103 journeys through a certain gate near Cambridge, and which was levied by defendant on the same four horses which draw the down-coach at night as draw the up-coach in the morning, the coach and passengers being different. The question was whether, under a local Act, 4 Vict. c. 20, this double toll could be legally demanded; the 11th section* of which enacts that one toll "only for passing and repassing once only in the same day, with the same horses, through any of the gates, shall be levied," &c. Sec. 13 provides that no horse shall be thus exempted, drawing another different waggon, wain, cart, or other such carriage. Section 14 then enacts that as to all horses drawing any stage-coach, &c. no additional toll shall be payable at any toll-gate "the payment of which shall be freed by such ticket as aforesaid, on account only of their conveying other passengers, or of the horses or cattle drawing the same having been changed."

Gunning, for the plaintiffs, contended that the toll was levied on the horses, and not on the vehicle, and argued at length that the construction of the statute did not warrant the double toll. He cited Reg. v. Ruscoe (8 Ad. & Ell. 386); Sandiman v. Breach (7 B. & Cr. 96); Williams v. Sangar (10 East. 66); Norris v. Poate (3 Bing. 41); Niblett v. Pottow (1 B. N.C. 81); Hopkins v. Thorogood (2 B. & Adol. 916).

PATTESON, J.—The Act is, as usual, full of confusion throughout; they made it so intentionally, I have no doubt.

Peacock. contrà.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I think that, although some of the provisions are unnecessary, and the Act is obscurely worded, the 11th section allows the same horses to pass without second payment. In the 12th section they require persons to produce tickets, but I think they mean that stage-coaches are so well known that they do not need to produce a ticket.

PATTESON, J. — The 13th section is clumsily worded, and the difficulty arises there; but I think that the intent from the whole Act is clearly enough to exempt the return-horses of coaches from second payment.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is quite clear that the 11th section is strong enough to exempt the return-horses from toll. If it had been intended to except stage-coaches repassing on their return journey from the general exemption in that section, they would have been specially excepted by an express parenthesis, among those with which these Acts abound, in the subsequent and excepting clauses.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Wednesday, April 23.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF ORTON.

A notice to produce in the form of a summons from a justice, served upon the overseers of the parish in which the pauper is supposed to be settled, will not be sufficient to let in secondary evidence at the hearing before the removing magistrates.

This was a case sent from the Lancashire Sessions, but the only point decided was as to the sufficiency of a notice to produce, to entitle the respondents to give secondary evidence of the contents of the rate-book. The sessions had admitted the evidence and confirmed the order.

Drinkwater (with whom was Pashley) appeared to support the order of sessions. No technical form of notice to produce is necessary. (Smith v. Young, 1 Campb. 439.) There proof of a parol notice was held sufficient. This was addressed to the overseers of Orton, and served upon one. It gave notice to produce all books of rates or assessments for the relief of the poor between the years 1837 and 1841, and informed them when and where to produce them. The objection is, it is called a summons, and not a notice. The only material point to determine is, whether it conveys the requisite information. More could not have been done, and the notice shews that the proceeding is to fix the parish of Orton. A subpœna would not have issued. Besides, after this was served, one of the overseers admitted that the pauper belonged to his parish, and talked of attending at the hearing before the magistrates who made the order, and, as he might have been present, it is like cases where an opportunity for cross-examination has been allowed to pass by. (Cazenove v. Vaughan, 1 Mau. & S. 4.)

Archbold (with him Olter), contrà.—This is no notice at all. It is not signed by the overseers of the respondent parish or any persons on their behalf, but by a justice. It is a summons issued by the justice without any authority. The appellant parish is no party until an order is made. A subpœna might have issued, and the party would have been compelled to appear and produce the rate-book. The admission proves nothing, for it is not shewn that the overseer was a rated inhabitant.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We cannot support this notice upon any legal principles, consequently the secondary evidence as to the assessment was inadmissible, and the order bad. Justices have no power to summon.(a) There are means to compel attendance, and these should be resorted to.

Order quashed.

REG. v. BAKEWELL.

The Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere with a decision of the sessions upon a matter of fact which they are competent to make. The rule laid down in Reg. v. Kesteren will be strictly observed.

In this case the sessions had decided that the examinations were calculated to mislead, and therefore quashed the order, but granted a case. In the case sent up the alleged uncertainty of description was set out, and the decision of the sessions, that they granted a case, but contained nothing for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, nor what was to be the result. It appeared that the objection held fatal at the sessions was, that in proving a derivative settlement, the marriage was described to have taken place in the church at Biwell, and there were two adjoining parishes called respectively Biwell St. Andrew's and Biwell St. Peter's, and the church in each was called Biwell church. There was no parish of Biwell, and the churches were about 200 yards from each other.

Wildman.—The case cannot be heard. (Reg. v. Kesteren, 3 Q. B. 810.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—What point of law are we to decide?] It was suggested that it was whether the sessions were right or not right. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—They were most wrong to ask our opinion.]

Ingham (with whom was Willmore), contended that although the case was worded strangely, the Court would give some meaning to it: and that they were in the same position as if the merits had been found for the respondents, and that would be the result if the Court should now hold that the sessions were wrong. The Court is not precluded from deciding now. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—But are we bound to do so?]

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It is with very great regret that we decide, that as this decision was made so it must stand, for had the question been put to us, we should have held differently. But we must not take upon ourselves the duty which the law casts upon others. It is a very great sacrifice to this principle when we refuse to hear this case, but we should have a new code of practice altogether if we were to swerve from it.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Friday, April 18.

Rawlins v. Bell and Wife.

New trial—Fraudulent misrepresentation.

Channell, Serjt. (Petersdorff with him) moved for a rule to shew cause to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 66*l.*

The plaintiff, in the course of his employment as a broker, had, under the written order of the plaintiff's wife, seized certain goods. It was alleged this representation was fraudulent. A verdict had passed for the defendants on the plea of "Not Guilty," and for the plaintiff on all the other issues.

Foreign bills of exchange—Want of stamp—Illegality.

Tried before Lord Denman, C. J. at the last Surrey Assizes: verdict for the plaintiff, damages, 600*l.* Action brought on two foreign bills of exchange drawn in Belgium.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi to enter a verdict for the defendant on both of the bills.

In this case the bills were without the stamp required by the law of Belgium, and by that law were declared void; and the question was, whether a court of law in this country would so far regard the lex loci contractûs as to hold that such a bill of exchange could not be enforced, in England. (Storey's Conflict of Laws, last ed. 341.) James v. Catherwood (3 Dow. & Ry. 190) is distinguishable from this case.

Doe dem. White v. Okey.

Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit.

Byles, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to set aside the verdict which had been found for the defendant, and to enter instead a verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff.

This action of ejectment was brought to recover a certain messuage and pasture land of which the defendant was tenant to White under an agreement dated 25th of June, 1842, by which White agreed to let to the defendant the premises in question for one year from the 25th of March then last, and so on from year to year until the tenancy should be determined by either party giving to the other six months' notice to quit. The agreement then reserved a yearly rent of 30*l.* payable half-yearly, or a proportionate part for every time less than a year that the defendant should occupy the premises. A notice to quit was given in August, which expired in February last; and the objection at the trial was, that the notice did not expire at the end of the year of the tenancy. It was submitted that the construction to be put on the agreement was, that a notice might be given expiring at any time of the year, as the rent was reserved payable for a proportionate part of a year, and therefore contemplated a tenancy determinable in a part of a year.

The Court, however, thought that enough was not shewn to deviate from the general rule.

Rule refused.

Wilson v. Boodle.

Landlord and tenant—Surrender—Apportionment.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection.

The action was for use and occupation. The plaintiff was trustee for certain persons to whom, in 1840, the property in question had been mortgaged by Edward Boodle, who became entitled to the property as devisee under the will of Robert Boodle. In 1832, an agreement had been made between Robert Boodle and the present defendant, Ann Boodle, by which the former agreed to accept the latter as yearly tenant of the land and premises, at the rent of 31*l.* from the 2nd November, 1832, during the term of the natural life of the defendant. The agreement was not under seal, and failed to operate as a conveyance for the life of the defendant, but the defendant having entered into possession thereunder, became a yearly tenant. Before the mortgage by Edward Boodle, it appeared from the evidence that there had been an agreement by which he should take the demised premises back from the defendant, and it also appeared that a valuation of the stock had been made, and money paid on that account. There was afterwards a division of the demised premises; two of the fields being let to a person of the name of Campbell, and the other field being let to one Barker. It was contended at the trial, on behalf of the defendant, that there had therefore been a surrender of the premises by operation of law, before the mortgage under which the plaintiff claimed. In answer to this, the plaintiff shewed that in the letting to Campbell, the lease was granted by the defendant, and although the rent was paid to Edward Boodle, yet it was in the presence of the defendant. The learned judge thought that it made no difference that the field let to Barker was not included in the lease granted by the defendant to Campbell, but left it to the jury whether, notwithstanding the lease, there had been a surrender of the premises to Edward Boodle. It was now submitted that, at any rate, there should have been an apportionment of the rent, by the jury, and that the direction was wrong.

The Court said that they were disposed to think that the learned judge had properly treated the matter as one case, and that no distinction was to be made between the two lettings; that there either was or not a surrender by operation of law, and that no fault was to be found with the manner in which that had been left to the jury. Rule refused.

Acknowledgment of a married woman under 3 & 4 W. 4.

Talfourd, Serjt. applied for a commission to take the acknowledgment of a married woman, who, with her husband, was residing at Sydney. The Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 83, gives authority for the appointment of commissioners to take the acknowledgment of any married woman to be named in the commission; and the difficulty in the present case was, that the Christian name of the lady was not known. The conveyance, however, would be sent out with the commission in blank as to the name, which would be filled up at Sydney.

The Court said, that the commission might issue, care being taken at Sydney that the identity of the married woman be sufficiently established by proper affidavits.

Doe dem. Stevenson v. Glover.

Testator devised lands after the death of his wife to his son M. and his heirs and assigns for ever: but in case his son M. should happen to depart this life without leaving issue of his body lawfully begotten and living, and he should not have disposed and parted with his interest of and in the devised premises, then and in such case the testator gave and devised the same to his daughter A. in fee. M. the testator's son, died seized of the premises, without having disposed of the same, except by will. Held, that the devise over to the testator's daughter A. was a good executory devise, and that the will of the testator's son M. was not a disposition which prevented the executory devise from taking effect.

This was a special case, the material facts stated in which were as follow:—Glover, the testator, being seized in fee of a copyhold close and premises, by will devised the same to his wife for her life, and after her decease he thereby gave and devised the same to his son Mordecai Glover, to hold unto him the said Mordecai Glover, and his heirs and assigns for ever; but in case his, the said testator's, son Mordecai Glover should happen to depart this life without leaving issue of his body lawfully begotten and living, and he, the said testator's son, should not have disposed and parted with his interest of and in the said copyhold close and premises, then and in such case the said testator gave and devised the same to his illegitimate daughter, Ann King, the wife of —— Stevenson, her heirs and assigns for ever.

The testator died leaving his widow, the said Mordecai Glover, and Ann Stevenson him surviving.

After the death of the testator, the widow entered on the devised premises, and continued possessed thereof until her death, which happened in 1804, when the testator's son, Mordecai Glover, entered into possession, and was duly admitted at the Court Baron.

Mordecai Glover, by his will, gave and devised all his freehold and copyhold property unto his wife Sarah in fee, and afterwards died seized of the said copyhold close and premises, without having disposed thereof, except by his said will.

On the death of the said Mordecai Glover in August 1843, Sarah Glover entered into and was admitted of the said close and premises.

Ann Stevenson died, leaving her son William, the lessor of the plaintiff, her customary heir her surviving.

The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the lessor of the plaintiff in August 1843, was entitled to the said copyhold, close, and premises.

If the Court should be of opinion that he was, judgment was to be entered for the lessor of the plaintiff; and if, on the contrary, that he was not, the defendant was to have a non pros. entered.

Sir Thomas Wilde, in behalf of the lessor of the plaintiff, submitted that the estate to the testator's son, Mordecai, was a qualified one, and that the subsequent limitation over operated by way of executory devise, which took effect on the death of Mordecai Glover, without his having disposed of the property in his lifetime, and that the devise did not authorize a disposition by will, but only such a disposition as was to take effect during the life of Mordecai Glover. There was here also no such general restraint of alienation as made the executory devise over void, but only a partial restraint.

The following cases were referred to: Porter v. Bradley (3 T. R. 143); Forth v. Chapman (1 P. Wms. 663); 6 Cruise Dig. title "Devise," ch. 19; 2 Jarman's edition of Powell on Devise, 265; Doe dem. Gill v. Pearson (6 East, 173); Ware v. Cann (10 B. & C. 433); 1 Roper on Legacies, 559 & 678; Ross v. Ross (1 J. & W. 154); Doe dem. Thorley v. Thorley (10 East, 438); Sug. Power, 4 ed. 218; Rex v. Marquis of Stafford (7 East, 521): Beachcroft v. Broome (4 T. R. 441).

Gaselee, Serjt. contra, contended, first, that the fee absolutely passed to the son, Mordecai, by the words of the will; and secondly, if it did not pass absolutely and unconditionally, then that the condition had been performed by a disposal by will. Jarman on Devises, 809, was referred to. It was also urged, that the word "dispose" was a term ordinarily used with reference to an alienation by will, and shewed, therefore, an intention that Mordecai Glover should have such power of disposal.

Sir Thomas Wilde, in reply, was stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—This case appears to me not to fall within that class of cases where there are conditions repugnant to the estates given, but to be an executory devise granted to take effect on the happening of certain events which have in fact happened. The question always is, what is the intention of the testator? There is in the present little or no doubt as to that. What the testator says is, that his daughter should have the property, should his son Mordecai die without issue and without having disposed and parted with his interest in the same. The words "parted with his interest" are explanatory of what the testator meant by the word "dispose," and mean evidently some disposal by deed in his, the son's, lifetime. If the words "parted with" had stood there only, there could have been no doubt that it must have had reference to an alienation before death; and I think that the same construction should have been put, even if it had rested on the word "dispose" alone. But a will is a disposition which does not take effect until after death; that, therefore, would not be a compliance with what is required to take effect during life. Looking generally at this will and the intention of the testator, as collected from the terms of the will, this seems to me to be a devise giving power to the son to dispose of the property during his life; but that if he did not so part with it, and left no issue, it was the wish of the testator that it should go over to his daughter, and which is surely not an unreasonable desire.

COLTMAN, J.—There can be no objection to this limitation as an executory devise. There is no general restraint of alienation, for it recognises a power of disposition by a conveyance in the lifetime of the son. Then, if we look at the grammatical construction of this will, it certainly points to what may be the state of things at the time of the death of the son; and we ought to adhere to such grammatical construction, unless the same would lead to any absurdity, which is not the case here; and I think, therefore, that the judgment should be for the lessor of the plaintiff.

CRESSWELL, J. and ERLE, J. concurred.

Judgment for the lessor of the plaintiff.

Thursday, April 24.

WILLIAMSON v. PAGE.

A commission to examine witnesses upon interrogatories authorized the commissioners to put additional questions to the witnesses when it should appear to them to be necessary and proper. It appeared from the return to this commission, that the defendant, having relinquished the greater part of direct interrogatories to a witness produced by him under the commission, proposed to proceed with examining him upon additional questions; that the plaintiff objected to this, but that subject to such objection the commissioners proceeded with the examination of the witness on such additional questions:—Held, that as it appeared the commissioners had not exercised any discretion of their own in putting these additional questions, the examination so taken was unauthorised and inadmissible in evidence.

Assumpsit for work and labour, money paid, and on an account stated. Pleas, except as to 15*l.* non assumpsit, and as to that sum payment into court of 15*l.* At the trial before Cresswell, J. at the last Summer Assizes at Liverpool, it appeared that the action was brought against the defendant as the owner of a vessel for work done by the plaintiff as broker in procuring a cargo for her, and for money advanced by him to the captain while at the port of Belfast, in Ireland, to enable the vessel to be cleared off from that port. Under the authority of 1 Wm. 4, c. 22, s. 4, an order had been made by Coltman, J. for the issuing of a commission to Belfast for the examination of witnesses.

The writ of commission issued pursuant to this order, and tested the 12th June, 7 Victoria, was directed to John Bates and Hugh Crawford, commissioners named by the plaintiff, and John Cramsie and James Andrews, commissioners named by the defendant, and empowered them to examine Samuel M'Dowell and Robert Simms, and all such other persons as might be produced at the execution of the said commission as witnesses upon certain interrogatories to be exhibited to them, as well on the part of Wm. Williamson, plaintiff, as on the part of William Sagon Page, defendant in this action; and thereupon the commissioners were required to examine the witnesses upon the interrogatories upon oath, and to take their examinations and reduce them into writing, and to send the same to the chambers of Mr. Justice Coltman, together with the interrogatories and writ of commission, on or before the 1st August then next. The writ of commission then proceeded as follows:—"And we do further authorize and command you, that you put, or cause to be put, additional questions to the said witnesses when it shall appear to you to be necessary and proper, and that you do cause such questions to be put down in writing and returned with the answers thereto, together with the aforesaid interrogatories and answers under this commission."

By the return of the commissioners to this commission it appeared that several witnesses had been produced by the plaintiff, and examined on the interrogatories delivered by him, but that they had been, at the request of the defendant's agent, cross-examined only on two or three of the interrogatories, delivered by way of cross-examination, and that then additional questions had been put to them by way of cross-examination. The return set forth these additional questions and answers in the following manner: "Additional questions put on behalf of the defendant to Samuel M'Dowell, a witness for the plaintiff, by way of cross-examination, with the answers of the said Samuel M'Dowell thereto;" then followed thereunder the questions to and answers of the witness.

Annexed to the deposition of Scott, a witness produced by the defendant, the following statement was contained in the return: "The attorney attending before us on the part of the defendant relinquished the other direct interrogatories of the defendant attached to the commission as regards the witness under examination, and proposed to proceed with his examination upon additional questions to be administered under the commission. The plaintiff objects to the defendant's right to adopt this course; insists that the defendant is bound to examine this witness to all the defendant's direct interrogatories attached to the commission; and also that the defendant is not, under the circumstances, entitled to now proceed to examine this witness on additional questions in the manner proposed. Subject to these objections, we have proceeded with the examination of the said witness on such additional questions."

At the trial, the plaintiff read such of the answers as he required to his interrogatories, and the defendant desired then to have read the answers of the witnesses to the additional questions which had been so put. This was objected to on the part of the plaintiff; no distinction was made as to any particular witness, but the objection was general against reading the answers to the additional questions, and the learned judge allowed the objection and refused to receive the evidence. A verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 25*l.*

In Michaelmas Term last a rule having been obtained by Channell, Serjt. calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why this verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had on the ground of improper rejection of evidence, Murphy, Serjt. (Robinson with him) now shewed cause.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule, relied on the additional questions being only such as were proper for the clearing up of doubts arising from the answers to the previous question administered under the commission.

TINDAL, C. J.—In this case an authority is given to certain commissioners in the ordinary way to examine witnesses as well on the part of the plaintiff as of the defendant, and if the authority had stopped there, there can be no doubt that the authority was only to obtain answers to such questions as should be exhibited to them; but there is an additional power given to the commissioners, namely, "to put or cause to be put additional questions to the said witnesses when it shall appear to you to be necessary and proper." The object of this was to guard against surprise to either of the parties by any sudden answer to any of the interrogatories; but it was not to introduce a power of general examination at the will of the commissioners. A reasonable discretion was given only thereby to the commissioners to put such additional questions as they should consider necessary for the purpose of elucidating the answers to the interrogatories exhibited by the parties. It is clear that the Court meant by the commission to intrust this to the discretion of the commissioners, and what we have now to see is whether the commissioners have exercised in the matter any such discretion. It appears to me that they have not exercised any discretion. They had no authority to return any special finding. The parties in the cause have submitted the matter to the discretion of the four commissioners, and it is the misfortune of such parties who chose them if two of the commissioners thought one way, and two the other, so that they came to no determination on the matter. It is not strictly necessary that it should appear the additional questions were put to the witnesses by the commissioners themselves if they adopted the questions, as that would virtually be the same. The return states that the plaintiff objected to the defendant proceeding to examine on additional questions; now what is the determination come to on this by the commissioners? do they say that the defendant shall, or not so proceed? It appears they say neither the one or the other, but that, subject to this objection, they have proceeded with the examination of the witness. It is impossible, therefore, not to see that two of the commissioners thought that the defendant might so proceed, and two thought that he might not, and that, instead of determining the matter for themselves, they have reserved it for the Court. For these reasons I think the verdict ought to stand, and that the evidence was properly rejected.

COLTMAN, J.—My brother Channell has satisfied me that many of the additional questions which were put were fit and proper to have been put, but that is not now for us to decide on. The question is, have the commissioners exceeded or not their jurisdiction? and as it doe[illegible] appear that they have exercised any judgment [illegible]he subject of putting these questions, I agree in thinking that they had no authority to take the answers thereto.

ERLE, J. delivered a similar judgment.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, April 17.

Bartlett v. Dimond.

Unless there is an admission of a certain sum received by a trustee, and a promise to pay it, his executor is not liable in an action for money had and received brought by the cestui que trust.

Assumpsit for money had and received and account stated.

Plea, non assumpsit.

Jervis, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule for a new trial in this case, which was an action brought against the defendant as the executor of a party who had been appointed by deed the trustee of a mortgage executed by the plaintiff on various trusts. The testator did not execute the deed, but the defendant supplied the plaintiff with accounts which shewed that the testator had balances in his hands. The questions raised in this rule are three in number. 1. Can the defendant be sued for a surplus arising from monies coming to the hands of the testator under a deed of covenant, without any express admission of such surplus being due? 2. Even if he can, money had and received will not lie; and, 3. If it did, are the plaintiffs the proper parties to sue? Now the bare proof of a surplus in the hands of a trustee without a promise to pay amounts to nothing. There must be a positive statement of an admitted surplus even in an action of covenant: but in money had and received a promise to pay the particular surplus must be proved. The surplus sued for must be a positive, ascertained, and admitted one, in any case. But there is none shewn here at all.

Cases cited: Carse v. Roberts (Holt, N.P. 500); Harvey v. Archbold (3 B. & C. 526); Edwards v. Bates (Jurist (C.B.) 589); Roper v. Holland (3 Ad. & El. 99).

Martin, Q. C. contrà.—By the terms of the deed the testator of the defendant was bound to pay to the plaintiff whatever was in his hands on the 6th of January and July in each year, after satisfying the interest. Now the accounts stated by the defendant shew that such a balance did exist on certain occasions, and that those sums came to his hands from the testator; he is liable in this form of action, without any proof of an express promise to pay; for as the testator did not execute the trust-deed, covenant will not lie. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Pollock, C.B.—This case was argued in the last Term, when the Court took time for consideration. The question is, whether an action will lie against the defendant as the executor of a trustee for money had and received by his testator under the peculiar circumstances of the case. The testator was appointed a trustee of a mortgage-deed by the plaintiff, the mortgagor. The mortgagee was to receive the rents of the mortgaged estate, and by the terms of the deed the testator was, after allowing the taxes and repairs to the tenants, to hold all the remaining rents in trust for certain purposes in the deed specified. These purposes were, first, to pay taxes; secondly, the costs of erection; thirdly, commission; fourthly, payments on policies of insurance; and, fifthly, in satisfaction of, on the 6th of January and the 6th of July, the accruing interest on the principal monies secured; and to pay the ultimate surplus, if any, to the plaintiff, with a proviso, that if, on those days, the 6th of January and the 6th of July, the testator should have any rents and profits in his hands, it should be lawful for him to detain the whole or a part for the purpose of paying the premium in that year on the policy, with other provisos. The deed contained a covenant between one Palmer and the testator, stating the obligation, that he, being the receiver, would use his endeavour to give effect to the deed, and recover and cause to be paid for its ends, intents, and purposes, all the rents received by him. The testator did not execute the deed. According to the terms of this indenture the defendant was bound (as was argued by Mr. Martin) to pay whatever was the balance on each 6th day of January and 6th of July; first, in satisfying the interest, and secondly, to pay over the then surplus to the plaintiff; and as the accounts stated by the executrix shewed a balance on some of them, an action might be maintained—not of covenant, because the defendant's testator did not execute the deed—but of special assumpsit, because he agreed in the instrument on a special contract to make the promise; and as nothing more was to be done than to pay the money, an action for money had and received could be maintained against him. This was the argument on the part of the plaintiff. Whether if this had been the true construction of the deed, such an action could be supported, we need not decide; because we are clearly of opinion that the testator was not bound by the terms of the deed to pay the surplus existing on each 6th day of January and 6th of July. Although there is a contract by the testator to receive and pay the money according to the deed, yet it is nothing more than the effect of a contract to perform the trusts specified by the indenture; and all the money received by him under the indenture was in trust. The testator was not a mere receiver, but a trustee, and the primary object of his trust was to keep down the mortgage interest. For that purpose he had a discretion under the control of a court of equity to keep the funds in his hands if reasonably necessary; and he was not bound on each 6th of January and 6th of July to balance his accounts, and to pay over on those days the then surplus. For instance, it might happen that on the 6th of July the trustee might know that no rents would be forthcoming in time to pay the half-year's interest in January, and if so, he might, without contravening the deed, keep the then surplus. Whether he did so properly or not could not be tried by a court of law. The only remedy would be in a court of equity, which would make proper inquiries and give proper directions; and so long as the trust continues, the court of equity is the only remedy; and we think the moneys were originally received in trust, and that the trust is not determined. If that trust was ended, and the testator had stated his account, or in other words admitted to the plaintiff he held any sum of money in his hands, there might have been a right of action. He would, in respect of that sum, be a debtor, and not properly a trustee, and then an action could have been maintained. This is the principle which Roper v. Holland (3 A. & E. 99), and the case reported in 2 A. & E. 66 (which are referred in the judgment of this Court in the case of Hardman v. Price) decided. There is no evidence here of any such statement of account. If the account rendered by the executor had been rendered by the testator, it would have been a question for the jury whether it was such a statement as to constitute the testator a debtor; but being stated by the executor as the account of the testator, it is only equivalent to evidence that such payment as are therein mentioned were made by the testator to the executor. We therefore think this rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

Doe dem. ——— v. Davis.

Ejectment—Construction of a power to lease.

Ejectment for certain premises. Verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff, subject to a reference to ascertain whether the best rent had been taken, with leave to the defendant to move to enter a verdict, if the Court should be of opinion that the power to lease had not been rightly exercised. The parties having agreed to take the opinion of the Court before proceeding with the reference,

G. Chilton, Q. C. now moved accordingly.—The power to lease in this case is, "to demise or lease the said premises for any period not exceeding twenty-one years; or, one, two, or three lives;" and the short point for the Court is whether, under this power, a freehold lease for three lives can be granted. Now, that is the lease which has been granted to the lessor of the plaintiff, and on which he relies; but it is contended that the power only authorizes the granting of a lease for one, two, or three lives, during a period of twenty-one years.

Pollock, C. B.—I think the words of the power may be so read as to support the lease; are we not then bound to give the power a reasonable construction? I know of no rule by which we are to give it a narrow one.

Parke, B.—You must shut your eyes to what has been done, and then see what is a reasonable construction.

Chilton.—There cannot be an option of constructions; and it is for the Court to say which offers the greatest violence; the one put by the plaintiff, or that of the defendant.

Parke, B.—We think the construction put upon the power by the party acting under it a perfectly good construction; the verdict will therefore stand for the plaintiff. Rule accordingly.

Pachet v. Sutcliffe.

New trial.

Case for an alleged injury to a right to certain water.

Pleas—Not guilty, a traverse of the right claimed, and the Statute of Limitations.

It appeared that the defendant was the owner of a certain meadow on the side of a hill, which for the greater part of the year was flooded by water, which rose in a copse also the property of the defendant, and was carried into the meadow by certain gutters, but there was no ascertainable stream. The plaintiff, it appeared, was the owner and occupier of a house which was on a level below this meadow; and the right he claimed was, to have the water which was in the habit of running over the meadow in question run into his cistern; to do which it had to percolate through the soil, run into a ditch, and then into the plaintiff's cistern. The right claimed by the plaintiff was, however, limited to all times of the year except the hay season.

The injury complained of was, that since the digging of a certain quarry by the defendant, the water had gradually ceased to flow into the plaintiff's cistern. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Martin, Q. C. now moved to set aside the verdict, and for a nonsuit or a new trial, on the ground that there was no such right known to the law as that now claimed by the plaintiff.

The Court suggested it had better be turned into a special case.

Stands over, to see whether the Plaintiff will agree; otherwise, rule nisi.

Phillips v. Smith.

New trial.

This was an action against the defendant for the mismanagement of a farm, and cultivating it in an untenantlike manner. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 60*l*.

Humfrey, Q. C. now moved for a new trial, or to reduce the damages to 2*l*. 4*s*. 6d. on the ground of misdirection in the learned judge, and that the verdict was against the evidence.

In the declaration the untenantlike farming was alleged to be "against the custom of the country;" but no custom being proved at the trial, the counsel for the plaintiff obtained leave to amend the declaration by striking out those words. It further appeared that 2*l*. 4*s*. 6*d*. was all the damage proved to have accrued to the plaintiff, except through the cutting down of certain birch trees, and this, it was now contended, could not be recovered in an action for farming in an untenantlike manner, or, at all events, not without it being alleged that the untenantlike farming was "by cutting down certain trees," &c. &c. Rule nisi.

Dickenson v. Marrow.

This was an action for money had and received. The defendant pleaded three pleas, but the question turned on the first plea, which was non assumpsit.

It appeared that the plaintiff, who was a merchant at Sunderland, had consigned a cargo of wheat to the defendant, who was a corn-factor at Newcastle, to sell for him. After the cargo had been consigned, but before it arrived, several letters passed between the parties, in one of which the plaintiff said, "You will please to account for the proceeds of the cargo of wheat to Mr. Scarff, and as soon as it arrives please let us know." This Mr. Scarff was, it appeared, a corn-agent at Newcastle, and being indebted to Marrow for an old debt, Marrow claimed to hold the proceeds of the cargo for that debt. At the trial, however, it was proved that, before the arrival of the cargo, Mr. Dickinson himself went to Newcastle and countermanded the direction to account to Scarff. A verdict having been found for the defendant,

Watson, Q. C. now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 1,042*l*., being the value of the cargo, on the ground that even supposing the letter of the plaintiff to the defendant ever acted as a transfer to Scarff, yet unless the plaintiff knew that the cargo was to be held as a security for Scarff's debt to Marrow, he was entitled to recover, and also that there was an express revocation of the authority before it had been acted upon. Rule nisi.

Doe dem. Harley v. Bottomley.

New trial.

Ejectment for a coach-house and garden. Verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff, with leave for the defendant to move to enter a verdict.

It appeared that certain property had been devised to Bottomley under the words "My freehold house, in which Mr. Bottomley is residing, at Croydon, I leave to Mr. Bottomley, and that which he occupies under a lease, to Mr. Harley;" now at the time this devise was made, the coach-house and garden were used by Bottomley, and enjoyed with the house he resided in; and the question was, whether the coach-house and stable passed to the lessor of the plaintiff or to the defendant under the words of the devise: the learned judge left this question to the jury, who found a verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff.

Shea, Serjt. now moved to set aside this verdict, and enter one for the defendant, pursuant to leave reserved, on the ground that it was merely a question of construction of the devise, and was for the Court, and not for the jury. Case cited: Press v. Parker (2 Bing. 456). Rule nisi.

Phillips v. Warren.

New trial.

This was an action by the holder of a bill of exchange against the acceptor; verdict for plaintiff. At the trial it was shewn that the bill, which was two years old, had been paid by some one, it was not known who, when lying at the banker's, after which it again got into circulation.

M. Chambers now moved to enter a verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial, on the ground that a general receipt on the back of a bill of exchange is primâ facie evidence of its having been paid by the acceptor, and if so it required a fresh stamp. Now here there was the letter "R" on the bill, which the banker's clerk stated at the trial to mean "received." Cases cited: Groves v. Key (3 B.& Ad. 318); Scholey v. Walsby (Peak, 34). Rule nisi.

BARRETT v. ROLF.
New trial.

This was an action of trespass, and it appeared that the plaintiff was the widow of a farmer of the name of John Barrett, who had held a farm for a lease which was unexpired at the time of his death, and that the widow had been let in to occupy the farm for the remainder of the term, by Charles Barrett, who was the executor of John Barrett, and had proved the will. Some time after this, however, and before the expiration of the lease to the deceased John Barrett, disputes arose between the executor of Barrett and the widow, and he directed the defendant Rolf to remove the furniture and farming stock of the widow away from the farm, which he accordingly did, upon which she brought an action of trespass against him; verdict having been found for the plaintiff, damages 100*l*.

M. Chambers now moved to set that verdict aside, and for a new trial, or to reduce the damages, on several grounds, but the only one eventually relied on was that as there was a term of eleven months of the lease to the deceased John Barrett unexpired at the time of the alleged trespass, that term was vested in his executor, and could not be passed by parol; but being an interest in land, must be assigned in writing, as required by the third section of the Statute of Frauds; therefore as Rolf had acted and justified under the authority of the executor, no action lay against him.

Cases cited: Malett v. Brayne (2 Camp. 103); Thomas v. Cooke (1 Crom. & M. 188). Rule nisi.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. FOSTER.

Wilde, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict in this case, which had been found for the Crown, on the ground of the misreception of evidence. It appeared that a bill of exceptions had been tendered, but that it was doubtful whether it would lie.

POLLOCK, C. B.—Now the case has been mentioned, will it not be better to let it stand over until the fate of the bill of exceptions has been decided, you having leave to mention the case again, after the decision of the court of error?

Wilde, Serjt. acceding, Rule accordingly.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. PORTER.

In this case there was a similar point.

Stands over as in the above case.

PARKER v. HARRISON.
Time to plead.

In this case, M. D. Hill, Q. C. moved for eighteen months' time to plead. It was an action of trover for certain promissory notes, which had been deposited in the hands of the defendant by a Mr. Windle Parker, as his attorney, in the year 1839, who had since that time left this country for Van Diemen's Land, and who, it was stated, had at the time he made the deposits desired the defendant not to give the notes up to any one without his directions; about three weeks since, however, the notes in question had been demanded of the defendant by another Mr. Parker, who was the cousin of Mr. Windle Parker who deposited them with the defendant; and on the notes not being given up, the above action had been brought. The defendant now sought time to communicate with his client, or to give up the notes. Rule nisi.

BETTLESTON and ANOTHER v. COOPER.

Semble, where there is an express decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction on any point, it is binding on this court, unless reversed in error.

This was an action by the assignees of a bankrupt against the defendant for money had and received, being the value of certain goods of the bankrupt which had been handed over to the defendant by the sheriff after they had been valued, they having been seized under a fieri facias issued by the defendant on a judgment under a warrant of attorney. At the trial, the warrant of attorney was held to be bad, for not having been filed within twenty-one days of its execution, and the plaintiffs had a verdict for 85*l*.

M. D. Hill now moved to set aside this verdict, and for a nonsuit, pursuant to leave reserved; and proceeded to state that there was one case dead against his client as to one of the points reserved. (Biffin v. York, 5 M. & G. 428.)

POLLOCK, C. B.—The decision of a court of coordinate jurisdiction is binding upon us unless reversed in error. If you wished to review the decision in Biffin v. York, you should have tendered a bill of exceptions. Why should we disturb the decision of the Court of Common Pleas?

M. D. Hill.—Then there is another point. The order to admit certain documents, was to admit all documents described in a notice dated the 4th of March, 1845, and when the notice was produced, it bore date the 1st of March. He further contended that the action was in the wrong form, as there had, in fact, been no sale of the goods, and therefore the action should have been trover.

ROLFE, B.—Suppose the sheriff had taken the money from the party, and then handed it back, instead of merely having the valuation of the goods made, would it not have been just the same?

POLLOCK, C. B.—If the sheriff does not sell, and it is property that was most likely to be sold, it may be presumed that there was a sale, and an action will lie for the proceeds as money had and received.

Hill.—Here the party had the goods in specie.

POLLOCK, C. B.—Yes, but he took them as money. This doctrine seems to be well settled, and as there are authorities for this form of action in circumstances like the present, I should not like to throw out any doubt on the point.

Rule refused on two points, but rule nisi as to the variance in the notice and order to admit.

Tuesday, April 22.

ESDAILE v. KING.

Warren moved in this case.—He was at a loss what to do; should be glad if the Court would instruct him. Since the action was commenced, the plaintiff had become insolvent, and the defendant had been appointed sole assignee. Before the insolvency, the matter was referred to an arbitrator, who made his award in favour of the defendant. An attachment was applied for, but the result in the sequel was that defendant had undertaken to proceed to trial. He submitted that, under these circumstances, he was entitled to a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit absolute in the first instance.

By the COURT.—This is not like a peremptory undertaking, after an application for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. It can only be a rule nisi.

Warren was at a loss how to serve the rule. He was both plaintiff and defendant. He would willingly consent to the rule absolute, so far as he was able to do so.

By the COURT.—Take a rule, if you like; but it must be only a rule nisi.

Wednesday, April 23.

EVANS v. THE DUBLIN AND DROGHEDA RAILWAY COMPANY.
Motion to set aside proceedings.

Peacock moved to set aside an order of Mr. Baron Platt, and all the proceedings which had been taken in this case, on the ground that the railway company had not been properly served with the writ of summons issued in this court in the above action. He stated that the service had been made on one of the directors who happened to be in London, while the Railway Act provides that, before that can be done, it must be shewn that the party is not able to find any clerk or other person at the office of the company, who can be served, if that office is known and to be found, which it was sworn to be to the plaintiff in this case. The office was in Dublin, and the object of the plaintiff in issuing a writ in this court was to get the cause tried in England instead of Ireland. Rule nisi.

SLADE v. HAWLEY.

Sheriff—Damages against for not seizing all the goods under a fieri facias which he might have done.

This was an action against the defendant, as sheriff, and the question for the Court was, whether upon a count of the declaration alleging that the sheriff might have seized sufficient goods to satisfy an execution which had been lodged in his hands by the plaintiff, the plaintiff was entitled to recover intermediate damages if he proved that the sheriff might have seized more goods than he had done, but not sufficient to satisfy the whole amount sought to be recovered under the execution.

At the trial before Platt, B. that learned judge ruled that upon the form of the declaration, unless the plaintiff shewed that the sheriff might have seized sufficient to satisfy the whole amount of the judgment he was not entitled to recover any thing.

Kennedy now moved to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 6*l*. 4*s*. 6*d*. on the ground that if he shewed that the sheriff could have seized any larger quantity of goods than he really had done, the plaintiff was entitled to recover pro tanto. Rule nisi.

THE CALDER AND SALTER HIBBLE BRIDGE NAVIGATION COMPANY v. BILLING.

Where a canal company, in the exercise of a power (under a local Act) to make bye-laws for the orderly governing of the navigation of their canal (which was a public one, subject to the payment of a certain toll), made a bye-law prohibiting parties from navigating their canal on a Sunday: Held, a bad bye-law.

Declaration, in trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's close, and breaking down a certain chain.

Plea, that the said close, &c. was a navigable canal, regulated by a certain local Act (9 Geo. 3, c. 71); and that the public had a right to navigate the said canal with their boats, &c. paying certain tolls; and because the said chain was wrongfully across the said canal, the defendant, in order to navigate and pass along the said canal, broke the said chain.

Replication, setting out a certain bye-law made by the Navigation Company, under their seal, whereby it was ordered that the public should not be allowed to navigate on Sundays.

Averments, that the day on which the defendant broke the said chain was a Sunday, and that the said chain was put across the said canal to enforce the bye-law.

General demurrer.

Cowling now appeared to support the demurrer. There is no clause in the Navigation Company's Act authorizing them to prevent the public from navigating the canal in question on a Sunday. The only clause under which they have any power at all to make by-laws is one giving them power to regulate the mode in which parties who are in the habit of using the canal are to orderly navigate the canal, so as to give the greatest facilities to the public. This clause gives them no power to shut up their canal on a Sunday, and only gives them a power to enforce their bye-laws by fine; it is merely a power for the good governance of the manner of navigating, which this bye-law does not profess to be. Now, in the absence of any express power in their Act, this is a bad bye-law, as in restriction of a public right, without shewing any necessity; and it is contended that all bye-laws in restraint of a public right which the public have are bad if they do not shew a good and sufficient reason for such restraint. Then there is nothing illegal in travelling on a Sunday.

POLLOCK, C.B.—The religious observance of the Sabbath as regulated by the statutes the Court are bound to take notice of, but any other observance must be left to the religious feeling of persons. Formerly the Courts met on a Sunday, and also the Houses of Parliament.

ROLFE, B.—Is this right to travel on a Sunday good independently of the bye-law; is it not affected by the 29 Car. 2, cap. 7; does not the second section apply?

Cowling.—That statute is repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 75, commonly called the Thames Act; but even if not, it does not apply. It has been held in Sandiman v. Breach (7 B. C. 96), not to apply to stage coaches, as they are not mentioned in the Act; now canals were not in existence in the time of Charles the Second.

Cases cited: The Gunmakers' case (Willes's Rep. 389); Bosworth v. Hearn (Ca. temp. Lord Hardwick); Adley v. Reeves (2 M. & S. 53); Com. Dig. "Bye-Law," E. 1, E. A.; The Tailors of Ipswich's case (11 Coke, 53 a); Dodwell v. The University of Oxford (2 Ventris, 33); R. v. Grosvenor (2 Star. 511); The case of the Free Grammar School of Darlington, in the Exchequer Chamber (not yet reported).

Addison, contrà.—The simple question is, whether this is a reasonable bye-law. That, I submit, is a question for the Court or a jury to decide. Now, it is submitted, that the Act of Charles is still in force. The Thames Navigation Act is strictly a local Act, and only repeals 29 Car. 2, c. 7, as far as it would affect the river Thames, and therefore the bye-law is a good one.

POLLOCK, C.B.—But even if you convince the Court of that fact, still you are in this difficulty, that statute only gives a penalty of 5*s*.

Addison.—Yes; but our Act gives us a power to impose a penalty of 5*l*. for disobedience to our by-laws, and we merely put up the chain to enforce our bye-law.

ROLFE, B.—Is there any case which shews that a bye-law made pro salute animæ is good?

Addison.—This bye-law is for the good and proper observance of the Sabbath generally. Then, again, this is not a public highway, except pro modo; and it is submitted that, under the power to make byelaws for the orderly regulation of the navigation, this is a perfectly proper regulation.

Cases cited: Camden v. Anderson (6 T. R. 723); R. v. Rodgers (10 East, 569).

ALDERSON, B.—The only question is, whether this bye-law is within the power given by the local Act. That power is for the orderly using of the navigation, and the well-governing of the bargemen and others navigating the canal. Now I think this is for the orderly using of the canal with regard to the general convenience, so as to give the greatest facilities for using it, and not for regulating the religious observance of the Sabbath; that is left to the general law of the land. There is no power to regulate the morals of the boatmen, but merely how they shall carry goods in their boats, so as not to interfere with the navigation. I am far from saying that this is an improper bye-law, but merely that it is an illegal one. The judgment must be for the defendant.

ROLFE, B.—I am entirely of the same opinion. It is quite monstrous to say (whether the statute of Charles is repealed or not) that this canal company has the power to say, pro salute animæ, you shall not navigate on a Sunday.

Pollock, C. B. and Platt, B. were of the same opinion. Judgment for the defendant.

Barratt v. Woodgate.—E. James moved for a new trial, on the ground of surprise. Rule nisi.

New trial.

Robertson v. Snowler.—Corrie (for Peacock) moved for a nonsuit or a new trial. The action was in trover for title-deeds, and the main question was, whether a certain devisee of a will took an estate for life only, or an estate in fee. The estate was limited in express terms to the life of the devisee, but there was a charge for the payment of debts, and this, it was submitted, gave the fee. Authority cited: Powell on Wills, 391. Rule nisi.

Baron and Others v. Berkeley.—Corrie (for Peacock) moved to set aside an order of Rolfe, B. Rule nisi.

Langston v. Wetherell.—Udal moved to set aside the judgment and subsequent proceedings herein, on the ground that the warrant of attorney on which the judgment was signed had been set aside. Rolfe, B. had set aside the warrant of attorney, but had refused to set aside the judgment and subsequent proceedings. Rule nisi.

Woolston v. Newcombe.—Mellor moved that defendant might be compelled to produce an agreement, that the same might be stamped, or to admit a stamped copy in evidence without objection at the trial. (Bousfield v. Godfrey, 5 Bing.)

Rule nisi to produce the agreement.

Macintosh v. The Midland Counties Railway Company.—Kelly, Q.C. moved for a new trial, or to arrest the judgment. Rule nisi.

Anonymous.—Sir John Bayley, Bart. moved for an attachment against an attorney absolute in the first instance, for not delivering his bill of costs, obedience to a rule of court. If ever there was a case in which the rule might be absolute in the first instance, this was that case, for the attorney had repeatedly promised to deliver the bill, had experienced the greatest forbearance from the applicant on the faith of such promises, and had trifled most disgracefully with the authority of the Court. [By the Court.—It can only be a rule nisi. Suppose he says I have delivered the bill?] Rule nisi.

Bevins v. Holme.—Prideaux moved to rescind an order of Rolfe, B. for striking out a count in a declaration. The first count was against an attorney, for not accounting for money which he had recovered at the suit of a third party for a personal injury by such third party, on the retainer of the plaintiff, and the other count was for money had and received. Rule nisi.

Blackwell v. Badger and Another.—Dundas, Q.C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Cur. adv. vult.

Colley v. Moses.—C. Wood moved for a new trial. Rule refused.

BAIL COURT.

Friday, April 18.

(Before Mr. Justice Coleridge.)

Reg. v. Bird, Vinall, and Others.

Certiorari to remove an indictment from the Middlesex sessions into this Court.

Bodkin and H. Wilde, shewed cause against the rule obtained herein by Peacock, for a certiorari to remove this indictment into this Court from the Middlesex Quarter Sessions, for a nuisance in Spafields burial-ground, and stated, that as the defendants had consented to forego having a special jury, and would undertake to try the indictment at the sittings after this Term, they would not object to the certiorari. Certiorari granted.

Watson v. Orme.

The Court will not grant a distringas to compel appearance, unless the copy of the writ has either been shewn to have come to the hands of the defendant, or has been left on the premises.

Sir John Bayley applied for a distringas to compel an appearance under the following circumstances:—The defendant resides in an isolated house, surrounded partly by a high wall, and partly by a canal. Twelve attempts had been made in vain to serve him, as no one would open the door, and the only answer that could be obtained was, that the defendant was not at home. On one occasion the defendant, although denied to the deponent, was seen on the premises, and, on another occasion, the defendant's brother said to the party, "It is of no use your attempting to serve him, as he won't be served." No copy had been left, for the reason that no one would open the door.

Coleridge, J.—Why did you not throw the copy over the wall?

Bayley.—The wall is too high, and the canal too broad.

Coleridge, J.—You could have attached a stone to it, and have so flung it over. The difficulty in this case is, that as no copy has been left, the defendant cannot know in what court he is to appear; where the copy has been left on the premises, we may presume that he has had it. If you will contrive to leave the copy on the premises by throwing it over the wall, I think you may have the distringas. You must do so first. Rule refused.

Reg. on the Prosecution of the Mayor of Yarmouth v. Aldred.

Criminal information—Withdrawing plea of "Not guilty," and pleading "Guilty."

In this case a rule absolute had been obtained for a criminal information against the defendant for insulting and threatening language (see 4 Law T. 156), to which information the defendant had pleaded "not guilty."

F. Robinson now applied, on behalf of the defendant, for liberty to withdraw his plea and plead "guilty," at the same time making an ample apology to the prosecutor for his conduct, and offering the costs of the proceedings.

Martin, Q.C. on behalf of Mr. Marsh, the late Mayor of Yarmouth, accepted the apology, and expressed himself as satisfied with the defendant's proposal.

A plea of "guilty" was then substituted for that of "not guilty," and a nominal fine of one shilling imposed.

Re Hilliard.

Motion to compel an attorney to perform his undertaking to pay a sum of money, such undertaking being in respect of the debt of another, and void under the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds.

Martin, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Gray, calling upon a Mr. Hilliard, an attorney, to shew cause why he should not pay the sum of 29*l.* pursuant to his undertaking. It appeared that an action had been commenced by one Winnington against Forrester, for which latter Hilliard was the attorney (a Mr. Davis being the attorney for the plaintiff); that the action went on to notice of trial, when the defendant gave a cognovit for the debt and costs, which was attested by Hilliard, but which, on account of being irregularly attested, was set aside, and the action continued. Upon this the defendant's attorney applied to the plaintiff's attorney to know on what terms he would stay the action, to which a reply was returned that he would stay the action on the defendant's attorney giving his personal undertaking to pay the debt and costs within a month. Upon this Mr. Hilliard gave the following memorandum:—"I agree to pay Mr. Samuel Smith, within one calendar month, the sum of 29*l.* 14*s.* Witness my hand this 30th day of October, 1844. T. H. Hilliard." Mr. Hilliard having declined to pay the amount pursuant to his undertaking, this rule was obtained, against which it was argued that, as the undertaking in question was to answer for the debt of another, it was void under the Statute of Frauds, for want of a consideration, and would not, therefore, be enforced by the Court. (Re Greaves, 1 Crom. & J. 374; Evans v. Duncombe, 1 Crom. & J. 372; Carrington v. Roots, 2 M. & W. 248.)

Gray, in support of the rule, contended that, inasmuch as this was an application for the interference of the Court to compel one of its officers to perform his undertaking, the question of the applicability of the Statute of Frauds does not arise; that the Court will compel its officers to do justice, and that sufficient appears upon the face of the correspondence to shew that the consideration for the undertaking was the forbearing to continue the action. Cur. adv. vult.

Rennie v. Bruce.

Application to discharge a defendant out of custody who had been arrested on a capias issued under a judge's order, the copy capias and the original writ of summons being defective.

Borill shewed cause against a rule obtained by Crompton, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the defendant should not be discharged out of the custody of the sheriff of Surrey for irregularity, with costs. In this case the defendant had been arrested for a sum of 4,600*l.* by virtue of an order of Mr. Baron Rolfe, and it appeared that the original writ of summons, which was directed to the defendant at Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster, was actually served in Surrey, and was dated in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty. It further appeared that the copy of the writ of capias delivered to the defendant was not directed to any sheriff, but was in this particular in blank, and had no teste. In opposition to the rule it was contended—1st, That the rule was insufficient in not pointing out some irregularity in the process; 2nd, That the delivery of a copy of the capias is not rendered necessary by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; that it is the sheriff who delivers such copy, and the delivery is therefore his act, and the plaintiff is not responsible for it; that the object of the statute being to give in certain cases the security of the body of the defendant, the Court will assist in carrying out such intention, and that if necessary the Court will allow the copy to be amended; 3rd, That as to the writ of summons, upon which the capias is founded, the Court will permit it to be amended as in a variety of other cases. (Ireland v. Berry, 1 Dow. & Low. 866; Reg. v. The Sheriff of Montgomeryshire, 1 Dow. N.S. 388; Popkins v. Smith, 7 Bing. 434; Sutton v. Burgess, 1 C. M. & R. 770; Plock v. Pacheco, 9 M. & W. 342; Bilton v. Clapperton, 7 M. & W. 473; Kirk v. Dolby, 8 Dow. 766; Stevenson v. Castle, 1 Chit. 349; Galloway v. Bleadon, 1 M. & Gr. 247; Storr v. Mount, 2 Dowl. 417.)

Crompton, in support of the rule, contended that the rule was in the usual and proper form; that the arrest on such process was a mere nullity, and that the Court could not give the plaintiff liberty to amend, inasmuch as no amendment could rectify the irregularities, particularly that of the erroneous service, and the omission to deliver "on the execution thereof" the true copy of the capias; that the objection was not of irregularity, but that the plaintiff had not done that which the statute requires before the defendant could be held to bail. WALKER v.

Motion to rescind an order of a judge setting aside a writ of summons, on the ground of the plaintiff being described as Henry Walker and Co.

Lush moved for a rule to rescind an order of Mr. Baron Rolfe, setting aside a writ of summons. In this case the writ directed the defendant to enter an appearance, at the suit of "Henry Walker and Co." and the order of the learned judge was to set aside this writ on the ground of the insufficient setting forth of the names of the plaintiffs. The affidavit on which the order was obtained stated, that the præcipe was in like form, but did not state that there were any other parties plaintiffs besides the said Henry Walker. It was now argued that it should have been proved affirmatively that the words "and Co." meant "other persons," for that non constat that these may not be a portion of the plaintiff's name, and that if this were not so, that the objection could only be taken advantage of after declaration by an application to a judge at chambers to amend. (Soames v. Scott, 3 East, 111; Sarjant v. Gordon, 7 Dow. & Ry. 258; Sumner v. Batson, 11 Moore, 39; 1 Horn. & Hurl. 468.)

Ex parte WEBB.

The Court will not interfere summarily to compel an attorney to refund money, unless it clearly appear that he has received the same in his character of attorney.

In this case, which was an application by Lush to compel an attorney to refund a sum of money which he had received to pay legacies, but which he had neglected to do, his lordship refused the rule, saying, "There was no specific statement of the business in which the party had been engaged as an attorney; it was merely stated that he had been engaged and employed as an attorney: enough, at least, ought to be shewn to enable the Court to judge for itself whether the party against whom the application was sought had really been acting as an attorney, so as to render himself liable to the summary jurisdiction of the Court. No case had gone further than Ex parte Aitkin (4 B. & A. 47), and even that case had been doubted by some of the judges." Rule refused.

FIELD v. WILLIAMS and ANOTHER.

Amending defective record, after action brought and judgment given thereon.

Stammers, on a former day, had applied for the assistance of the Court under the following circumstances. An action of assumpsit had originally been commenced against the two defendants by the plaintiff, in which action judgment had been recovered. Upon this judgment an action of debt had since been brought; in this action one of the defendants suffered judgment by default, and the other pleaded nul tiel record. A day was given to produce the record, and notice thereof was given to the defendant. On the day appointed, the record of the recovery in the former action was produced, and the defendant not appearing, judgment was given against him. Subsequently it was discovered by the Master that, by mistake, the judgment in the original action (which was on promises, and so recited in the second action) had been drawn up in debt, whereupon the Master declined signing final judgment without the authority of the Court. His lordship having taken time to consider the proper course to be adopted, now gave the plaintiff leave to withdraw his notice of trial and the production of the record, and to amend the latter.

Archbold moved for a mandamus commanding the justices acting for the petty sessional division of Bury, in Lancashire, to hear an application in bastardy. It appeared that on the 31st of January last, the application of the mother came on for hearing, when it having been proved by the putative father that an application for an order against him for the maintenance of the same child had, previously to the passing of the late Act, been made by the guardians of the union, under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 72, and refused, the justices declined to proceed, considering that the former application was an answer to the present one. It was now contended that, inasmuch as the former application was at the instance of the parish, the mother was not precluded from applying for an order on her own behalf now that the altered state of the law gives her an interest in the matter.

BAKER v. WELLS.

Motion calling upon the sheriff to refund money illegally exacted by his officer as and for expenses of an execution, and calling upon the officer to shew cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of a contempt for his extortion.

Watson, Q.C. moved on behalf of the defendant for a rule calling upon the Sheriff of Berkshire to pay back to the defendant the excess received by him over and above the legal fees taken on the execution of a fi. fa. and also on William Cordwell, his officer, to shew cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of a contempt.

It appeared that a writ of fi. fa. had been sent to the Sheriff of Berks, and that possession of the defendant's goods was taken under it, when the amount was tendered to the officer Cordwell, who demanded certain fees to which he was not legally entitled; amongst others, for a valuation, preparing advertisements of sale, and posting bills, amounting in all to about 5*l.* Although, at the time of the demand of these fees by the officer, he was informed of their illegality, and his attention drawn to the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 55, and the scale of fees settled by the judges in pursuance of the Act, and also to the case of Slater v. Haines (10 L. J. Ex. 100), he still demanded the full amount, which was paid to him under protest. Rule nisi.

JUDGMENT.

(See Report of Tuesday.)

His lordship gave judgment in this case, which was an application to compel an attorney to pay over a sum of 29*l.* 14s. pursuant to his undertaking, and which was resisted on the ground that the undertaking was to pay the debt of another, and therefore void by the Statute of Frauds, and could not be enforced by this motion. His lordship held, that inasmuch as the Court interfered to compel its officers to perform their undertakings entered into professionally, with the view of insuring their honesty, and not for the purpose merely of enforcing legal contracts, and as the jurisdiction of the Court in such cases is extremely useful and ought not to be narrowed, and as moreover the attorney is not compelled to give such undertakings, the rule ought to be made absolute. Rule absolute.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

DEATHS BY ACCIDENT COMPENSATION BILL.

Monday, April 21.—Lord Lyttelton said, that in moving the second reading of this bill it would be unnecessary to take up the time of the House, as he believed that it met with general concurrence. As the law now stood, a person injured by the neglect of another could recover damages from the latter; but in case of death, the family of the person killed could not recover any damages. What he proposed in this bill was, that in case of death through the negligence of another, the wife, or husband, or the child, or children, and the parents, in case the person killed has no family, were to be enabled to recover damages from the person who was the cause of the death. He believed that there would be no practical difficulty in carrying this measure into effect. In fact, the principle which he went upon was at present the law both of Scotland and France.—Lord Campbell felt great satisfaction that his noble friend had taken charge of this Bill for a signal amendment of the law. The measure proposed by the noble lord had his entire concurrence, but at the same time he thought some useful and very necessary alterations could be made in the Bill in committee. He approved of the principle of giving pecuniary compensation where pecuniary damage was inflicted. That was already the principle of the law of England, recognized in what were known as actions on the case. He had himself suspended his Deodand Bill, in order that it might go pari passu with the present measure.—The Lord Chancellor said he had no disposition to oppose the second reading of the Bill, more especially as his noble and learned friend the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench had told him, in a conversation which they had recently held on the subject, that he approved of the principle of the Bill. He (the Lord Chancellor) concurred, however, with his noble and learned friend who had just sat down, that the Bill required considerable alteration in committee, and he would therefore suggest that it be referred to k committee up stairs. (Hear, hear.) He did not anow, for instance, what the noble lord (Lord Lyttelton) proposed doing in a case where a man murdered another. Under the Bill as it now stood the children of the murdered man would have a right to bring an action, and to recover compensation; but then it would be necessary for them in the first place to address the Secretary of State to suspend the execution of the murderer until after three months would have elapsed. He thought it was quite right that a husband should have a right to recover damages in a case where his wife was killed by accident as well as where she merely received an injury; but the Bill as it now stood went much farther, as it gave a similar right of action to the children of the deceased person. He did not, however, object either to the principle or to the second reading of the Bill, on the understanding that it should go before a committee up stairs.—Lord Lyttelton said he had no objection whatever to allow the Bill to go before a committee up stairs.—The Bill was then read a second time.

BAIL IN ERROR BILL.

Tuesday, April 22.—Lord Campbell wished to know when his noble and learned friend on the woolsack would proceed with the Bail in Error Bill.—The Lord Chancellor said he had made considerable alterations in the Bill, and would shortly lay the Bill on the table of the House.

Thursday, April 24.—The Royal Assent was given, by commission, to the Sugar Duties Bill, the Customs (Export Duties) Bill, the Glass Duties Bill, the Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, the Thames Navigation Bill, and Britten's Divorce Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

AUCTION DUTIES.

Tuesday, April 22.—Mr. Ricardo wished to ask a question of the Right Hon. Chancellor of the Exchequer with respect to the auction duties. There was some misunderstanding as to the time when these duties ceased to be paid, whether from the date of the passing the resolution of that House, or from the time of the passing of the Bill itself. He wished to ask from which of these dates the duty ceased?—The Chancellor of the Exchequer felt obliged to the hon. gentleman for giving him an opportunity of stating publicly that the auction duties ceased from the date of the report of the resolution of the House. It was necessary still to take an account of the duties, because, in the event of Parliament not passing the Bill, they could not otherwise be recovered; but, in fact, they ceased from the date of the report of the resolution.—Mr. Ricardo had only asked the question because there was some misunderstanding on the subject.

Three New Writs.—It will be seen by our Parliamentary report, that three new writs have been moved for. The first was in the room of Sir W. W. Wynn, who seems tired of Parliament; the second in the room of Mr. Forbes Mackenzie, who has been appointed a Lord of the Treasury, in the place of Mr. Pringle, and will no doubt again offer himself to the electors of Peeblesshire; and the third for Leominster, in the room of Mr. Greenaway, who, in a letter to his constituents, alleges urgent private business as his reason for retiring from Parliament.

Member returned to serve in this present Parliament.—Crown Office, April 21.—Town of Greenock—Walter Baine, esq. merchant, in Greenock, in the room of Robert Wallace, esq. who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

A misunderstanding seems to prevail with respect to the Forms in the Schedule to the new Bastardy Bill. It sanctions all Forms to the like effect as the defeated ones, and as those prepared by Mr. Symons for the Verulam Society are not merely to the like effect, but avoid the errors that have vitiated the former, they are, in fact, confirmed by the new Bill, both for the past and the future. The Profession may, therefore, use them with the most perfect confidence. Multitudes of petitions are being presented against the clause in the Justices' Clerks Bill which prohibits Clerks from conducting prosecutions.

Charges before Magistrates.—The total number of persons who have been charged before the metropolitan magistrates in the year 1844 far exceeds what would be the general belief on the subject, and many of the occupations of persons thus placed would not be thought of by the public. These were—Clergymen, 5; coachmakers, 112; corkcutters, 88; compositors, 44; clockmakers, 46; buttonmakers, 35; carpenters, 1,324; clerks, 582; coach and cabmen, [illegible],018; curriers, 131; cutlers, 76; carvers and gilders, 146; drapers, 122; dyers, 151; engineers, 192; excisemen, 8; fishmongers, 45; French polishers, gardeners, 412; glass makers, 290; glovers, goldbeaters, 116; greengrocers, 133; hairdressers, 125; hatters, 322; interpretors, 4; jewellers, 37; grocers, 91; labourers, 14,849; lawyers, [illegible]7; laundresses, 858; masons, 110; medical men, 159; millers, 25; milliners, 113; musicians, 64; opticians, 2; painters, 676; papermakers, 358; parish officers, 2; pawnbrokers, 12; postmen, 16; printers, 415; publicans, 92; reporters, 25; sailors, 1,968; sawyers, 166; saddlers, 99; servants, 882 (women, 1,072); sheriffs'-officers, 6; shopkeepers, 39; artists, 67; bakers, 502; brushmakers, 96; barmen, 28; brassfounders, 109; brewers, 23; bricklayers, 713; butchers, 48; shoemakers, 145; watermen, 206; women shoemakers, 498; smiths, 697; soldiers, 236; surveyors, 11; tailors, 1,605; tinkers, 117; tobacconists, 74; toolmakers, 110; turners, 71; watchmakers, 197; weavers, 465 (women, 216); woolstorers, 6; sweeps, 209; no trade or occupation—men, 9,519; women, 15,640.

The following buildings are certified as places duly registered for solemnizing marriages, pursuant to an Act of 6 & 7 William 4, cap. 85:—Wesley Rock Chapel, Kea, Cornwall; Geo. D. John, superintendent registrar. Wesleyan Chapel, Swaffham, Norfolk; Robert Sewell, superintendent registrar. Hanover Chapel, Tunbridge Wells, Kent; Edward Stidolph, superintendent registrar.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE written judgments already delivered in the present Term will be found in the Reports of to-day. Other departments of the paper contain various matters of great interest to the Profession, which must be the subject of future discussion. Amid the pressure of Reports comment must be deferred.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.—The following mentioned gentlemen were called to the degree of the utter bar on Friday, and published in the Dining-hall on Saturday:—Mr. Patrick James Nagle, B.A.; Mr. Charles Lavington Pannel, Mr. Henry Beeston, Mr. Henry Leigh, Mr. Alexander Shea, Mr. William Holmes Edwards.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

BARRISTERS AND ATTORNEYS AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

(From the Chester Chronicle, April 18.)

FLINTSHIRE QUARTER SESSIONS.

These sessions were held at Mold on Thursday, the 10th of April.

The following counsel took their seats in the court: Mr. Gaunt, Mr. H. Denton, Mr. Jones Parry, Mr. Foulkes, and Mr. Beavan; and as this was the first attendance of a Bar at the Quarter Sessions in this county, it gave rise to an interesting and important discussion.

Northop, Appellants, and Hawarden, Respondents.

Mr. Eyton, solicitor, rose and addressed the Court in this appeal, and was proceeding in the opening of this case, when—

Mr. Gaunt, senior counsel present, got up, and applied to the Court on behalf of the Bar for exclusive audience, which he said was usually granted in all similar circumstances. Indeed, he was not aware of a single instance of a request of that sort being refused. In support of his application he quoted the following passage from Serjt. Talfourd's book of the Practice of Quarter Sessions:—"At sessions, where a sufficient number of barristers attend, it is usual to give them sole audience, and the attorneys are in consequence not heard in person. In cases where the Bar has not been accustomed to attend, it is usual for them to intimate their desire to the chairman, and to request that they may have pre-audience, and if this request be granted, the attorneys cannot afterwards be heard in their presence, unless they should be all retained on one side." He also read to the Court a case decided by Sir Gregory Lewin, Recorder of Doncaster, and reported at length in the LAW TIMES of the 18th January last. In that case Sir Gregory Lewin, after having had under his notice what transpired previously at the Lichfield Sessions, decided "that he should not allow attorneys to practise in his court when four barristers were present."

Mr. Eyton said that he appeared there for himself, and as representing the attorneys of the counties of Denbigh and Flint, of whose Law Association he had the honour to be president, and protested against the claim of exclusive audience made by the barristers. He entertained the utmost respect for the Bar as a body, but that should not prevent him from doing his utmost to oppose this attempted aggression upon his branch of the Profession. The attorneys had pleaded in that court, and in Denbighshire, from the earliest times with credit to themselves, and he trusted with satisfaction to the magistrates and the public, and it was rather too bad for the Bar to desire to oust the attorneys of their ancient privileges. He did not claim an exclusive right for the attorneys. Let there be fair and honourable competition between them and the Bar, and the public would award their support and patronage to that branch of the Profession which they found by experience did their business best. If the Bench so ordered, he did not fear the result. He cited, in opposition to the decision of Sir Gregory Lewin, the decision of the chairman of the Lichfield Sessions, given under the express sanction of Lord Denman, that barristers should have pre-audience, but not exclusive audience. As to Serjt. Talfourd, his fame was greater as a poet than as a lawyer. He (Mr. Eyton) had also been given to understand that the Denbighshire magistrates, in answer to a similar application by the Bar last year, had given them no encouragement.

Mr. Horne confirmed the latter part of Mr. Eyton's statement.

Mr. H. Denton, barrister, begged leave of his lordship to offer a few words in answer to the gentleman who spoke last, and who claimed the right on the part of the attorneys to have audience in this court, whatever barristers, and whatever number of barristers might be present; and who denied that his lordship and the Bench had the power to exclude the attorneys from being heard. Mr. Eyton had rested their right on a case which had occurred not long ago in the Recorder's Court at Lichfield. He (Mr. Denton) asked his lordship to treat that case in the same way in which it had been treated by Sir Gregory Lewin, a lawyer of high character, station, and great learning. Mr. Eyton had said, that his friend Mr. Horne had told him, that an application similar to the one now made had been made by the Bar to the magistrates of Denbighshire, and that they had rejected it. That statement of Mr. Horne was not correct. They (the Bar) had made no application at all to the magistrates of Denbighshire. They had merely intimated to the clerk of the peace of that county, their intention of attending at the next sessions there, in the same form in which they had made known their intention to the clerk of the peace of the county of Flint, and at the same time, which was only a few days ago. He hoped, therefore, that his lordship would not listen to any statement of that sort which Mr. Horne might make, who was interested in that matter. He (Mr. Denton) was told, that in the county of Carnarvon, the present chairman of the Quarter Sessions, Lord Newborough, owing to the great dissatisfaction he felt, in common with others of the magistrates of that county, at the very irregular and disorderly manner in which business had been theretofore conducted in their Court of Quarter Sessions, was so desirous of the attendance of a Bar in that county, that an overture had been made to his friend, Mr. Jones Parry, who sat by him, for the purpose of inducing a Bar to attend there.

Mr. Horne, solicitor, then rose and said that Mr. Denton's remark respecting him was made in consequence of a quarrel between him, Mr. Horne, and Mr. Denton's father, many years ago. Mr. Horne was continuing his observations when he was interrupted by

The Chairman, who asked him, Whom are you addressing?

Mr. Horne answered that he was addressing Mr. Denton.

The Chairman then desired Mr. Horne to address himself to the Bench.

Mr. Horne said that the business being conducted by attorneys was a saving to the county; and in the event of the Bench deciding to exclude the attorneys, that they would bring no cases into court, but would refer them all; and that they would do every thing they could to annoy the counsel. They did not know the Welsh language; and they (the attorneys) would tender a mandamus. Such a decision would be most unjust to them, who had been labouring in this business for years, and would be a taking of the bread out of their mouths.

Peter Parry, esq. suggested whether a question of so much importance to the Profession and the public, should be hastily decided by the Bench without due notice to the body of the county magistracy. For his part he could see no wisdom in a wig (a titter among the attorneys), and it was a grave question whether the expert and able advocacy of clever attorneys, whom they all knew and had confidence in, was not preferable to falling back upon briefless barristers. (This caustic sally produced a sufficiently perceptible twinge on the countenances of the Bar, when Mr. Parry made the amende.) "Of course I wish it to be understood that I except those gentlemen of the Bar now in court." (Laughter.) The question of increased expense should have no weight, as the Court had power to regulate the fees.

Mr. H. Denton hoped that his lordship would excuse him for troubling the Court with two or three words, more in regard to what had fallen from the Bench as to the increased expense to the county, which would be caused by the attendance of a Bar. They (the Bar) would be content if the weight of that objection to them should be determined by the magistrates, on a comparison being made between the expenses of business at sessions in this county, where no Bar had attended, and the expenses of the same sort of business in Cheshire, where a Bar regularly attended. For in the county of Denbigh, where the business is conducted solely by attorneys, Mr. Peers, the clerk of the peace of that county, stated in the witness-box, at the last assizes, that the expenses of prosecutions at sessions there ranged from 10*l.* to 30*l.* That, therefore, might be taken to give an average of 20*l.* They (the Bar) would rather that the Bench would now decide the question before the Court; but it was not their wish to press for a decision, as it had been already mentioned by one of the magistrates on the bench, that he thought as there were so few magistrates present that they should defer their judgment. But that the matter was in the discretion of his lordship and the Bench, and that they had the power to give the Bar exclusive audience, and to shut the mouths of the attorneys in that court, there could not be the least doubt.

While the magistrates were deliberating,

Mr. Eyton stated, that the attorneys in the appeal case had come to terms, and should refer it. He therefore moved that the further hearing of this appeal be respited by consent till next sessions.

The Chairman said, that he very much wished it was in his power to decide the point before the Court. It was his wish to act justly to all parties. The question, however, was novel in that court, and, as but short notice had been given of the intention of barristers to attend, and as there was so small an assembly of magistrates present, he felt himself in a situation of some difficulty. Individually, however, he entertained a strong opinion, which he would not hesitate to express, and which was founded on established usage, common sense, and the precedence of the Profession. It was the part and duty of barristers, in matters proceeding in open court, to act as advocates, and to expose the merits of every case. He thought what passed at Lichfield was no decision at all upon the point; for himself, he would follow the decision of Sir Gregory Lewin, recorder of Doncaster, a barrister of great eminence, with whom he was personally acquainted, and which had been recently given in a case which had been argued at considerable length and appeared to have been well considered. He (Lord Dungannon) was decidedly of opinion that barristers ought to have the preference, and that attorneys ought not to be heard when a sufficient number of barristers were in attendance. However, his brother magistrates who were then present thought it right to defer their final opinion until the other magistrates should have had an opportunity of considering the subject. He thought the whole thing was in the discretion of the Bench, as laid down in Mr. Serjt. Talfourd's book of Quarter Sessions Practice; and it was therefore certainly desirable that time should be afforded for all the magistrates of the county to express their views, and especially his honourable friend Mr. Kenyon, who was unavoidably absent, owing to a domestic calamity, which he (Lord Dungannon) much lamented. Mr. Kenyon would probably be present at the next sessions, but if that should not be convenient for him, at any rate the Bench could be in possession of his views at that time. They (the magistrates present) thought it would be more satisfactory to all parties that there should be a larger assembly of magistrates before they came to a decision in the matter; and it would be better to adjourn it, particularly as the Hon. Lloyd Kenyon (chairman) was absent.

The Judges, &c. at St. Paul's Cathedral.—Yesterday, the first Sunday in Easter Term, the judges, and several corporation functionaries, attended divine service at St. Paul's Cathedral, and the scene was certainly one of the most impressive witnessed for some years. Divine service was announced to commence at three o'clock, but long before that time every available seat in that portion of the cathedral set apart for divine service was crowded to excess, and the avenues leading to St. Paul's Churchyard were besieged with carriages and other vehicles. The Lord Mayor arrived in the state carriage, and was accompanied by the sheriffs and City officers. The judges arrived in their private carriages. Barriers were placed in the interior halls, and a body of the city police were in attendance, under the command of Superintendent Shaw, for the preservation of order. It may be added that the latter regulation gave considerable dissatisfaction to many present, who very properly considered that the entrance to a place of worship should not be barricaded with iron spikes and garrisoned with policemen on such an occasion, and during the hours of divine service. Persons were admitted into the edifice solely at the option of these preservers of the peace, the language and general conduct of whom were more suitable for an execution than the purpose to which they were devoted. Shortly after three o'clock there entered the Cathedral, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs Hunter and Sidney; the Recorder, the Common Serjeant, Commissioner Bullock; Aldermen Farncomb, Hughes Hughes, Johnson; the Chamberlain of London, Anthony Brown, Esq.; with their attendants. The aldermen wore their scarlet gowns and gold chains. The Common Councillors next followed. The judges who entered (wearing their state dresses) were, Chief Justice Tindal, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr. Justice Erle, Mr. Justice Cresswell, Mr. Justice Coltman, Mr. Baron Platt, &c. Serjeants Dowling, Chadwick, Jones, and some others, wearing scarlet cloaks and coifs, next entered, followed by some members of the outer bar. The colours of the dresses of the judges, aldermen, and other functionaries present, with those of the ladies who crowded the building, rendered the scene a very imposing one indeed. Full cathedral service was performed, and the organ played most effectively. The Lord Bishop of London, with that eloquence so peculiar to him, preached, and selected his text from the 1st of Philippians, 21st verse. At the conclusion of the service, the judges and aldermen retired in the same order as upon entry, and the interesting scene closed.

The Hon. Sir James Parke, one of the judges at our late assizes, has made an order upon the Lords of the Treasury for the payment of twenty-five guineas, as a reward to Mr. Stephen English, for his services in detecting the perpetrators of the fires in this county.—Ipswich Journal.

The Rank of Serjeant-at-Law.—(From a Correspondent of the Morning Herald.)—The tables of precedence given in modern books, and in the Court list of her Majesty's levees, convey a very inaccurate idea of the rank due to this ancient dignity. By some of these authorities the serjeant is placed after a knight-bachelor, by others after a reverend messieur, whilst others place him even after the younger son of a knight! Many of these mistakes probably arise from the anomalous position of the serjeants in the superior courts at Westminster, in which places her Majesty's counsel and some few barristers who have obtained patents of precedence enjoy a right of audience before them. But "the pre-audience acquired in comparatively modern times by the Attorney and Solicitor-General, and the other Queen's counsel, over the serjeants in the courts of Westminster Hall, has not otherwise affected the rank or position of the latter. At the coronation of Queen Elizabeth, it appears to have been finally settled, that in the Royal procession (in which those of inferior rank walk first), the Attorney and Solicitor-General walk immediately before the barons of the Exchequer, and immediately after the serjeants-at-law, who follow the knights bannerets, bachelor knights, masters of the Chancery, clerks of the court," &c. (Egerton Papers, 60. Penny Cyclopædia, art. "Serjeant-at-Law.") From this it is evident that the lay rank of a serjeant is somewhere between that of a baronet and knight banneret. His heraldic vizor is open, and the same as that proper to baronets and orders of knighthood. As regards the rank enjoyed by the serjeants amongst themselves in Westminster Hall, they have audience, in general, according to the date of their respective calls to the degree, but many of them have patents of precedence which confer either a right of audience before the others of their brethren, or next after all Queen's counsel created subsequently to the date of such patents. Elsewhere seniority alone governs their relative precedence.

The Improvements in Lincoln's Inn.—The works in connection with the improvements in Lincoln's Inn New-square, which were so suddenly suspended, have been resumed, and are rapidly progressing. Several hundred loads of mould have been laid on the inclosure in the middle of the square, to the depth of about two feet six inches, so as to form it into garden-ground. It is intended to be covered with a grass-plot, ornamented with shrubs and evergreens; and paths are in formation from each of the four sides of the square to the centre, meeting where the fountain is to be placed. The kerbs for the new road are laid down; it is to be macadamized, and will run from Lincoln's-inn-fields to the Vice-Chancellor of England's Court.

An Album of Crime.—In the possession of a man named Harrison, convicted of a highway robbery near Leeds, and sentenced to transportation, a diary has been found, consisting of a record of all his robberies! The book is small and neat, is gilt-edged, and forms, in fact, a sort of robber's album. It would appear, from one of the entries, that a man named White, convicted of highway robbery at the same assizes, was in reality (as he himself solemnly protested) innocent of the crime, and that Harrison was the robber.—Lancashire paper.

Probate of the will of Edward Tewart, esq. of Coupland Castle, in the county of Northumberland, has just been granted to the sons and executors, Edward Tewart, esq., John Preston Tewart, esq., and Robert Tewart, esq. to whom is left the whole of the property, freehold and leasehold, equally amongst them. The will is dated May 18, 1843. Personal estate sworn under 120,000*l.*

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

On Saturday evening last, at the rising of the Court, a deputation from the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, consisting of Sir George Stephen, the president, James Burchell, esq. the vice-president, Godfrey Goddard, W. H. Turner, and James Kinder, esquires, and the secretary, were honoured by Lord Denman with an interview, on the subject of the better education of attorneys.

The deputation stated the views of the council of the association to be, that while every other profession exacts from its members a preliminary examination on some or other of the subjects of a school education, it is indispensable to the character and station of the legal profession that a similar examination should be imposed upon those seeking to become attorneys. They submitted to his lordship a programme of examination on the following topics:—Latin, to the proficiency of accurately translating Virgil, Cicero, and Ovid; and Greek, as far as the Greek Testament, although we understand on this subject some difference of opinion among the council exists; a competent knowledge of French, logic, and history; English composition; mathematics, to the extent of the first four or six books of Euclid, and algebraical signs. This examination is intended, of course, in addition to one on the practice and principles of law. The deputation was very kindly received by his lordship, who made notes of the several suggestions of the deputation, and promised to confer with the other judges on the subject.

It was also proposed to reserve to the judges a power of dispensing with any topic of examination they might deem expedient, except, of course, that on the principles and practice of the law, to meet the case of clerks, who by a long course of industry and integrity in the offices of attorneys have earned a title to admission.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

REMOVAL OF THE COURTS FROM WESTMINSTER.

The following is the form of a petition, which it is recommended should be signed by country solicitors, to promote the important object of removing the courts to the neighbourhood of Lincoln's Inn.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the undersigned attorneys and solicitors practising in , Sheweth,

That as the business of the suitors of the superior courts of law and equity is necessarily in great measure conducted by the attorneys and solicitors resident in London, it is essential to the interests of the clients of your petitioners, and of the provincial solicitors generally, that the practitioners in London should be afforded every possible facility for transacting the suitors' business with economy and despatch.

That the offices of the great majority of the London solicitors, the chambers of the Bar, of the Masters in Chancery, and of the judges, as well as all the law and equity offices, being situate in or near the inns of court, that neighbourhood has become the centre of law business; and as the courts of Westminster Hall are distant thence a mile and a half, a journey of three miles is rendered necessary on every occasion of attendance on the courts of Westminster, and thereby, and through other inconveniences resulting from the remoteness of Westminster Hall from the district of law business, a great waste of professional time is occasioned, and the efficiency of professional services is materially lessened.

That these evils would be remedied, and great public advantage be gained, by transferring the courts of all the law and equity judges to the neighbourhood of the inns of court, and uniting them in a suitable structure under one roof.

That the present insufficiency of the courts of Westminster Hall, the large outlay which will be requisite to alter their exterior in conformity with the design of the new Houses of Parliament, and the present want of subsidiary courts, both of law and equity, appear to your petitioners to make the present a very fit time for carrying the proposed object into effect.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray your honourable House to take the subject into your consideration, and adopt such measures for the correction of the existing evils as to your honourable House may seem meet.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

A petition from the London solicitors lies for signature at the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—There is something going on with reference to the position of the Bar and the press respectively, which is worth your inquiring into.

The object of this note is not to lay before you a statement of facts, but merely to put you on inquiry. With the means at your disposal, I do not doubt you will soon ascertain what the real facts are.

It is said that, in consequence of something that transpired at the bar table of the Oxford Circuit, the leader (Serjt. Talfourd) and others having expressed some opinion on the conduct of a barrister who reports for the Times, the Leviathan sent down orders not to report any cases in which the leader and certain others by name might be engaged! In pursuance of these orders, throughout the circuit the names of several counsel have been suppressed. It is also said, that the same course has been directed to be followed in London, and from what I have seen—watching the papers, and seeing the business done—it certainly appears to me to be the case. But inquire and judge for yourself. If it be true, expose the malicious tyranny.

Yours obediently,

A SUBSCRIBER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—"Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" So far as I recollect, I have not ever heard, or seen, an answer to this question; but as doctors clearly disagree in this case, I venture to assert that either your extract, by way of text, from the will disputed in this case is erroneous, or the amazing simplicity of the point in issue has rendered the learning of the doctors referred to useless; and that, in fact, the testator meant what his words express, that the annuities should only remain a charge so long as Sarah Calcot lived.

Twist the words as you please, this, I most humbly submit, is their true import.

The gift to Sarah, her executors, administrators, and assigns, of a leasehold estate, is an absolute gift, if words have any meaning; the words following burthen that gift, so long as she shall live, but no longer. Besides, this reading avoids a repugnancy, and proves that there are not any incongruous words.

I am yours, &c.

THE LAW OF CREDITS.

An insolvent, on applying at the Court of Bankruptcy for his interim order, was opposed by a creditor, on the ground that when the debt was contracted he was in a state of insolvency. The insolvent on being examined, said, "his (the creditor's) traveller called upon me, and wished me to take some goods, and I ordered him to send me boots and shoes to the amount of 9*l.* or 10*l.* but I afterwards received a letter from Mr. B. (the creditor), who said that in consequence of the lean state of the law and the difficulty since the passing of Lord Brougham's Act, of recovering debts under 20*l.* he would rather trust me above that amount; and that is how the debt exceeds 20*l.*" The Commissioner (Goulburn) said "That is a very good commentary on the law." The report adds, that there was "laughter" at all this—doubtless! Every bankruptcy court now laughs and mocks at the complaints of the creditor, and there are abundance of commentaries occurring "good" enough to shew the "bad state of the law." The above, however, is pre-eminently "good." This belief induces me to put the case before you, to enable you to make any use you please of it.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Publisher begs to inform the Subscribers to the LAW TIMES that the subscription for the current half-year should be transmitted in the course of the ensuing week, by those who wish to avail themselves of the advantages of pre-payment.

Members of the Verulam Society are requested at the same time to forward their subscriptions for the current year.

The pre-paid subscription for the current half-year of THE CRITIC, henceforth to be published weekly, will be 8s. 6d. only.

The Indices to the fourth volume being now completed, the numbers for binding may be sent, through the post, in parcels open at the ends, with a mark by which they may be known, and of which the Publisher should be advised by letter, as also how, when bound, it is to be returned. If sent by parcel, advantage may be taken of the opportunity to inclose other books for the binder.

EDUCATION OF ATTORNEYS.

UNWEARIED in its efforts to fulfil the purposes for which it was called into existence, the METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION has, among a multitude of matters interesting to the Profession, directed its attention to the important subject of Legal Education. Desirous of exalting the character of the Profession, and purifying it from the too frequent blots that now shadow its fair fame, the Council have taken into their consideration the best means for the accomplishment of this object. The conclusion at which they arrived was precisely that which we have endeavoured so often and urgently to impress upon the readers of the LAW TIMES. It was this: that education was the only practicable security for character that could be suggested, a security certainly not perfect, but yet, under all circumstances, the best that offers.

With the business-like energy that has distinguished all the proceedings of this youthful society, the resolution was no sooner formed than it was determined to communicate it to the authorities, and ask their aid to carry it into practical operation. An interview was requested with the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench. It was readily accorded. A deputation from the Society accordingly waited upon his lordship, who received them with his wonted urbanity, listened to their propositions and the reasons by which they were supported, took notes of all, and promised to communicate with the other Judges upon the important subject thus brought under his notice.

The particulars of this interview will be found in their proper place in the Proceedings of the Law Societies, and thither we must refer the reader for further details, especially as to the course of education for Attorneys suggested by the deputation. Our present purpose is to state the reasons why we cordially approve those propositions.

The Profession of an Attorney has this peculiarity, in which it differs from all others, that personal character is the primary requisite in its practitioners—that in which the public is most directly interested, and for which it is the most important that some security should be given. In all other professions, personal character is secondary only; at least it is not the object primarily sought by the employer. He who seeks the aid of a barrister looks for his forensic ability, not his morals: so that he conduct the cause well, the purpose of his retainer is answered. So with a physician or surgeon, we pay for his knowledge of medicine, not for his virtue; and, provided he perform skilfully the single duty for which he was employed, it is no concern of ours in what manner he observes the Decalogue. But with an attorney, and with an attorney only, we for the most part employ his character even more than his law: we fee his integrity; retain his virtue. Hence the rule, applicable enough to other professions, that the public are concerned only in seeing that those who practise understand their business, is insufficient in the case of the attorney. Inasmuch as in him the character is retained at least as often as the law, the public is in self-protection bound to see that all practicable means are adopted to insure the possession by the practitioner of character as well as legal knowledge. Surely, if it be deemed necessary to institute a public test of a man's fitness to cure the diseases of the body, before he is permitted to hold himself out to the world as a professor of medicine, much more should some assurance be afforded of the moral fitness of a man to whom his fellow-men must confide their dearest interests, their fortunes, their families, their reputations, the inmost secrets of their souls, who is called upon to be their adviser and their agent in almost all the important concerns of life, and who, being thus unavoidably exposed to huge temptations, and having unequalled opportunities for abusing the trusts reposed in him, requires more than a common amount of those safeguards and securities which the law has prudently thrown round other professions, for the protection of a public not always competent to form a judgment of the fitness of professors for the duties they offer themselves to perform.

We have thus, we hope, satisfactorily shewn why some test of character ought to be especially applied to those who seek admission into the responsible profession of an attorney. In a subsequent article we shall proceed to shew why, with the Legal Association, we deem a certain standard of education to be the surest, indeed, the only practicable test that can be devised.

ATTORNEYS AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

Among the Legal Intelligence of the week will be found a very interesting report of scene at the Denbighshire Quarter Sessions, on the occasion of the appearance there of a Bar for the first time. Exclusive audience was demanded, but the question was adjourned for consideration. The Chairman will probably consult the judges, and the decision will be given at the next sessions.

We have heard that the subject was subsequently mooted at a meeting of the attorneys of the county, and that a majority of those present were decidedly in favour of the attendance of a Bar. The arguments upon this topic which we ventured to urge, when it was first agitating the Profession a few months since, seem to have weighed much with the parties at the meeting; but as we have received no official report of the proceedings, and write only from hearsay, it will, perhaps, be better to make no further allusion to it just now.

As to the main question at issue, discussion and reflection have rather served to strengthen the views we have already submitted to our readers. We are satisfied that the presence of a Bar is really beneficial to the attorneys. It gives at least an air of formality to the courts; the mere presence of strangers is an advantage in the dispensation of justice. It serves as a check upon irregularities, so apt to arise where local feelings and interests alone prevail. The interposition of an advocate between the attorney and the judge or jury tends to relieve litigation of much of that personality from which the attorneys who have got up the case can scarce wholly emancipate themselves. Since last we touched upon the topic in these columns, we have conversed about it with many of the most respectable attorneys from various parts of the kingdom. They were almost unanimously in favour of a Bar at Quarter Sessions. They argued that, but a few of the whole body of attorneys in any county would be competent to the duties of advocates. Every attorney could not conduct his own case; he must employ some other, and it was not always convenient or agreeable to put himself under an obligation, and disclose his client's affairs, to another attorney practising in the neighbourhood, and perhaps a rival. They assured us that the great body of the Profession would, on this account, as well as for other reasons we have not now space to enumerate, much prefer a Bar at Sessions.

And, indeed, there is something in the fact that all countries in all ages have separated the functions of Attorney and Advocate, and a practice so universal could only be the result of actual experience of its advantage

It is therefore because we believe it to be in the end advantageous to the Attorneys, that we do not object to the presence of a Bar at Quarter Sessions. If any question our argument, we should be glad to hear and discuss the objections.

VERULAM SOCIETY'S FORMS FOR OFFICES.

The Conditions of Sale are now ready. They consist of the following:—

No. General Conditions for a sale in one lot, with agreement.
No. 2. Ditto in several lots, with ditto.
No. 3. Special Conditions as to Commencement and Evidence of Title.
No. 4. Ditto, as to Identity of Parcels.
No. 5. Ditto, as to commencement of Evidence of Title.
No. 6. Ditto, as to Assignment of Terms.
No. 7. Ditto, as to Titles, Moduses, &c.
No. 8. Ditto, as to a Sale by Trustees, or others, in a fiduciary capacity.
No. 9. Ditto, as to Custody of Title-deeds.
No. 10. Ditto, as to Leaseholds.

The Special Conditions are printed on single pages, so that such as may be required for the specific sale may be annexed to the general conditions.

Should any amendments suggest themselves to any of our readers, we shall be obliged by their communications.

The following Forms have been added to the list, and may now be had.

No. 16. Notice. Execution, Writ of Inquiry.
No. 17. Notice to produce Documents.
No. 18. Notice to Inspect and Admit. Quarto, for the country.
No. 19 Notice of Declaration.

The common covenants in a conveyance are now being lithographed, for the purpose of enabling the conveyancer to prepare his drafts with rapidity.

A series of Registration Forms is in the press. These may be had through the Booksellers, or direct by parcel, at prices much less than they could be printed for in the country.

The publisher requests us to inform the members of the Society, and indeed the Profession generally, that if an order for Forms exceed 1*l.* he will undertake to pay the carriage of the parcel. By this arrangement, the great obstacle to their universal use, the cost of carriage into the country, will be removed. The number of the Forms now completed will enable the attorney to make up an order to this amount at once, and thus receive, with speed and without expense, the necessary supplies for his office. He can also take advantage of the same parcels to have his volumes of Law Times or other books bound, and any publications he may require procured for him.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

We strongly suspect that the following handbill, posted about Bradford, emanates from an attorney, who thus seeks to escape exposure in the Law Times under shelter of the anonymous. Could not some of our friends in the neighbourhood trace the identity of A. B.?

Persons whose affairs may be in an embarrassed state, may obtain advice how to act, gratis, on application to A. B., at the Prince of Wales Inn, Bradford. N.B.—Attendance from 11 to 4 o'clock, on Thursdays only.

Here is one of more unblushing front. It appears in the Bristol Mercury of April 12th.

Mr. William Gover Gray, Solicitor. Offices removed from No. 6, Exchange-buildings, to No. 2, Nicholas-street, Bristol. Solicitor of the Bankruptcy Court, and practising in the Bristol District Court of Bankruptcy for the protection of persons from imprisonment for debt. Residence No. 1, Manver's-place, Pierrepont-street, Bath. Bath offices, Commercial-rooms, Upper Borough Walls.

VERULAM REPORTS.

The 9th and 10th numbers of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases are now published. The Sixth number of Practice Cases will be ready on Tuesday.

The 5th number of Criminal Law Cases and the 11th number of Real Property Cases are in the press.

It has been determined to make the Practice Cases complete by the addition of those in the Equity Courts. This will be the first and only series of Equity Practice Cases ever published, and will, we hope, make the series the most perfect of its kind yet submitted to the Profession, and invaluable to the practitioner, whether Counsel or Attorney.

SIR GEORGE STEPHEN.

An advertisement appears in our journal to-day on which we conceive ourselves bound to make some remarks. The case has attracted much notice in the Profession, and certainly appears to be one of intolerable harshness, to use no stronger term. The facts, as we collect from inquiry, are simply these. Sir George Stephen, the President of the Legal Association, is well known to be the solicitor of a society which he himself projected twenty-two years ago, known as the Reversionary Interest Society. He was appointed "Solicitor to the Society" by the deed of settlement, and of course under the hand and seal of each shareholder; this constituted his retainer, and, as we apprehend, constituted the shareholders his clients; such, too, is the opinion of the Chief Baron, expressed in a letter to Sir George in the following terms:—

The solicitor to the society is, I think, bound to consider the interests of all the members as a body. He is not the servant or slave of the directors merely, but the adviser of the whole association; and in your case, being (as you were) the founder of the scheme, you had your own honour and character to protect, as well as a duty to discharge towards the governing body.

In soliciting a Bill to extend the capital of the society last year, the directors made some important alterations, suo motu, contrary to the advice of counsel, and, in the opinion of Sir George, most detrimental to the interests of the shareholders; he therefore thought himself bound in honour to mention these alterations to three of the shareholders, two of whom are gentlemen of acknowledged eminence in the Profession—in fact, one of them holds a high judicial station; all the three had previously and spontaneously applied to Sir George, as the solicitor of the society, for information on the subject of the Bill, no meeting of the shareholders having been called by the directors to consider it.

This summary contains all that is essential to understand the case. We concur with the Legal Association, that in this conduct Sir George was perfectly justified, and acted as every honest solicitor ought to act; yet for so doing the directors publicly charged him with a breach of professional confidence, refused to state their charge in writing, or to allow him a hearing, though required by the shareholders to do so, and finally removed him from his office, both unaccused and unheard, and this within two months of his having received the public commendation of a committee of inquiry into the affairs of the company, for the skill and attention with which he had conducted its legal business for nearly a quarter of a century.

But more remains to be told. These very directors, only seven days before they removed him, made a proposal to him that if he would resign the retainer of the shareholders they (the directors) would be "reconciled to him;" that is, would continue him in office upon their own retainer! and one of the men who made this proposal, which any honourable attorney could only regard as an insult, was the very man who had applied to Sir George privately for information about the Bill, and who had, unknown to Sir George, privately conveyed to the directors the information thus obtained. This man is a barrister; but, as he is happily unknown in this country, we shall withhold his name. The directors rewarded him for his communication by securing his election among their body before the facts were published. It is fair to state that three of the directors are believed to be opposed to these arbitrary proceedings, and indeed one of them has resigned his seat in avowed disgust. We need hardly add that Sir George Stephen instantly and firmly rejected this proposal: for so doing he has been mulcted in a penalty of forfeiture, to the extent of half his professional income. We scarcely know whether most to admire his integrity or to condemn the tyranny of his oppressors. Of course, the shareholders will not allow the matter to rest here. We have taken it up, that we may put upon record our indignant protest against proceedings that menace such injury to the profession. It has always hitherto been considered the highest point of professional honour that an attorney should be faithful to his client. And who is his client? Can there be a doubt about it, that it is the man who retains and pays him? In these days, when there is hardly an attorney of eminence who has not one or more companies among his clients, it is indeed a most dangerous doctrine to hold, that the directors, who are as much the officers and servants of the company as the solicitor, or even the secretary, should require an attorney to act with them against what he conceives to be the interest of the shareholders, or should dare to remove him for preferring his duty to his real client to the commands of his client's agents.

Sir George has construed his course of duty rightly, and he has pursued it manfully. We are persuaded that there are many, very many attorneys who would have acted with equal honour and independence; but it is not the less our duty to protect them from similar injury and insult, so far as our reprobation of the whole proceedings may draw upon it the indignation of the public.

We shall take an early opportunity to enter upon the question of professional duty involved in this affair.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

THE SOLICITOR AND THE AUCTIONEER.

It has given us great pleasure to find so cordial a response from both of these parties to the appeal which we last week ventured to make to them. The Solicitors who have addressed us on the subject have expressed the kindliest feelings towards the Auctioneers, and from many of the latter we have received earnest assurances of their anxiety to co-operate for the purpose of raising their profession to the position which properly belongs to those to whom will henceforth be confided the responsible duty of conducting the sales of the greater portion of the property of this rich country.

The letter of an esteemed correspondent, which appears below, exhibits a faint outline of the various, important, and complicated duties that devolve upon the Auctioneer. A glance at these will satisfy the reader that we have not erred in exhorting the Solicitors to lend their all-powerful aid in advancing that which we believe to be of serious moment to themselves and their clients, namely, the respectability of the body of Auctioneers, by encouraging such of them only as have either proved themselves to be possessed of the necessary qualifications, or, if untried, who can exhibit those best guarantees for character,—education and connection. Above all, do we recommend the Solicitors to be cautious how they offer encouragement to new aspirants for their favours, however tempted by promises of "working cheap." A fair price for his services is all that the established Auctioneer would require; less than that no right-minded Solicitor would desire to give; and he may be assured that he will best consult the interests of his clients by rejecting the offers of inexperienced competitors and securing the aid of an able, influential, and respectable Auctioneer on all occasions, thus applying to the Profession he employs the same rules he would desire to be applied to his own.

SALES BY AUCTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I so highly approve of the plan you have announced in respect to communicating information on the Law regarding Sales by Auction, that I cordially volunteer such slight aid as I may be enabled to afford as auxiliary to your purpose.

Although, no doubt, the profession of an auctioneer must have arisen amidst the immense extensions of commerce and trade which have characterized the last century or so, and we have few traces of the existence of such a functionary in any other than comparatively modern authorities, there is something in the nature of an auction so appropriate to the circumstances of earlier times, that we can hardly fail to conclude the practice to be an ancient one of endeavouring to secure the highest price for an article by offering it, in something like a public manner, for sale. It may be, indeed, from its very simplicity, that its appropriation to a peculiar profession is a recent arrangement; for what can be imagined more natural than that, in the very earliest and most simple age, an individual wishing to get the best offer for what he had to dispose of, should gather his neighbours around him, and so obtain the benefit of competition?

The auction duties, eagerly attached to what was soon seen to be a very fertile source of business (and therefore appeared likely to be as productive in revenue), repressed and discouraged this mode of sale in just the cases where it is desirable it should be resorted to, viz. where the sale is the result of necessity, and where, therefore, that fair competition, which is the soul and security of a good sale, is most essential. The wise measure of the present session will restore to the mass of the community a mode of sale we believe the most beneficial, and we think among the most ancient, of any.

At the very outset, in viewing the law on this subject, it is necessary to bear in mind that which must be the leading principle and object of the law, as applied to this mode of sale, its being bonâ fide what it professes to be—the exposure to free, fair, and public competition of the property to be sold. It is the object of all sales to get the best price. It is the object of auctions to sell for the best price. And the main point must ever be, to secure this; that the best price and the best bidding shall be synonymous. As "the value of a thing is just as much as it will bring" (the motto of auctioneers), this must necessarily be the case (supposing the sale fair and bonâ fide) with reference to the parties assembled at an auction. That is only one half, however, of the design. The great advantage of the auction is its affording the largest range of biddings; it is obvious that the larger the better. The auction rests, in short, on the first principle of commerce, that the more numerous the buyers, the better must be the price; that the greater the market, the greater must be the sale. This being the object of the auction, then, how can it be better attained than by engaging first-rate men, whose names are attractions, whose characters afford the best securities to the public? Next to character comes connection; he who has a good connection, a large circle of respectable clients (so to speak), must have the best means of securing a large field of bidding. Then come energy and penetration, skill and sagacity in the discovery, selection, and availing himself of all those innumerable means and modes open to him for securing bidders. Taking all these things into consideration, it seems to me apparent that, apart even from the great knowledge of trade and business which the most ordinary cases require (not to say, perhaps, a little of law), the auctioneer requires a combination of qualifications quite as important as those which are required in the profession of an attorney.

To aid such a body of men, and those who are most intimately associated with them in business, viz. the attorneys, in understanding the bearings of legal principles on these transactions, is no unimportant object, nor is it altogether an easy one. For the peculiar nature of the functions and relations of the auctioneer calls into combination and operation, often into apparent opposition, and frequently with a great extent of complication, almost all the principles of law which are at all of common application. In fact it is almost impossible to give a legal definition of the auctioneer; not only because his duties are so various, but because they are so shifting; so dependent on his particular positions towards and relations with different parties. In his primary and principal character he is the agent of the seller, but an agent of a peculiar kind, whose authority, duty, and liabilities, embrace what attaches in some degree to the offices of an ordinary agent for a specific purpose, and of a factor, intrusted with the possession of goods under what approaches nearest, perhaps, to a del credere commission. Even in this, his original character, infinite varieties of relations and of rights arise, in which the nicest questions might readily occur. The moment, however, he comes in contact with a proposed purchaser, his character becomes more that of a broker; and when he has received the deposit, the responsibilities attaching to the position of stakeholder arise and are blended often in an intricate manner with questions springing out of many other branches of law. It is in the double capacity assumed by him when he has received a final offer, a binding "bid," and in the nice doubts which arise as to the exact extent of his agency for the party bidding, in relation to the party selling, that difficulties most frequently occur; and it is sufficient to shew this, to state that he is not ex vi termini the agent for both parties; he may be, but this depends on the facts of each particular case. When it is recollected that, in the sales of personal property, the innumerable distinct purchases that are made must open the widest field of dispute or of dissatisfaction; and that in the sales of realty the importance of the interests at stake must provoke the keenest scrutiny, and render parties alive to every thing capable of objection—it is wonderful and creditable to the body of auctioneers that so few questions do in practice arise leading to litigation, amidst the myriads of "lots" annually knocked down, and the vast amount of property thus year by year transferred. In the course of every auction, from the issuing of the first advertisement or notice to the final completion of each purchase, numerous openings must present themselves, in which even carelessness or oversight would suffice to raise legal doubts.

Much, no doubt, of this is owing to the very nature of this mode of sale, the safest and surest, perhaps, that could be devised; on the one hand, the purchase of each lot being of a thing presented for inspection (in personalty), the maxim caveat emptor is almost always applicable; while, on the other hand, any representations on which the articles are offered being embodied beforehand in a written form, and a deposit required in each case, the operation of the Statute of Frauds, with its invaluable enactments (if, indeed, they are not confirmatory or affirmatory of the true principles of the common law), protects the transaction. Still there is ample "scope and verge" enough for the exercise of no ordinary amount of sagacity, skill, care in the appraising, cataloguing, classifying, advertising, and, finally, in the exposing to public competition of large amounts of property.

No two offices are more closely connected than those of the auctioneer and of the attorney. They are sometimes seen united. The union may have its advantages. But it is so certain that duties appertaining to each demand such a combination of valuable qualifications, that it may fairly be questioned how often it is likely those advantages would actually be realized. Though not exercised by the same individual, these duties are in practice scarcely separable—never so in cases of realty, where questions of title of course must constantly occur.

From this cursory review of the field of the auctioneer's operations an idea may be formed of its extent in relation to law, as to which it may with safety be affirmed that not one legal question could be suggested which might not, or which has not actually arisen in association with sales by auction.

So much by way of preface. I shall be happy to pursue the subject. W. F.

Considerable doubts having prevailed as to the period at which the auction duties are to cease, we are authorized to state, that the Lords of the Treasury have addressed a letter to the Commissioners of Excise, authorizing them to forbear to charge the duties on auctions after the 8th of April, on the usual condition of the parties consenting to abide the ultimate decision of Parliament.

Public Sales.

[In future the results of such sales only as are advertised in the Law Times will be published in this list, and reference will be given to the advertisements, it being found that, without the particulars, the results of sales are of no practical value. As sale by auction will in future be generally resorted to, auctioneers in town and country advertising in the Law Times are requested regularly to forward the results of the sales so advertised.]

MESSRS. ELLIS and SON are directed to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Thursday, the 15th of May, at 12, free of auction-duty, a capital FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, in a complete state of repair, most desirably situate, and being No. 28, Laurence Pountney-lane, near King William-street, and a short distance from the Royal Exchange, possessing every accommodation for a merchant, professional man, or wholesale trader of the first class, having excellent offices on the ground floor, with light sample-room, extensive cellarage, and also every requisite convenience for a large family. To be viewed with tickets only. Printed particulars may be had of Mr. John Philpot, solicitor, Southampton-street, Bloomsbury; of Messrs. ELLIS and SON, auctioneers and estate agents, 36, Fenchurch-street; and at Garraway's.

Valuable Freehold Estates, in the city of London, land-tax redeemed.

MESSRS. ELLIS and SON are directed to SELL by AUCTION, at Garraway's, on Thursday, May 15, at 12, in two lots, free of auction-duty, valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES, most desirably situate in Crutched-friars and Savage-gardens. Lot 1 comprises a capital residence, No. 24, Crutched-friars, with stack of brick-built warehouses in the rear, containing three upper floors, and spacious warehouse on the ground floor, two excellent arched vaults of considerable extent and good temperature, and a large paved yard, with entrance from Crutched-friars, inclosed by folding-gates. Lot 2. A stack of substantial brick-built freehold warehouses, in Savage-gardens, containing three floors, counting-house, and capacious arched vaults, with frontage to Savage-gardens of 30 feet by 70 feet in depth. May be viewed 14 days prior to the sale, and printed particulars had on the premises; of Mr. John S. Taylor, solicitor, Guy's Hospital; at Garraway's; and of Messrs. ELLIS and SON, auctioneers, &c. 36, Fenchurch-street.

MANGOTSFIELD, GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—Land, Country Residence, and Brewery. To be SOLD by AUCTION, with immediate possession, at the Full Moon Inn, Bristol, on Thursday, the 22nd day of May, 1845, at Five for Six in the evening, by Mr. JOHN TAYLOR, The under-mentioned commodious COUNTRY RESIDENCE, containing entrance-hall, parlour, and dining-room, six chambers, and two large attics, with suitable kitchens, and offices, gardens and orchards, lands and brewery, most desirably situate at Moorend, in the parish of Mangotsfield, in the county of Gloucester, five miles from the city of Bristol, in the following lots, or such others as shall be agreed upon at the time of sale, and subject to such conditions as shall be then and there produced and read.

Late the property of Mr. Samuel Rutter, deceased.

Lot 1. All that convenient and well-built DWELLING-HOUSE, with yard, stables, coach-house, and offices adjoining and belonging, with the flower-garden and large walled-in kitchen garden, well stocked with choice fruit trees now in full bearing, together with all that compact seven-quarter brewery, substantial and newly-erected malt-house, calculated for wetting twelve quarters, and excellent cellerage for 1,500 barrels, with suitable stabling, and every other requisite convenience, containing altogether by admeasurement 1a. 2r. 3p. and numbered 718 on the Tithe Commutation Map of the said parish.

Also all that piece or parcel of rich Meadow Land adjoining the dwelling-house, with a shrubbery, containing by admeasurement 3a. 1r. 11p. and numbered 717 on the said map; also all those two Orchards adjoining the last-mentioned piece or parcel of meadow land, well stocked with choice trees in full bearing, with two fish ponds, having a never-failing supply of pure soft water, containing together by admeasurement 1a. 3r. 17p. and numbered 733 and 734 respectively on the said map.

The premises comprised in the above lot are within a ring fence, and present an unusually eligible opportunity for advantageously investing a moderate capital either in a country residence or in a lucrative business. As a brewery, the property offers unusual attractions, there being no other brewery in the district. It was established about thirteen years since by the present occupier, who has carried on an extensive business, and is now desirous of retiring. He will be willing to dispose of the plant and utensils to a purchaser at a fair valuation.

The dwelling-house and lands would form a delightful residence for a private family, being detached from the brewery, which in no way interferes either with the land or prospect.

Lot 2. All that piece or parcel of ARABLE LAND called the Ridings, containing by admeasurement 7a. 1r. 2p. and numbered 701 on the said map, and also all that productive Quarry adjoining the above, the stone from which is well adapted either for building or paving; and also all that piece of Copse-wood well covered with timber, containing together by admeasurement 1a. 1r. 7p. and numbered 700 a on the said map.

The whole of the above premises are tithe free, and are now in the occupation of Alfred Tuckett, esq. by whose permission they may be viewed.

A map of the premises may be inspected, and full particulars obtained of Messrs. J. P. W. & J. Y. Sturge, surveyors, Bristol; Messrs. Riddle and Dew, of the same city; Richard Ball, esq. Taunton; or at the office of JOHN RUTTER, Solicitor, Shaftesbury.

Dated Shaftesbury, April 23, 1845.

N.B. Two-thirds of the purchase-money may remain on mortgage of the same premises.

Valuable Church Preferment in Cheshire.

To be sold by auction, by Mr. T. M. FISHER, at the Law Society's Rooms, in Norfolk-street, Manchester, on Thursday, the 1st day of May, 1845, at three o'clock in the afternoon (if not previously disposed of by private contract, of which due notice will be given in the Manchester Guardian newspaper), subject to such conditions of sale as then and there will be produced,

THE FIRST and NEXT PRESENTATION to the Rectory and Parish Church of Wilmslow, in Cheshire. The gross annual income of the living is estimated at 1,300l. 4s. 1d.; and the outgoings, consisting of collector's poundage, poor and highway rates, curate's stipend, tenths, synodals, and repairs of chancel and glebe buildings, are estimated at 339l. 10s. 4d. per annum. There is an excellent parsonage house, with extensive gardens and pleasure-grounds, situate within two miles of Alderley Edge, and near to the W— ow station on the Manchester and Birmingham Railway. The glebe contains upwards of 75 statute acres of fine farming land. The age of the present incumbent, on the day of sale, will be rather more than 44 years. For further particulars apply to Messrs. Lowe, Sweeting, and Byrne, 22, Southampton-buildings, London; or Messrs. BEEVER and DARWELL, Solicitors, Salford, Manchester; and to treat by private contract, apply to the said Messrs. Beever and Darwell.

AT a MEETING of the COUNCIL of the METROPOLITAN and PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION held at the Offices of the Association on Thursday, the 24th day of April, 1845,

The Committee appointed on the 27th March last to inquire into the circumstances under which the conduct of the President, Sir George Stephen, had been impugned, made their Report to this Council in the following words:—

"We, the undersigned, being your Committee, appointed by a minute of the Council, dated 25th March, 1845, to inquire into the circumstances under which the professional conduct of our President, Sir George Stephen, had been impugned by the Directors of the Reversionary Interest Society, directed the Secretary to apply by letter to the Directors of that Society for the particulars of any charge they might have to make against the character and conduct of Sir George Stephen as their solicitor, and accordingly the Secretary, on the 3rd day of April instant, addressed such a letter to the said Directors, and no reply having been received thereto beyond an acknowledgment of its receipt, on the 12th of the same month he made another application to the like effect to such Directors, to which no reply has been returned.

"Your Committee, therefore, feeling it due to the character of Sir George Stephen not longer to delay the investigation of the charges reported to have been made against him by the said Directors, have proceeded to inquire into the circumstances so referred to them as aforesaid, and having read a statement of the facts, supported by letters and other documentary evidence, including an extract from the deed of settlement, signed by all the shareholders of the said society, by which he was appointed their solicitor, and deeply feeling a strict inquiry into the allegations made against the professional character and conduct of Sir George Stephen to be of vital importance to this institution, have, with great anxiety, carefully and fully considered such statement, and other documents so laid before them as aforesaid, and having heard from Sir George Stephen a full explanation of his misunderstanding with the said Directors,

"Your Committee is unanimously of opinion that the conduct of Sir George Stephen in the matters so referred to them has been in every respect marked by a high sense of honour as a Professional man, and in strict accordance with his duty to the shareholders, whose solicitor he was. And your Committee is also of opinion that had Sir George pursued any other course, he would have betrayed the responsible and important trust reposed in him by the general body of shareholders.

(Signed) GODFREY GODDARD.
GEO. WELLER.
S. E. DONNE.
W. H. TURNER."

Upon which it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. Watson, seconded by Mr. Bristow,

"That the above report be adopted and confirmed."

Resolved, on the motion of Mr Bristow, seconded by Mr. Weller,

"That this Council deeply sympathize with Sir George Stephen as to the attack which has been made upon his character, and which they consider to have been vindictive and altogether unprovoked.

Re NEWARK CHARITIES.

Appointment of new trustees under the Municipal Corporations Act—Reference.

James Parker and Blunt supported a petition for a reference to the Master to approve of proper persons as new trustees under the Municipal Corporations Act. The trustees originally appointed had consisted of two classes; first, those for charities in connection with the Church of England, for which nine trustees were appointed; and, secondly, for general charities, for which twenty-one persons were appointed trustees. Of the nine Church charity trustees, two had died, three had removed, and one at present takes no part in the management of the charities. The petition asked that five new trustees might be appointed. Of the twenty-one general charity trustees, four were dead, three had removed, one was abroad and supposed to be dead, two are ill and unable to act, and one declined to act.

Romilly, Shee, and Whitmarsh, jun. for different parties, consented.

Reference to the Master ordered.

Re RICHARDSON, a Lunatic.

No party can be heard to oppose the confirmation of the Commissioner's report of the appointment of committee, without presenting a cross-petition. Reference to affidavits in report.

Bayley supported a petition to confirm the Commissioner's report approving of the appointment of Thomas Lloyd as committee of the estate, and Lloyd and his wife committees of the person of the lunatic. The late committee had died in December last. The estate of the lunatic consisted of the sum of 20,000*l.* stock. Lloyd and his wife were the petitioners.

Cooke, for Miss Afron, the aunt of the lunatic, proposed herself as committee of the person. She had presented no counter-petition, nor taken any exception to the report, because all the circumstances appear upon the report, or in affidavits to which the report refers. By that reference the affidavits are in effect embodied in the report, and any party is entitled to read those affidavits as if they had been set out in the report. (Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 226; Brodie v. Bury, 1 Jacob & Walk. 470; 2 Smith's Chancery Practice, last edition.)

Bayley objected that the affidavits could not be read; under the 48th order of August 1841, it is provided that affidavits, &c. used before the Master shall not be stated or recited, but shall be identified, specified, and referred to, so as to inform the Court what affidavits, &c. were used. And in Hodge v. Rexworthy (Law Jour. for 1843, p. 271) it was expressly decided by his lordship, that such affidavits as are referred to in the report cannot be read. If the practice contended for was established, exceptions would in no case be necessary.

Cooke, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It appears to me that it would be productive of great inconvenience to hear objections to the confirmation of a report without a counter-petition. A conclusion has been drawn by the Commissioner from a great mass of affidavits which has induced him to make the report now sought to be confirmed. It is necessary that the party objecting to the confirmation of the report should raise the question by a petition. The secretary of lunatics says he never knew a case in lunacy in which a party was allowed to object to the confirmation of a report without a cross-petition. I shall adhere to the last decision. The costs must come out of the estate.

Cooke would not ask leave to present a petition, because the facts offered by both sides were very close.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I should not reverse the Commissioner's decision unless the case was very clear.

Re CHISHOLD, a Lunatic.

Carriage of commission.

Commission of lunacy against a married woman.

Forster supported a petition by the next of kin of the lunatic, who is a married woman.

Shapter, for the husband, asked that the petition might stand over, in order that he might file affidavits to induce the Court to permit him to have the carriage of the commission. The husband had contemplated a petition for a commission, but it had been snapped out of his hands by the present petitioner. She was admitted to be a confirmed lunatic, and was resident in a lunatic asylum.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Why was not the petition presented earlier? She is, however, in an asylum, and taken care of, so that the delay will not be material. The husband says he ought to have the carriage of the commission, and it is not necessary that he should present another petition. He asks that the petition should stand over, to give him time to file affidavits. Ordered to stand over for a week.

Re LIVESEY, a Lunatic.

Two committees of the estate—Conflicting interests—Costs.

Anderdon supported the petition of Harding Livesey, the lunatic's brother, praying the confirmation of a report approving of him as sole committee. There had originally been two committees, but Hopkins, the other, had died.

Speed, for parties interested, suggested that there were conflicting questions which might arise in respect of the lunatic's estate. The prayer of the petition, too, was not confined to the costs, charges, and expenses of this petition; but also to the costs, charges, and expenses in the causes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In drawing up the order, care must be taken that only the costs ordered to be paid out of the lunatic's estate be included in the present order. How are the claims conflicting? The whole matter has been before the Commissioner, and he has decided it. Some ground must be shewn to me for not confirming the report.

Report confirmed.

EASTER TERM.

Tuesday, April 15.

The Lord Chancellor, accompanied by the Master of the Rolls, the Vice-Chancellors in ceremonial costume, and two Masters in Chancery, opened the court to-day at one o'clock.

Re CHAMBERS.

Practice in bankruptcy—Substituted service on a solicitor acting in person.

Crisp moved for an order for substituted service of a notice in the matter of a petition presented by Mr. Henry Wilton, who described himself in the petition as of Kew Green, Surrey. The petition was entitled "In the Matter of Chambers, a Bankrupt," and "In the Matter of Henry Wilton," and also in a cause in which costs had been incurred. The matter was an original application to the Lord Chancellor in bankruptcy, and was conducted by Mr. Wilton in person, he being an attorney of the Court of Bankruptcy.

By a General Order of the Court of Bankruptcy dated 12th January, 1832, it is ordered "that every attorney or solicitor admitted in the Court of Bankruptcy, and residing in London, or within ten miles thereof, shall, upon his admission, enter in a book in the Registrar's office his name and place of abode, or some other proper place in London, Westminster, or Southwark, within one mile of the said office, where he may be served with notices, summonses, orders, and rules in matters depending in the said court; and as often as any attorney or solicitor shall change his place of abode, or place where he may be served as aforesaid, he shall make the like entry thereof in the same book; and all notices, &c. which do not require personal service shall be deemed sufficiently served on such attorney or solicitor if a copy thereof be left at the place lastly entered in the said book with any person resident at or belonging to such place; and if any such attorney or solicitor shall neglect to make such entry, then the fixing up of any notice, or the copy of a summons, order, or rule for such attorney or solicitor in the office of the Chief Registrar shall be deemed as effectual and sufficient as if the same had been served at such place of residence as aforesaid." The address for service entered by Mr. Wilton was Bank Chambers, No. 3, Lothbury, but it was ascertained that he had long since left that place, and his abode at Kew Green was eight miles from the court. It was proposed to serve him with a notice of the respondent's intention to read affidavits used on a former application, by leaving a notice at Bank Chambers in the Lothbury, and by sticking up a notice in the Chief Registrar's office. It was asked that an order should be made that such service be deemed good service.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let the notice be served in the way you state; and, by way of precaution, let a letter be written to him addressed to his place of abode at Kew Green, informing him of the order which has been made, and inclosing a copy of the order.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Saturday, April 12.

GARCIAS v. RICARDO.

Practice—Plea of foreign jurisdiction—Stay of proceedings pending an appeal.

Where a plea of res judicata has, under the circumstances, been overruled by reason of its being too general, and an application is made to the Court to stay proceedings for compelling the defendant to put in his answer until the order overruling the plea has been disposed of, such application refused with costs, by reason of the injustice which would befal the plaintiff in either event, i. e. whether the appeal would be decided for or against the defendant.

This was a motion to stay all further proceedings in the cause for compelling the defendant to put in a further answer until a petition of appeal, which the defendant intended to present to the House of Lords against the Vice-Chancellor's order overruling the plea, had been disposed of. The facts of the case have been already reported in vol. 4, pp. 130 and 229, from which it will appear that, about eleven years ago, Messrs. Ricardo & Co. through their bankers at Paris, contracted for a loan of four millions of pounds to the Government of Spain. After the first advance, the plaintiff Garcias became a participator in the undertaking to the amount of 25,000*l.* but being dissatisfied with Ricardo in reference to the amount which he had received in the enterprise, instituted proceedings against him in the French courts, the result of which was a decision in favour of the defendant Ricardo. Garcias not being, however, satisfied with the judgment of the French tribunals, instituted proceedings in this court for an account against Ricardo. This was met with a plea of res judicata in a Court of competent jurisdiction, and it was held by his Honour, that, although that might operate as a bar to a suit in equity, yet if the plea be so general as to leave the Court in doubt as to what the matters before the foreign tribunal between the parties really were, the Court would not refuse the plaintiff his right to file a bill for an account of the transactions between him and the defendant. This decision of his Honour was given on 5th of November last. Two other pleas had failed by reason of the defendant not being able to identify the subject-matter of the suits, and the defendant now signified his intention to appeal to the House of Lords.

Stuart and Heathfield, in support of the motion, said that although the petition of appeal had not yet been presented, it was nevertheless settled and signed, and the defendant intended to apply to the Lords to advance the appeal, so that it might be heard as speedily as possible; but that if the Court should refuse the present motion, such appeal would be useless, for the defendant might be compelled to answer, which at present he sought to avoid.

Bethel and Lewis, in opposing the motion, urged the want of sincerity on the defendant's part, in his intention to bring his case before the House of Lords; that if the Court granted this application, it would be tantamount to saying, "I will not pronounce any order, but your plea shall remain in force until the House of Lords should declare whether or no this Court is right upon the merits," which would have the effect, to use Lord Eldon's expression, of palsying the arm of justice; and that, independently of the hardship and injustice which the plaintiff would suffer if he were thus delayed in the prosecution of his suit (which seemed to form the principal object of the intended appeal) for a year or two, the course which the defendant sought to pursue was altogether contrary to the practice of the Court.

Cases cited for the defendant: The King of Spain v. Machado (4 Russ. 560), and Wood v. Milner (1 Jac. & W. 636). For the plaintiff, Garcias, Huguenim v. Baseley (15 Ves. 180); Walburn v. Ingleby (1 My. & K. 79), and Drake v. Drake (3 Hare, 528).

His Honour the VICE-CHANCELLOR said he did not doubt the bona fides of the defendant's intention, nor did he place much stress upon the circumstance that the appeal had not yet been presented to their lordships in the Upper House. The facts of the case were these: The suit was commenced about a twelvemonth ago (vol. 3, p. 33). To this bill the defendant put in his plea, which the Court thought fit to overrule, at which time leave was given to both plaintiff and defendant to amend their respective pleading. The defendant filed another plea, which was also overruled. Against this order it was the intention of the defendant to appeal, which order the House of Lords might think fit to reverse. But even should this be the case, his Honour did not, on the whole, consider the balance of justice was in favour of the present application; for should he grant the order, and the House of Lords determined against the appellant, there was no means of giving the plaintiff an equivalent for the delay and loss of time; but if the appeal were decided in favour of the appellant, the only result would be that the costs of the answer which the plaintiff might compel him to put in would be borne by the plaintiff. Motion overruled with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

Monday, Feb. 24.

DICK v. LACEY.

Will—Construction—Descendants per stirpes.

A testator gave "all, &c. to A B for life, and after her decease he gave the same to her nieces, the daughters of C D, and their descendants per stirpes, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns for ever, A B and the descendants of C D paying an annuity for life to E F."

Held, that the two nieces who survived the life tenant took the entirety, to the exclusion of a third who died without issue, after the testator, but before the life tenant.

James Hammond by his will of the 27th January, 1824, gave all the residue of his estate to Ann, the wife of Sir T. Mantell, for life, and "after her decease he gave the same unto her nieces, the daughters of Captain Boyce, and their descendants per stirpes, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns for ever; Lady Mantell and the descendants of Captain Boyce paying unto his relation, Mrs. Le Plastrier, the sum of 50*l.* a year for life." Captain Boyce died in November 1835, having had six daughters, of whom three were living at the date of the will, and at the death of the testator. One of these married Mr. Lacey, one of the defendants, and died without issue in the lifetime of Lady Mantell; the second married Mr. Dick, the plaintiff, and has ten children; and the third married Mr. Fielding, a defendant, and has also ten children. Lady Mantell, the tenant for life, having died on the 21st Sept. 1843, this suit was instituted to ascertain the rights of the several claimants.

Turner and Beavan, for the plaintiff.—First, the words "their descendants," &c. do not give to the children of the nieces a legal interest co-existent with their interest, but only an interest substituted for theirs in case of their death. When it is said that these parties take per stirpes, it must mean that they take by representing the stirps; what is intended is, substituted, not co-existent interests. (Rowland v. Gorsuch, 2 Cox, 187; Pearson v. Stephen, 2 Dow. & Clark, 328; 5 Bligh, 203.) In Butler v. Ommaney (4 Russ. 70), it was decided that issue could not take with the parents, and descendants here is equivalent to issue there. The cases of Gibbs v. Tait (8 Sim. 132), Crossly v. Clare (1 Ambler, 397), and Butler v. Stratton (3 B. C.C. 367), are to the same effect. Then, secondly, the gift to the daughters of Captain Boyce, by the general rule, creates a joint tenancy in them, which was not severed during the life of Mrs. Lacey; and, besides, they take as a class, which strengthens that view. It may be said that the words per stirpes prevent a joint tenancy; but there may be a joint tenancy among the nieces, as among next of kin (Withy v. Mangles, 4 Beav. 358), and a tenancy in common among their descendants. There is a gift also to an annuitant; and to pay that the Court will give a continued interest. (2 Jarm. on Wills, 171.) There is, therefore, a bequest to three persons, which makes them joint tenants, with a bequest to her children, if one die leaving issue, an event which does not happen. Therefore the whole fund rests in the survivors of the joint tenants.

Kindersley and C. Bayley, for Mr. and Mrs. Fielding.—There are two branches of the question: one between the three nieces and their descendants, and the other between the two surviving nieces and the deceased niece. On the first the plaintiff goes with us, but diverges on the second. In the first place, I observe that "and" is to be changed into "or," before "descendants;" and, if so, the case is clear. .... gift is to the nieces of the survivor, Lady Mantell; and if not, to their descendants per stirpes, and whoever takes is to take absolutely. That makes the whole rational. And though the words are not the same in Pearson v. Stephen, yet the same principle is laid down in sufficiently clear language to act upon. But, secondly, the descendants do not take concurrently with their parents, nor by way of remainder after their life estate, but as representing their stirps. There was no severance of the joint tenancy of the three nieces which existed during Mrs. Lacey's life; and if there had only been the gift to them, it would have been a joint tenancy; but the testator meant that, if any should die during the life tenancy, it should then be severed to let in the issue, and if all should so die, then the issue of each was to take by the stirps. He has given to the three nieces an absolute interest in the first instance as joint tenants; but if any should die, he has directed the descendants to take per stirpes, in a representative and substitutionary character.

Purvis and Lloyd, for Mr. Lacey, the personal representative of the deceased Mrs. Lacey.—The necessary effect of the words in the will is a gift to the nieces as tenants in common. It is to them and their descendants, &c. It is therefore intended that their issue should take, descendants and issue being convertible terms. (Bernal v. Bernal, 3 Myl. & Cr. 559.) What does per stirpes mean, but that each niece and her descendants should take separately from the other two? It is therefore a gift to the nieces and their descendants in equal shares; and therefore, being a gift in tail, if the property was realty, is an absolute gift of the personalty. The only thing is the word "heirs," which points to limitation, not purchase; but it is not used technically by the testator, as he applies it to personalty. In Evans v. Salt (6 Beav. 266), the word so applied meant next of kin; and if that meaning of it here be inconsistent, it may be rejected altogether. (Hinch v. Ward, 2 Sim. & St. 409; King v. Burchell, 1 Eden, 421.) If the nieces, therefore, take as tenants in common in tail, and therefore absolutely, Mr. Lacey, as the personal representative of Mrs. Lacey, will take one third. But if it should not be in tail, the idea of joint tenancy is excluded. It is said "and" is to be construed "or;" but that is never done but to give effect to some other intention found in some other part of the will. (Montague v. Nucella, 1 Russ. 165.) And whether the children take concurrently with, or in succession to, the parents, it is a tenancy in common to the persons claiming. (Woodgate v. Unwin, 4 Sim. 129.)

Wood, for the children of the plaintiff.—The construction which will give effect to all the words is, that the testator gives equally to each niece as a stirps, her heirs and assigns; and directs that the descendants of Capt. Boyce, including the nieces, should pay 50*l.* to, &c. In that way he prevents one family from getting more than another, but having done so, the members of each family will take concurrently. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In that way you let in the representative of Mrs. Lacey, if you allow the children to take concurrently with the parents.] Yes, but then it is to be remembered that the gift is to a class, and the class not being determined at Mrs. Lacey's death, she is excluded. If each daughter is a stirps, and the gift be to her and her descendants to hold to them and their heirs for ever, they take jointly. (Wyld's case, 6 Rep. 16; Co. Litt. 9 b.; De Witte v. De Witte, 11 Sim. 41; Oates v. Johnson, Strange, 1172; Heron v. Stokes, 2 Dr. & W. 89.) The only remaining observation I have to make is that there are authorities in which very similar words have given a life estate to the parent, and a remainder to the children. (Jeffery v. Honeywood, 4 Mad. 398; Crawford v. Trotter, Id. 361.) There is, however, a distinction.

Teed and Young, for the children of Mrs. Fielding.—As to the effect of the words per stirpes we may refer to Crockett v. Crockett (1 Hare, 451); Morse v. Morse (2 Sim. 485); French v. French (11 Sim. 257). As to "and" being used for "or," see Newman v. Nightingale (1 Cox, 341); Crossley v. Kerr (Ambler, 397).

Kindersley, in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It must be allowed this case is attended with very considerable difficulty; but as I cannot, by giving it further consideration, acquire any better assurance, I shall now state my opinion. Whatever was intended by this testator, his words are:—[His Lordship read them.] Who, then, are the persons in contemplation, and what is the time of distribution? There is no doubt as to the latter; it was not to be before the death of Lady Mantell. Who, then, are the persons to take? The daughters of Captain Boyce and their descendants per stirpes. And what is intended for them? The gift is to them, their heirs and assigns for ever; so that it would appear they are to take an absolute and entire interest at the time—an estate of equal value and extent. The first question then is, what is the effect of the gift to the daughters and their descendants per stirpes? and it is contended that the word "descendants" is to have the same effect as the word "issue," and that, coupled with the words "per stirpes," it would be a gift to tenants in common in tail of real estate, and is therefore an absolute gift of the personalty. Now, whatever may be the meaning of the words "per stirpes," it must be admitted that they mean a distribution of one sort or other, not an estate tail, which is excluded both by those words and the absolute words to the parents. I am of opinion, therefore, that the word "descendants" is not a word of limitation, but purchase. Then what is the interest of the children under the will, when it appears they are to have an absolute estate? The question is, first, do they take concurrently with their parents? or, secondly, if not, but they are to take in some species of succession, are they to take in succession by way of substitution for their several parents before the time of distribution? or by way of remainder expectant on their decease? First, it is said that descendants per stirpes must mean a class of children; on the other hand, it is said that the children and parents form one class. There is considerable difficulty either way, and no authority directly bearing on the point to assist us. I consider that the words "descendants per stirpes" import not distribution but succession, and if so, and that, therefore, a concurrent gift is excluded, what succession is it? Now, observe, whatever it is, it is absolute, and the time of distribution is the death of the tenant for life. Independently of the authority of Pearson v. Stephen, I should in this case have come to the same conclusion, the case being nearly similar. There is no material and substantial difference between it and Pearson v. Stephen, and the gift must go in conformity with it, that is, the residuary estate belongs to the two surviving nieces

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Wednesday, April 16.

EDWARDS v. BROWN.

Suppressing deposition—Mistake.

Upon a motion by the plaintiff to suppress a deposition, on the ground of a mistake of the witness in making it, the Court gave the plaintiff leave, without prejudice to the deposition, to examine the witness again upon the same interrogatory, the defendant having liberty to cross-examine the witness at large.

Wigram and Prior, on behalf of the plaintiff in this case, moved for leave to suppress a deposition, on the ground of the witness's being mistaken as to the extent of the subject-matter to which the interrogatory referred. The witness had given his answer stating the value of part of the property in dispute, erroneously believing that he was required to fix the value of the house alone, while the interrogatory required the value of the house, fixtures, and land. They cited Kirk v. Kirk (13 Ves. 281 & 285).

Russell, for the defendant, opposed the application.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, he certainly should not suppress the deposition. In Lord Abergavenny v. Powell (1 Mer. 130) Lord Eldon said, "Do you recollect any instance of such an application as the present being granted? The cases in which a witness has been allowed to explain an examination are where publication has already passed in a cause." That was Lord Eldon's notion in that matter. The defendant had a right to choose whether this motion should stand over and come on with the cause, or whether the plaintiff should be at liberty, without prejudice to the deposition, to examine the witness again upon the same interrogatory, with liberty for the defendant to cross-examine him at large if he wished it.

Russell said that he would accept the latter alternative, and accordingly the order was so made, with the costs of the motion and of the additional examination to be paid by the plaintiff.

GRACE v. TERRINGTON.

Practice—Further directions—Appearance of persons not parties to the suit.

Persons not parties to the suit have not a right to appear on further directions without leave, their appearance being opposed.

In this cause, which was set down on further directions, Cooke appeared to ask for the payment of costs under the following circumstances. A lady, having a power of appointment of a fund among her "blood relations," executed the power, and appointed certain specific sums to persons for whom Cooke appeared, and the residue among other persons. The persons to whom the specific sums had been appointed not being parties of the suit, appeared in the Master's office, and established their claim, and thereby incurred the costs now applied for.

Counsel for all the parties in the suit objected to Cooke's being heard without special leave.

Cooke cited Bennet v. Wood (7 Sim. 522); White v. White (6 Mad. 110); Hutchinson v. Freeman (4 Myl. & Cr. 490); and Shuttleworth v. Howarth (4 Myl. & Cr. 492).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that of the cases in Simons & Maddock, one was on motion, and the other on petition; but the case of Hutchinson v. Freeman was nearer the point. He would assume, for the purpose of his remarks, that the cases referred to were similar to that now before the Court, and if he thought that Lord Cottenham had intended to decide substantially that parties so situated had a right to appear on further directions, he would undoubtedly follow that case. But he considered his lordship had not so intended. The question was, whether parties not parties to the suit had a right to appear on further directions without leave, and their appearance being opposed. His Honour thought they could not; but without deciding anything against what Lord Cottenham was supposed to have decided, he would let this matter stand over, the parties to be at liberty to present a petition for these costs.

CARMICHAEL v. CARMICHAEL.

Practice—Witness.

Where a witness has been examined for a defendant saving just exceptions, and the defendant reads no portion of the evidence, the witness is the witness of the party producing the evidence.

General Carmichael by his will bequeathed all his property to John and Catherine, his children. Mrs. Carmichael, the widow, took out letters of administration of her husband's estate, with the will annexed. The testator's son John also received a considerable portion of the testator's property. This bill was filed by Catherine, the daughter, against her brother John, and her mother, the widow. A decree was made to take an account of the personal estate received by John and the widow, or any person in their behalf. In the Master's office John obtained the usual order for the examination of his co-defendant, the widow. Her depositions having been taken and published, John refused to read them, and accordingly the deposition was tendered by the plaintiff, but refused by the Master. The Master's report was afterwards excepted to, one of the exceptions being on account of his refusal to receive this evidence.

Russell and Chapman, for the exception, said that in the order the defendant John Carmichael alleged that his co defendant had no interest, and he could not now be heard to contradict that allegation. The Master ought to have received the deposition.

Burge and Campbell, for the report, said that Mrs. Carmichael was an interested witness, and that John Carmichael had a right to take the objection. They cited Lee v. Atkinson (2 Cox, 413).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he was of opinion, that although this witness was examined for the defendant saving just exceptions, the defendant reading no portion of the evidence, the witness was the witness of the party producing the evidence. Then arose the question of interest, and his Honour thought that there was an interest. A question might be put—Did John Carmichael pay the witness a sum of money or not? If he paid her, she would be chargeable. His Honour said that he was afraid she had an interest, and that the evidence was not receivable if objected to. He would, however, delay his decision, if any authorities to the contrary could be produced.

Note.—The case was not mentioned again.

GRAVENOR v. MILES.

Practice—Opening biddings—Costs—Interest.

Where a person had obtained an order to open the biddings, and at the second sale was outbid, he was, under the circumstances, allowed his costs and interest at 4l. per cent. on his deposit.

An estate and premises being put up for sale by public auction in two lots, were sold at the sums of 300l. and 80l. respectively. Mr. Griffiths having obtained an order for opening the biddings upon an advance of 200l. on the first lot, and 50l. on the second lot, paid the sum of 250l. into the bank to the credit of the cause. At the second sale, on the 4th of February, 1845, the estate was sold for 1,170l. which sale was confirmed.

Cameron now moved on behalf of Mr. Griffiths, for the repayment to him of the sum of 250l. with costs, and interest on the sum of 250l. after the rate of 4l. per cent. Upon the motion for the opening of the biddings, Messrs. Jones and Sons, the plaintiff's solicitors, addressed to Messrs. White, Eyre, and White the following letter:—

"We think it very desirable to open the biddings; and assuming that the application, though not in the name of the plaintiffs, is in truth for the plaintiffs, and that they will submit to a reserved bidding at a resale, or to a sale by private contract, we will consent to the costs of the application being costs in the cause.—July 13, 1844."

He cited Filder v. Bellingham (9 Jurist, 8, and Law T. 153).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It seems to me a very reasonable application; and if there has been a similar case I will make the order. As it has been a fair case, and the estate has been benefited, and it was done at the request of the parties, I will allow the costs, and interest at four per cent. on the deposit.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Wednesday, April 23.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF APPLEBY, in the County of Leicester.

Where a material variance between the writ of certiorari and the return becomes known to the Court incidentally, prior to the argument upon a rule to quash the certiorari and return, they will take notice of it, and make the rule absolute.

This was a cross-rule obtained by Hildyard, to quash the certiorari which had issued to bring up all and singular orders made between the inhabitants of the parish of Appleby, in the county of Leicester, touching the settlement of Thomas Rowell, Elizabeth his wife," &c.; against which K. Macaulay and Simpson shewed cause.

It appeared that the parish of Appleby is situated partly in Leicestershire and partly in Derbyshire, and was sometimes called Appleby in Leicestershire, and sometimes Appleby in Derbyshire. An order of sessions had been made in an appeal between the churchwardens and overseers of the part of the parish of Appleby in Derbyshire, and the inhabitants of Snarestone, in Leicestershire, as to the settlement of Thomas Rowell, his wife, and children, confirming an order of removal from the respondent parish to the appellant parish, subject to a case. A certiorari had been obtained, addressed to the justices of Leicestershire, to bring up all and singular orders made by them or some of them, between the inhabitants of the parish of Appleby, in the county of Leicester, appellants, and the inhabitants of the parish of Snarestone, in the county of Leicester, touching the settlement of T. Rowell, his wife, and children, naming them. The notice upon which this writ was obtained described Appleby to be in Leicestershire, and so also the recognizances entered into to prosecute the suit. The return was of the actual order between the parish of Appleby, in Derbyshire, and the parish of Snarestone. The affidavits upon which the motion to quash had been obtained followed the certiorari in describing the defendants as the inhabitants of Appleby in Leicestershire.

In the course of some preliminary objections, these variances between the certiorari, the original order, and the return, were stated to the Court; and thereupon Whitehurst, Q.C. objected that the writ must be quashed without inquiring further.

K. Macaulay contended that might be good ground for substantive motion to quash the return, but that did not affect the writ. (Reg. v. Fordham, 11 A. & E. 80.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—All that we intended to say in Reg. v. Fordham was, that when the argument had proceeded to some length, we could not entertain an objection of variance; but it is a very different thing where it has come to the knowledge of the Court by some accident. The rule must be made absolute.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF LILLSHALL.

Poor—Appeal—Emancipation, presumption of.

On an appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper, the sessions had quashed the order, subject to a case, which in substance submitted for the opinion of the Court the question, whether, to entitle a pauper to a settlement ex parte paternâ, the evidence of which was acknowledgment by relief to the father after the pauper had attained the age of twenty-one years, it was necessary to negative a presumption in law, founded on the mere fact of his having attained the age of twenty-one years, that the pauper had been emancipated, and did not form part of his father's family at the time when the circumstances that constituted the acknowledgment took place.

Phillimore, in support of the order of sessions.—The fact that a male child has attained the age of twenty-one years makes it probable that he has been emancipated (Rex. v. Oulton, 5 B. & Ad. 962); and therefore a presumption of law arises which, to establish his right to a derivative settlement, must be negatived. (Rex v. North Bovey, 2 Q. B. R. 500; Reg. v. Wymondham, 2 Q. B. R. 541; Reg. v. Pontefract, 2 Q. B. R. 548; Reg. v. Pilkington, 1 M. S. C. 90; Reg. v. St. Sepulchre, 14 Q. S. M. 8.) The cases of Reg. v. Grosley (8 Ad. & E. 806) and of Reg. v. Staple Fitzpaine (2 Q. B. R. 138), are distinguishable.

Whately, Q. C. contrà, was not called on.

By the COURT.—When a clear and perfect primâ facie settlement is made out by intelligible facts, it is not necessary to negative an exception, which can only be made to appear by matters which the examinations do not disclose. There is not any ground for the supposed presumption that a person of full age must have been emancipated; it is not necessary, therefore, that such a presumption should be negatived. If there were any evidence of emancipation, then of course the fact of emancipation must have been negatived, or the claim to a derivative settlement would have fallen to the ground. Even in a case where a settlement had been gained by the father after the full age of the son, the presumption of emancipation would not necessarily arise. The present case is stronger, for the settlement is made out by acknowledgment, and may, therefore, have been gained many years before. The case of Rex v. Oulton is not an authority for the position that full age raises the presumption of emancipation.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. JOHN PERKINS.

Coroners are deemed absent within the meaning of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, though accidentally present during a part only of the inquest held by their deputy, who ought to sign the inquisition quâ deputy.

This was a motion to quash the inquisition of a coroner on the body of Elizabeth Hassell, for defects on the face of it, inasmuch as it appeared that the inquest was held before the deputy coroner, without stating the absence of the coroner, and that it was signed by "— Moore, duly appointed deputy coroner." It also appeared that the coroner was present in the first instance; that he was obliged to go elsewhere; but that he returned, and was present when his deputy signed the inquisition. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, gives coroners power to appoint a deputy only for illness, and during absence for reasonable cause.

Godson, Q. C. now shewed cause.—The coroner was absent, and the mere fact of his returns does not remove his right to have a deputy. The statement that the deputy was duly appointed such, was mere surplusage.

Jervis, Q.C. contrà.—It appears that Docker, the coroner, viewed the body, and Moore signed for him. The oath must be super visum corporis. If one coroner begins the inquest and another intervenes, he must begin again. The inquiry must be made under the original oath, and the whole by one officer. The coroner returned; this was not absence.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We are of opinion that the coroner was absent within the meaning of the Act. His accidental presence during part of the time was quite immaterial, and the inquest here was quite correct.

PATTESON, J.—The coroner was sufficiently absent in this case, and the only objection seems to be that the deputy signed with the addition that he was duly appointed; if not requisite, that would be mere surplusage; but I think it would be wrong were it otherwise signed.

WILLIAMS, J.—I not only think that the deputy coroner signed this, but that it would have been wrong had he signed it in any other manner. It is laid down in Comyn's Digest, title Attorney, p. 645, that "if a man who acts by the authority of another and as his attorney, does it in his own name and as his own proper act, it will be void, for he represents his master, and ought to do it in his own name, or at least ought to express that he does it as attorney for such an one." I therefore think that the deputy coroner has acted very properly.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The coroner on his return having remained silent, and taken no part in the inquest, cannot have annulled the authority delegated to his deputy, according to the provisions of the Act, by his accidental presence.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF ST. ANNE'S, WESTMINSTER.

Estate settlement — Evidence of the production of letters of administration before the justices need not be proved, if they are sent to the appellant parish.

On appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper, the order was confirmed, subject to a case whether it was sufficient in the proof of an estate settlement to send certain letters of administration to the receiving parish, together with an examination which referred to them and specified them by date, or whether it was necessary that it should be specially stated that they were produced before the magistrates.

Prendergast, in support of the order, was stopped by the Court.

Pashley, contrà, contended that the letters of administration were not sufficiently identified or shewn to be before the justices. He cited Reg. v. Mildenhall (2 Q. B. 517); Reg. v. Flockton (2 Q. B. 535); Reg. v. Rushworth (2 Q. B. 476, per Patteson, J.); Reg. v. Leeds (13 Law Jour. M. C. 88; 1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 23); Reg. v. Outwell (9 Ad. & Ell. 836). It is absolutely necessary to connect the evidence with the parties. [PATTESON, J.—Suppose you strike out all mention of the letters of administration from the examinations, would that vitiate the order?] But there must be something to connect them with their production before the justices. [PATTESON, J.—I do not see that at all. WILLIAMS, J.—Do you think, then, that the woman ought to have said in her examination that administration was taken out by her by the letters of administration now produced and presented, as by reference to the same will more fully and at large appear? Is that what you think necessary?] That would not do; for if she said only that, they might have been produced elsewhere. But the order itself is fatally bad for another reason on the face of it. [Prendergast.—You cannot go into any other defect. The Court will not travel out of the case.] The case does not exclude the common law jurisdiction. Here is no jurisdiction shewn. It is not stated that the parish is within the district for which the police magistrate acts. [Prendergast.—Re Guildford (2 Chit. 284) decides that the Court cannot travel out of the case; besides, the parish is within the district, according to the Metropolitan Police Act. [PATTESON, J.—Do you say, Mr. Pashley, that the production of these letters is not shewn by this woman's examination?] Yes. [PATTESON, J.—Then it may still have been shewn by some other witness.] That would be throwing the onus of the proof on us: they are to prove their own case to us. [PATTESON, J.—But they did send the letters to you in this case.] That has nothing to do with it. [PATTESON, J.—But I say it has to do with it.] I submit, on the other point, that the Court may look dehors the case, when there is a defect at the root of the order; the Court cannot affirm an act which is wholly void. The magistrate is not shewn to have had jurisdiction. [Prendergast.—The very parish, St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, is named in the Act. Here it is. WIGHTMAN, J.—That will do. I think, Mr. Pashley.] There may be many other parishes called St. Leonard's: is it to be presumed on one side?

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There is a great deal of presumption on the other side. The order must be confirmed. Order confirmed.

COCKER v. MUSGROVE and MOON.

Duty of sheriff when notice of rent being due is given to him, and the execution creditor will not pay out the landlord.

This was an action against the defendants, sheriff of Middlesex, for a false return, tried before Mr. Justice Wightman, at the sittings after Hilary Term, under the following circumstances:—Five writs of fi. fa. were in the hands of the sheriff against one Steinitz, under which possession had been held for some weeks. Notice of rent being due had been given by the landlord, and afterwards another fi. fa. at the suit of the plaintiff was delivered to the sheriff for the sum of 16*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* and shortly afterwards the plaintiff ruled the sheriff to return. The return set out the five writs, and averred a seizure under them of goods to the value of 200*l.* (which was less than the amount of the writs); that they remained on his hands for want of buyers; that notice of 295*l.* for rent was given; that none of the execution-creditors would pay the rent, and that Steinitz had no other goods whereof the sheriff could cause to be made the debt and damages of the plaintiff. This action for a false return was then brought, and the existence of the writs and the rent was admitted in the declaration; but it was alleged that there were goods besides, "whereof the defendants, as sheriff, could and might to have levied the moneys" indorsed upon the plaintiff's writ. A distinct issue was taken upon this allegation, and at the trial, no goods having been proved but those liable to the rent, it was objected that the plaintiff had shewn no cause of action, as the sheriff was not bound to levy whilst the rent remained unpaid. Mr. Justice Wightman thought the sheriff might sell, though he could not remove, and the case went to the jury. On the fourth day of Term,

Bovill (with whom was Wise) moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. As long as rent is due, the sheriff is not bound to sell, although in practice he often does so. Here the charge is, that he did not levy the moneys indorsed upon the writ. This is more than seizure. (Drewe v. Lainson 11 A. & E. 529; Stubbs v. Lainson, 1 M. & W. 728.) The execution-creditor might pay out the landlord; and until that is done the sheriff is precluded by the statute from proceeding with the execution. (8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1; Risely v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16; Wintle v. Freeman, 11 A. & E. 539.) He would be liable to an action at the suit of the landlord if a sale of the goods should not produce sufficient to pay him, although the actual proceeds were paid to him. (Calvert v. Jolliffe, 2 B. & Ad. 418.)

The COURT said they would see Mr. Justice Wightman, and on Saturday, April 26, granted the rule. Rule nisi.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF SEVENOAKS.

The service of notice of certiorari upon two of the justices mentioned in the caption of the order of sessions is primâ facie sufficient, it not being shewn that they were not present when the order was made.

This was a cross-rule obtained by Pashley to quash a certiorari obtained from Williams, J.; against which Deedes now (April 23) shewed cause.—The material facts were these. On July 29, 1843, an order of removal had been made from the parish of Sevenoaks to the parish of St. Luke's, which was duly served August 7th. The next practicable sessions were held on October 17th. No appeal had been made, but on October 16th notice and grounds of appeal dated Sept. 7th were served upon the parish of Sevenoaks for the then next sessions. The parish of Sevenoaks did not attend, as due notice had not been given, and there was no entry or respite of the appeal. At the sessions in January the order was made, the parish of Sevenoaks not appearing, and the order had been brought up by certiorari. The objections upon which the rule nisi to quash the certiorari had been granted were—1st, that no notice thereof had been served upon two justices present the 4th of January; 2nd, that the notice had been given by a party not authorized to act for the inhabitants of Sevenoaks. The rule nisi was served upon the parish of St. Luke's, and as they allowed it to be made absolute, this is an indulgence which the Court will not now grant. The Court no doubt has the power to interfere, but it is not bound to do so. (Rex v. Wakefield, 1 Burr. 488; Rex v. Nicholls, T. R. 281; Rex v. Ratislaw, 5 D. P. C. 539.) If, however, the Court will entertain the objections, they cannot be maintained. 1st. The authority of the attorney is clear. He was retained on behalf of the inhabitants to conduct the appeal. This is still the appeal. It is distinguishable from Reg. v. Justices of Lancashire (4 B. & Ald. 289), as there it did not appear for whom the attorneys acted. (See Reg. v. Solly, 9 D. P. C. 115; Reg. v. Justices of Lancashire, 11 A. & E. 144.) Then the notice was served upon two justices, by and before whom the order was made. It was made in our absence, and the caption of the order contained the names of the two justices whom we served. The order states that at the sessions held before the parties named, it was ordered by "this Court, &c. &c." It is not like an order signed by two magistrates. There is no affidavit they were not present.

Pashley, in support of the rule.—The caption proves nothing beyond the facts there stated, and it is not stated that these justices heard the case. The statute requires it shall be duly proved on oath. There is no oath here that they were the parties. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Does not the caption afford a strong presumption that they were present?] Then the authority is only to prosecute the appeal, and, by analogy to the proceedings in an action where the authority ends with the judgment, the authority must here end with the order. (Unwin v. St. Quintin, 11 M. & W. 277.) It is not an indulgence to be allowed to make the objection now. Cur. adv. vult.

On Saturday, April 26, the Court gave judgment to the effect that the notice was good.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF HUNTINGDON.

Where upon articles of peace being exhibited, the sessions order the defendant to find sureties in a certain amount, and do not order that, in case of default, he shall be imprisoned, magistrates out of sessions have no power to commit upon refusal to find such sureties.

Biggs Andrews, Q. C. (with whom was Worlledge) shewed cause against a rule obtained by Gunning for a habeas corpus to bring up two persons of the name of Ashton, now in the gaol at Huntingdon, and for a certiorari to bring up the order under which they were in custody. Numerous points were raised in the course of the argument, but only that upon which the decision was founded is now reported. It appeared that articles of the peace had been exhibited at the Huntingdon Sessions by Mr. Swallow, and the sessions had thereupon ordered them severally to enter into recognizances, themselves in 100*l.* and two sureties in 50*l.* each to keep the peace for six months. They were upon this order brought before two magistrates, and upon proof of the order, of their identity, and their refusal to find sureties, the magistrates committed them for the residue and yet unexpired term of six months, from the 8th of April, the date of the order of sessions, unless in the meantime they found the required sureties.

Gunning (with whom was O'Malley), contrà.—The alternative of imprisonment having been omitted, they could only be indicted for disobedience.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The magistrates only had power to enforce the order of sessions, and that directed no imprisonment. The magistrates have in effect convicted summarily upon an indictment for disobedience to the order of sessions. I am at a loss to know what jurisdiction they had.

The rest of the COURT concurred.

Prisoners to be discharged.

GREEN v. WOOD.

Warrants of attorney—Construction of 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 2.

This was a special case, which turned on the 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 2, which provides that if, after the expiration of twenty-one days after the execution of a warrant of attorney, a commission of bankrupt shall be issued against the person who shall have given such warrant of attorney, then, "unless such warrant of attorney, or a copy thereof, shall have been filed as aforesaid within the space of twenty-one days from the execution thereof, or unless judgment shall have been signed or execution issued on such warrant," such warrant, and the judgment and execution thereon, shall be deemed fraudulent and void against the assignees, &c. In this case, which was an action of detinue, judgment had been entered up, but there had been no execution of the warrant of attorney, which was not filed according to the statute; and bankruptcy having ensued, the question arose whether the warrant was void under the statute.

Hayward, Q. C. shewed cause.—The words of the statute are clearly erroneous. In the words "judgment signed or execution issued," the or ought to be and: for it was clearly the meaning of the statute that both the judgment should be filed and the execution issued. The statute requires the warrant to be filed, or judgment to be signed. (Everett v. Wells, 2 Scott, N. R. 525.) If this alteration be not made, the words are utterly inoperative; to do so is to give effect to the obvious meaning of the legislature. This is allowable. (Fowler v. Padget, 7 T. R. 509; Waterhouse v. Keen, 4 B. & Cres. 200; Whitmore v. Robertson, 8 M. & W. 476; Brook v. Mitchell, 6 B. N. C. 349.)

Willes, contrà.—The word or does not mean and; and no such alteration of the plain words of the statute is permissible. As it is, the final words are merely surplusage; to make the alteration is to render them operative. (Hurst v. Jennings, 5 B. & Cres. 650.) Unless the plain meaning of the words used lead to obvious inconvenience, they must be construed in their plain sense.

Hayward, Q. C. in reply.—Pewtress v. Annan (9 Dowl. 828). The words are inadvertently used. There is no alternative in reality given by the word or.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We are undoubtedly bound to give to Acts of Parliament a construction in accordance with the plain intention of the legislature; but if Acts of Parliament do not use the words which are necessary to convey their meaning, and the words used are wholly inoperative, as appears to be the case in this instance, we do not feel justified in going the length of altering those words and of supplying others which shall give effect to what was perhaps the intent. In this case we must not only read and for or, but must transfer the words "execution issued" and supply the word "levy" in its place; but we think it is incompetent to us to introduce these words. It is the duty of Courts to find out and give effect to the meaning of statutes, but beyond this we cannot go.

PATTESON, J.—This statute is badly drawn. In one place cognovits and warrants of attorney are treated as distinct things; in another they are placed on the same footing. It is quite clear that there is some mistake in this statute. If we read the word or in its place, no meaning whatever is given to the clause; but we cannot give the meaning intended unless we supply the word levied, which we think we cannot do.

WILLIAMS J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

Judgment accordingly.

REG. v. RANDALL and TAYLOR.

Rateability of tin toll.

This was an appeal against a rate confirmed by the sessions, subject to a case. The question was as to certain toll tin.

Crowder, Q. C. in support of the order of sessions, submitted that it was the old point decided in Crease v. Sawle (2 Q. B. 862), and the Court called upon

Butt, Q.C. to distinguish it.—They are adventurers actually working the mine. (—— v. ——, Nolan, P. L. 148; 3 Burr. 1341; Rex v. Tremaine, 4 B. & Ad. 162; R. v. Bishop of Rochester, 12 Ad. & E. 355.)

Greenwood on the same side.—We say that we are the instruments of parties who granted us, not the right to tolls, but to take the minerals. They say, you hold under a demise from parties, one of whom had only a right to tolls. We answer, that that cannot affect the question as between the appellants and the parish. If there is a lease, no rate can be levied. Lord Denman has stated in R. v. Preece that a man who takes minerals is an occupier of land. It is perfectly admitted that tin toll is rateable; it would be idle to deny it.

Greenwood, Q. C. in reply.—The ratenble tia is that which is rendered to the lord of the manor as toll tia.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is really only a question of words. Order confirmed.

Wednesday, April 30.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF SEVENOAKS.

An order of removal was made July 29, served August 7; on Oct. 14, the sessions being Oct. 17, notices of grounds of appeal were served, but dated September 7. The respondents did not appear at the October sessions, nor was there then any entry or respite of the appeal. At the next Epiphany sessions, without any further notice, the appellants obtained, in the absence of the respondents, an order to quash, with costs. Held, that the sessions had no jurisdiction.

"Information and belief," in an affidavit.

Peers may be bound over to keep the peace by justices.

A certiorari having been obtained to bring up an order of sessions, by which an order of removal was quashed, the objections to the writ on the alleged insufficient notice to the justices having been disposed of, the case was now heard upon the merits. The order of removal of the pauper from the parish of Sevenoaks to the parish of St. Luke's was made upon July 29, 1844, and served August 7. On Oct. 14 notice of appeal and grounds of appeal were served upon the parish of Sevenoaks, but dated Sept. 7, and contained the usual notice of intention to enter, try, and prosecute at the then next sessions. The next actual sessions were held Oct. 17. The respondents did not then appear, nor was any entry or respite of the appeal made at that sessions. Without any further notice being given, the parish of St. Luke's appeared at the January Sessions, and obtained, in the absence of the respondents, an order to quash the order of removal, and payment of 5*l.* costs, notice of which was given to the respondents after the expiration of the sessions, but no actual service seemed to have been made. The certiorari was obtained upon affidavits shewing the above facts, and cause against the quashing of this order was now shewn by Pashley.—The order of removal was suspended, and still continues so, and the order quashing it, even if made without jurisdiction, is no grievance; for when the suspension is taken off, the order may be enforced, and the costs distrained for; and an action could not be supported because it was quashed without jurisdiction. This case differs therefore from Rex v. West Riding (7 A. & E. 590), as there the party was liable to an immediate levy. The Court will refuse to interfere where there is no grievance. (Reg. v. South Holland, 8 A. & E. 429; Lord Gifford's case, 1 New Sess. Cas. 490. See 4 LAW T. 340.) But the want of jurisdiction is not shewn. The affidavit does not shew that the appeal was not duly entered and respited at the October sessions. It states merely that he, the attorney, is informed and believes that there was no such entry. Belief and information is insufficient in an affidavit. (Symes v. Amor, 8 D. D. C. 773; Sandys v. Hobler, 6 D. P. C. 274; Joynes v. Collinson, 2 D. & L. 449.) The proceeding of the sessions was an erroneous proceeding, not a nullity, and the distinction is material to observe when the Court is asked to interfere. Upon this part of the case the following authorities were referred to: Marshalsea case (10 Rep. 68); Bagg's case (11 Rep. 98 n.); Rex v. Hewes (3 A. & E. 730); Rex v. Justices of Bucks (3 Q. B. 80); Rex v. Bristol and Exeter Railway (11 A. & E. 202); Re Baines (1 C. & Phil. 31).

Baines, Q.C. (with him was Deedes), contrà.—This was made entirely without jurisdiction, and is clearly a grievance. We are ordered to pay 5*l.* costs. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We have no doubt that it is a grievance, and only doubt as to the jurisdiction.] Notice of appeal is by 13 Car. 2, c. 12, and 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the sessions. The appeal must be to the next practicable sessions, and the October sessions were alone entitled to entertain this appeal. There is no affidavit on the other side that there was any entry and respite at that sessions, and "information and belief" is enough for us to assert to call upon them for an answer. They had no right to omit the October sessions, and only the appellants can enter it. There was no notice. [PATTESON, J.—My doubt is, that as you knew they could not try at the October sessions, from the shortness of the notice, whether it might not come as a notice for Epiphany sessions.] We were not present then, or properly brought before the sessions, and no notice appears to have been proved. [PATTESON, J.—They rely upon the presumption that the sessions acted rightly, and that such notice was proved. Are your affidavits sufficient? Should you not have shewn that there was in fact no entry or respite in October?] It is submitted that as they knew this fact best, and swore last, if there had been any, they would have stated it.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I have no doubt this is a grievance, and that the Court is bound to interfere; and as to the case of Ex parte Gifford, which has been cited, I must observe upon the value of some of the authorities cited. In Gifford's case, 4 Bl. Comm. 258 is given as the authority that justices cannot bind a peer to keep the peace. Upon reference, I find 1 Hawkins cited; but in Hawkins, or the notes, no reference is made to 21 Jac. 1, c. 8, which expressly renders all persons liable, but there is in the note a reference back to Blackstone. Dalton, indeed (p.), says something about the confidence in the peaceable nature of peers. But in fact there is no authority for the position that peers are exempt. I have thought it right to state this, lest it should be supposed that the Court adopted the views put forward in that case. Then have the sessions done right here? What is the meaning of the next practicable sessions? I think what was practicable at the time of the service of the order cannot be made impracticable by delay in delivering notice of appeal. The parties here ought to have communicated with each other; and attorneys who are engaged in parish business should be careful not to plunge the parishes into litigation for want of a little openness in their proceedings. Here the sessions never had jurisdiction at all. The appeal was not entered and reported in October; at least, if it had been so, the appellants would have shewn in their affidavits. The attorney of the respondents swears that he is "informed and believes" that there was none, and the appellants ought to have answered his affidavit.

The rest of the Court concurred, PATTESON, J. expressing a doubt whether "information and belief" was sufficiently explicit for an affidavit.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Monday, April 28.

BANNISTER v. BACHELOR and ANOTHER.

A plea in abatement of non-joinder of a co-defendant is sufficient, if it state where such person is resident at the time of plea pleaded, without saying that he was within the jurisdiction of the Court at the time of bringing the action.

Manning, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the defendant's plea in abatement should not be set aside. The action was brought by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the two defendants as drawers and indorsers. The defendants have pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of one Joseph Hedge as a co-defendant. The plea states that Joseph Hedge is still living, and resides within the jurisdiction of this Court, to wit, at, &c. (stating the residence); the objection is, that the plea does not allege that he so resided within the jurisdiction at the time of the commencement of the suit.

TINDAL, C. J.—Is that necessary? The 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 8, says, "unless it shall be stated in such plea that such person is resident within the jurisdiction of the Court."

Manning, Serjt.—That refers to the time when the action is brought.

TINDAL, C. J.—No, I don't think it does.

The COURT refused the rule on this point, but granted a rule to shew cause upon another ground of objection to the plea. Rule nisi accordingly.

COE v. CLARKE.

Landlord and tenant—Holding—Parol evidence.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict, which had been found for the defendant, should not be set aside and entered instead for the plaintiff, on a point reserved by the under-sheriff, before whom the cause had been tried. The action was for use and occupation, and brought to recover a quarter's rent. The defence was, that the tenancy was a yearly one, and the action therefore premature. The premises, it appeared, were let by a written document for a year; but there was evidence to shew that the rent had been paid quarterly, and it was therefore submitted that this might be taken as evidence of a new contract come to by the parties.

The COURT said that such evidence would have the effect of varying a written contract by parol evidence, and ought not therefore to be allowed. Rule refused.

Tuesday, April 29.

SOANE v. MADDOX.

An order that the plaintiff's attorney may inspect and take a copy of a certain agreement made between the plaintiff and the defendant, and stated to be then in the custody of the defendant, is not sufficiently specific to ground an attachment for disobedience.

This was a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against him for contempt of Court, in refusing to obey an order of Mr. Justice Cresswell, dated 10th February last, and which was as follows:—"I do order that the plaintiff's attorney or agent may be at liberty to inspect and take a copy of a certain agreement made between the plaintiff and the defendant, and now in the custody of the defendant." A demand was made on the defendant, on the 7th April, to inspect and take a copy of the agreement, pursuant to the order, with which the defendant did not comply.

Talfourd, Serjt. now shewed cause.

Gaselee, Serjt. in support of the rule.

The COURT said, that they did not see that there had been any contempt. There might be twenty agreements; and it was requisite, therefore, that what was required should be more specifically mentioned. Rule discharged.

BENTLEY v. FLEMING.

Where the judge at trial delegated his authority to the associate to take the finding of the jury, and directed him to do so upon several specific issues, and in the absence of the judge the associate asked the jury to give a general verdict for the plaintiff or defendant, and omitted to put to them the issues specifically, the Court granted a new trial, on the ground of miscarriage arising from default of the associate.

Case for the infringement of a patent granted to one William Carr Thornton, for "certain improvements in machinery or apparatus for making cards for carding cotton and other fibrous substances," and which patent had been assigned by Thornton to one Joseph Williamson, and by him assigned to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded, amongst other pleas, Not guilty; a traverse that Thornton was the first inventor, and that the invention was not new.

At the trial, before Cresswell, J. at the last Summer Liverpool Assizes, the learned judge told the jury that there were three points for their consideration. On the second issue he left it to them to say whether Thornton was the first inventor; on the third issue he told them that if the invention had been used before in public, or was known to the patentee and sold by him before the patent had been granted, it was not a new invention; and the learned judge, considering that the travelling headwork of the machine was an essential ingredient of the invention, left it to the jury to say whether the travelling headwork in the machine which was sold to Broadwood was substantially the same as that contained in the plaintiff's patent. The jury retired to consider their verdict, and, it being a late hour at night, the learned judge left the court, giving to the associate a written abstract of the issues on which he was directed to take specifically the findings of the jury. It appeared, however, that when the jury came into court with their verdict, the foreman held a paper in his hand, but the associate asked them generally whether they found their verdict for the plaintiff or the defendant. The jury said, for the plaintiff; upon which the counsel for the plaintiff said, "That is all." The counsel for the defendant desired that the associate would put the questions to the jury; upon which the associate replied, "His lordship desired me to ask the jury whether they found their verdict for the plaintiff or defendant on these issues." One of the jurymen said, "I think his lordship left three questions." The associate then said, "I think you had better not; what damages do you find for the plaintiff?" There was, in fact, a considerable discussion between the counsel for each party and the associate respecting the matter, which ended in a general verdict being taken for the plaintiff, with 40s. damages.

A rule for a new trial having been obtained by Sir Thomas Wilde, in behalf of the defendant, on the ground of miscarriage in the trial of the cause, in consequence of what occurred at the time the jury came into court, Channell and Byles, Serjts. (Webster with them), shewed cause.

Sir Thomas Wilde (Cowling and Addison with him) was not called on to support the rule.

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that there has been a miscarriage in this cause. If the officer at the trial had followed the directions of the learned judge, and done what the judge had directed him, there would have been such a finding as to preclude any doubt. I think in this cause there were doubts which ought to have been cleared up at the time. It is a different thing whether a jury shall be asked to give a finding in the lump on several issues, or whether they shall be required to find specifically on each issue. If they had been asked, on the third issue, whether the invention was a new one, possibly some might have said, that as to that we do not agree in finding for the plaintiff. As it now stands, it appears that one of the jurymen expressed an opinion that there were three questions left to them by the judge; this ought to have directed the attention of the associate—at all events, the officer should have put the three questions to the jury; it may be possible that one of the counsel prevented him from so doing, or his attention may have been called away by the opposite counsel to a different question. It therefore seems that there has been a miscarriage of the cause by the officer at the trial, and as this must be considered the same as that of the judge himself, the cause must go down for a new trial, without payment of costs by either party.

Rule absolute.

Wednesday, April 30.

STEAD v. CAREY.

Letters patent were granted to the plaintiff, with a proviso that they should be void if the specification should not be enrolled within four months. The plaintiff enrolled the specification within six months, but omitted to do so within the four months. An Act of Parliament was afterwards passed for establishing a joint stock company for the working of the invention, and with power to purchase and take an assignment of plaintiff's patent, and by a clause in that Act it was enacted that the letters patent should be as valid as if the specification had been enrolled within the four months.

Held, that the letters patent were thereby absolutely confirmed and rendered valid, though no company was ever formed.

Held, also, that it was no answer to an action for an infringement of the plaintiff's patent, that before the Act of Parliament, and after the four months for the enrolment of the plaintiff's specification, the defendant had obtained letters patent for an invention which was an improvement upon the plaintiff's, but which could not be used without putting in practice the plaintiff's invention.

The defendant pleaded that the invention in respect of which the plaintiff's patent was granted was an invention entitled "the invention" of, &c. and the letters patent were granted under the title of "the invention" of, &c. and that the said title was too large and inconsistent with the specification enrolled by the plaintiff.

Replication, that the letters patent were granted for an invention entitled "an invention" of, &c. and not for "the invention" of, &c. in manner and form, &c.

Held, that the replication was a good traverse.

Case for the infringement of a patent.

The declaration, after alleging that the plaintiff, before and at the time, &c. was the true and first inventor of the working or making of a certain manner of new manufacture within this realm, to wit, a certain invention for making or paving public streets and highways, and public and private roads, courts, and bridges with timber or wooden blocks, set out a grant to the plaintiff by letters patent, dated 19th of May, 1838, of the sole privilege of using the said invention for the term of fourteen years, with a proviso that the letters patent should be void if the plaintiff should not cause to be enrolled a specification of the said invention within four calendar months after the date of the said letters patent. The declaration then stated an enrolment of the specification within six calendar months after the date of the letters patent, but that the same was not enrolled within four calendar months, in pursuance of the aforesaid proviso; and then averred that by an Act of Parliament of the 4 & 5 Vict. entitled, "An Act for forming and establishing Stead's Patent Wooden Paving Company," it was enacted that the said letters patent should, during the remainder of the term of fourteen years, be considered as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if the said specification so enrolled six months after the date of the said letters patent had been enrolled within four months after the date thereof. The declaration then assigned for breaches several infringements of the patent.

The defendant pleaded several pleas, of which it is only necessary to notice the seventh, eighth, and ninth.

The seventh plea was, that the said invention, in respect whereof the said letters patent in the declaration mentioned were granted to and obtained by the plaintiff, was an invention stated and represented by the plaintiff, in applying and petitioning for the said letters patent, as called and entitled "the invention of making or paving public streets and highways, and public and private roads, courts, and bridges, with timber or wooden blocks;" and the said letters patent were granted and obtained for and in respect of the said invention, by and under the name, style, and title of "the invention of making or paving public streets and highways, and public and private roads, courts, and bridges, with timber or wooden blocks," and by and under no other name, style, or title. The plea then stated that the said title was too large, and inconsistent with the specification enrolled by the plaintiff; concluding with a verification.

The eighth plea in effect stated, that by the Act of Parliament in the declaration mentioned, of the 4 & 5 Vict. it was enacted that the said Act should extend and be construed to extend to the said company, called Stead's Patent Wooden Paving Company, at all times during the continuance of the same; and the plea then stated that the persons in the said Act mentioned, and thereby established into a joint stock company by the name of Stead's Patent Wooden Paving Company, had not purchased the said letters patent, or carried on any trade connected therewith; and that no such company as in and by the said Act was contemplated, and no company whatever under the name of Stead's Patent Wooden Paving Company, had been formed, or had had any existence, save as far as the said persons were established into such company by the said Act, by reason whereof Stead's Patent Wooden Paving Company had not at the said times when, &c. any existence, and the said Act and the provisions thereof, had become wholly inoperative, and the letters patent void. Verification.

The ninth plea was that, before the passing of the Act mentioned in the declaration of the 4 & 5 Vict. and after the expiration of four calendar months after the date of the letters patent in the declaration mentioned, letters patent bearing date the 29th Jan. in the second year of the reign of her present Majesty, were granted to the defendant, granting to him the sole privilege of using and vending an invention, of which the defendant was stated to be the inventor, certain improvements in paving or covering street roads, and other ways. The plea then set out such letters patent to the defendant and enrolment thereof in the usual manner, and then stated that the said invention of the defendant consisted of the application and combination of certain forms of blocks of stone, wood or other material in the paving or covering of roads streets, and other ways, and that the said invention of the defendant, when applied to blocks of wood was a material and substantial and bonâ fide improvement of and upon the said invention of the plaintiff but that the same could not be made, used, or exercised without at the same time making, using, and putting in practice the said invention of the plaintiff, and then justified the infringement of the plaintiff's patent in the using and exercising the invention of the defendant under the letters patent so granted to him. Verification.

To the seventh plea the plaintiff replied that the said letters patent in the declaration mentioned were granted for and in respect of a certain invention called and entitled "An invention of making or paving public streets and highways, and public and private roads, courts, and bridges, with timber and wooden blocks," and not for "The invention of making or paving public streets and highways, or public and private roads, courts, and bridges, with timber or wooden blocks," in manner and form as the defendant has above thereof in that behalf alleged. Conclusion to the country.

The plaintiff demurred generally to the eighth plea, and specially to the ninth plea, assigning, amongst other causes, that the ninth plea amounted to the general issue, and also that it sought to avoid the declaration by setting up matter which was no answer to the action.

The defendant demurred specially to the replication of the plaintiff to the seventh plea.

Shee, Serjt. for the plaintiff.—The eighth plea is bad on general demurrer. The question is, whether the omission of the plaintiff to enrol the specification within the time limited by his patent has not been completely cured by the Act set out in the declaration of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 91. One of the main objects of that Act was to confirm the letters patent; as it would have been useless to have established a company for working the invention, if the letters patent were void. It is submitted that the 31st section of that Act restores the plaintiff's right under the patent absolutely, without reference to the company being formed or not. The 31st section is as "And whereas the specification under the said first-recited letters patent, was enrolled six months after the date thereof, instead of four months after the date thereof, as provided by the said letters patent; and the non-enrolment in due time of such specification arose from inadvertence and wrong information given to the said David Stead, the grantee of the said letters patent, who was absent in foreign parts at the period of the expiration of four months after the date of the said letters patent, and it is expedient that such letters patent should notwithstanding be rendered valid to the extent and in in manner hereinafter mentioned; be it therefore enacted, that the said letters patent shall, during the remainder of the term of fourteen years, therein mentioned, be considered, deemed, and taken to be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if the specification thereunder so enrolled by the said David Stead six months after the date thereof, had been enrolled within four months after the date thereof." If this clause had been the only one, it could not be contended for a moment that the letters patent were made valid and subsisting, and there is nothing in the rest of the Act which has relation to the establishing of the company which can or ought to prevent this clause from so operating. The first section establishes into a joint-stock company, by the name of "Stead's Patent Wooden Paving Company," certain persons who are recited to have agreed to form themselves into a company, for the purpose of making or paving public streets and highways, and public and private roads, courts, and bridges, with timber or wooden blocks. The second section enacts, that the company shall be established for the purpose of purchasing the said letters patent, and the third section enables the plaintiff to assign the letters patent to the company; but there is nothing in the Act to make the confirmation of the letters patent depend on the formation of the company, or to control the thirty-first section, which, it is submitted, is an independent enactment. As to the ninth plea, that is open to the objections pointed out in the special demurrer. It is not clear whether the invention of the defendant is or not the same as the plaintiff's; if the plea means to assert that it is different, then it is bad, as amounting to the general issue.—[CRESSWELL, J.—The defendant is in this dilemma, if his patent does not include the invention of the plaintiff, he has no right to use the plaintiff's invention without his license; and if it does include the plaintiff's invention, then it is void, as being claimed for too much; but besides, it is not so pleaded.] As to the replication to the seventh plea, it is submitted that the replication is a good traverse of what is alleged in the plea. The plea in substance alleges that the patent was granted for an invention entitled "The invention of making," &c. and the plaintiff distinctly traverses this by saying, it was "An invention of making," &c. The plea, moreover, is, it is submitted, bad, in not shewing that the description in the patent of the invention is at variance with that in the specification. The specification should have been set out in the plea.

Manning, Serjt. (with him Rew), for the defendant.—First, as to the objection to the seventh plea, that is ground only of special demurrer. With regard to the objection to the replication, there is no coherence between the inducement and the traverse, and the inducement is a departure from the declaration. In the declaration the invention is said to be for paving, &c. "with timber or wooden blocks;" but in the replication it is said to be "with timber and wooden blocks," which is a departure. [CRESSWELL, J.—The title is not professed in the declaration to be set out.] The replication takes no sufficient traverse, it leaves unanswered the allegation in the plea that the title is too large. [CRESSWELL, J.—If you strike out the title which it traverses, nothing remains in the plea; you state in the plea what the title is, and then say that the said title is too large; that means the title so set out by you in the plea, and which the plaintiff has traversed: if you strike that out, then there remains nothing in the plea to which the word title can refer.] On an issue joined on this traverse, it would be sufficient for the plaintiff to shew that the invention was for the purpose described of paving, &c. and it would not be necessary to shew that the title of the invention was as described. The traverse is, that the letters patent were granted "not for" the invention, &c.; it does not say that the invention is not entitled so and so. [COLTMAN, J.—Your objection then is to the word "for" in the replication?] Yes.

TINDAL, C. J.—Perhaps if the strict grammatical sense is given to the word "for," some difficulty upon the replication may arise; but that is, I think, got rid of by the allegation "in manner and form as the defendant has above thereof in that behalf alleged;" because when we then look to the plea, we see how the defendant has alleged it, which is, that the invention was entitled in a particular manner. This forms the basis of the defendant's answer in that plea, and the plaintiff has well traversed it when he says that he did not take out the letters patent by that description.

Manning, Serjt. then, as to the objections to the eighth plea, contended that it was a bargain between the plaintiff and the public, through the legislature, that certain privileges should be conveyed to an intended joint stock company; that the whole object of the Act was to enable the invention to be worked by a company; that nothing in the thirty-first section pointed to the exercise of the patent by the plaintiff himself, and that as no company ever existed, the Act became nugatory.

TINDAL, C. J.—I think it is impossible to the thirty-first section and not see that the letters patent to Stead were confirmed absolutely, without imposing any condition. The thirty-first section has a preamble, which states a fact peculiar to these letters patent, namely, that the non-enrolment in due time of the specification arose from inadvertence and wrong information given to Stead, and then states that it is expedient that such letters patent should notwithstanding be rendered valid. It then does in express terms make them as valid as if the specification so enrolled by Stead six months had been enrolled within four months after date. There is no condition thereto annexed of the company being formed, or of the letters patent being sold to or purchased by the company. It seems that the defendant is endeavouring to turn into a condition what is merely collateral. If the validity of the letters patent were made to depend upon such collateral circumstances being carried into effect, there would be this injustice, which has been pointed out by my brother Coltman, you would make the letters patent liable to be defeated by other persons over whom Stead would have no control.

Manning, Serjt. as to the ninth plea, contended that the Act of 4 & 5 Vict. must have been obtained on a suggestio falsi or suppressio veri; that great injustice would be done by the legislature if, after the defendant had acquired a vested interest in a patent to him, for an invention involving as a groundwork what was the subject of another patent which had ended, such last patent should be revived and destroy the rights of the defendant under his patent; and it was submitted that the defendant's patent was good, unless the Court would say that, had it been brought before the notice of the legislature, the legislature would have sacrificed the rights of the defendant under it for the sake of Stead's patent.

The following authorities were cited as to the reasonable construction to be put on an Act of Parliament: Plowden, 398; Co. Litt. 381, b; the case of Alton Woods (1 Rep. 48, b), and Perry v. Skinner (' M. & W. 471 & 476).

TINDAL, C. J.—There is this difficulty of acceding to the argument of my brother Manning, that unless we give to the Act the operation of confirming the letters patent, we should give no force at all to the Act. The objection is, that this would occasion hardship to the defendant. I admit that there may be some hardship, but the same extends equally to the rest of the world; because, from the date of Stead's patent to the time they were reinstated by the Act, every subject in the country had a right to put the invention in practice; and several persons may have invested large sums of money on the faith of Stead's patent being gone. By the Act, Stead's patent was afterwards confirmed in substance as well as in words, and, for aught I know, the rights of the defendant may have been compensated by private agreement; there is no allegation of fraud, or that the matter was kept from him, and no suppressio veri can therefore be presumed. We should be speculating if we were to say that there had been either a suppressio veri or a suggestio falsi. As Stead's patent was confirmed to all intents and purposes, there is an answer to the defence set up in this plea.

COLTMAN, CRESSWELL, and ERLE, JJ. delivered similar judgments.

Manning, Serjt. then asked leave to amend, but the same was refused. Judgment for the plaintiff.

TOMLINSON, Clerk, v. SIR FLETCHER BOUGHEY.
Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 46—Issues.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the defendant should not accept an issue under 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 46. The plaintiff was the rector of the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, and the defendant was the devisee, under a will of certain lands within the parish. It appeared that a claim of exemption from tithes was made before the Tithe Commissioner in respect of fourteen different kinds of modus, of which five were decided in favour of the rector, and the remaining nine for the defendant. Of these nine, one was a parochial modus, and the rest were farm moduses. The yearly value of the tithes, in respect of all the lands covered by all the moduses, exceeded the sum of 20*l.*, but the yearly tithe in respect of each farm was under 20*l.*; and the question was, therefore, whether the rector was, under the 46th section, entitled to have an issue. Rule nisi.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, April 24.

CRELLIN v. CALVERT.
CRELLIN v. BROOKE.

The defendant, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit, pleads in abatement the nonjoinder of thirteen persons, upon which plea issue is joined, and the plaintiff begins at the trial, and proves that a certain bank consists of the thirteen persons mentioned in the plea and two others, and that the bank is indebted to plaintiff, but does not shew the defendant to have been a partner in the bank. The defendant cross-examines as to the amount due from the bank, and also as to the partners. Upon this evidence, none being offered by the defendant, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Held, Rolfe, B. dissentiente, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove the amount of his debt from the defendant, or to give other evidence of the defendant's being a partner in the bank, in order to entitle him to recover the amount due from the bank.

Where a person was a shareholder in a bank at A, the directors of which had, while he was a shareholder, established a branch bank at B, and there was a clause in the settlement empowering the directors to do so upon obtaining the assent of the shareholders,—Held, that the defendant, who continued to be a shareholder, was liable for a debt incurred by the branch bank some time after its establishment; and that it might either be presumed against him that the terms of the deed had been complied with, or that he had assented to the establishment of the branch bank on different terms.

In the case of Crellin v. Calvert, which was an action of assumpsit tried at the last summer assizes at Liverpool, the defendant pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of thirteen other persons, joint contractors, as co-defendants. At the trial, the plaintiff began, and gave evidence to contradict, by anticipation, the defendant's plea in abatement. He proved that a certain bank, called the Isle of Man Ban[illegible] in the plea, and two other[illegible] in all; but it did not appear whether the defendant was a shareholder or not. He also proved the amount due from the bank to the plaintiff. The defendant gave no evidence in support of his plea. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount of his claim.

In the case of Crellin v. Brooke, it appeared that the defendant became a shareholder in the Isle of Man Bank at its original constitution; that the business of the main bank was carried on at Douglas; that he signed the deed of settlement, which contained a clause empowering the directors, upon obtaining the consent of the shareholders, to be signified in a particular manner, to establish a branch bank at Castletown. It also appeared that a branch bank had been established at Castletown, but there was no evidence whether the preliminary consent had been obtained or not. While the defendant continued to be a shareholder, the branch bank became indebted to the plaintiff in the amount now sought to be recovered.

Watson, Q.C. having obtained a rule to set aside the verdicts for the plaintiffs, and for a new trial in each case, in the first upon the ground that the plaintiff ought to have gone on to prove the amount of his debt, and not having done so, was entitled only to nominal damages, and in the second upon the ground that there was no evidence to connect the defendant with the branch bank at Castletown,— Martin, Q. C. and Cowling now shewed cause against both rules at once.

Watson, Q. C. and Cleasby, contrà, citing Russell v. Bell (10 M. & W. 389); Pitchford v. Davies (5 M. & W. 2); Bourne v. Frink (9 B. & C. 632); Dickinson v. Valpy (10 B. & C. 138).

POLLOCK, C. B.—I am of opinion that the rule in each of these cases must be discharged. In the first case, I consider the simple question to be, whether there was evidence to go to the jury that the defendant was a partner in the Isle of Man Joint Stock Bank, and was therefore liable for the amount proved to be due from the bank to the plaintiff. It is admitted that if the defendant had begun and called a witness to prove that the thirteen persons named in the plea of abatement were partners in the bank, and the plaintiff in cross-examination had shewn that there were two others, it must then have been taken, the defendant having relied upon that partnership to prove his plea in abatement, that he himself was one of the partners; and when it appeared that, by reason of there being two other partners not named in the plea, the plaintiff must have a verdict, it would have been sufficient for him to have shewn the amount due from that partnership to him in order to fix the defendant. In the present case the plaintiff began, and he began by negativing the plea in abatement, by shewing that there were two other partners. The reason for his having begun is now intelligible, which it was not at first. The other case of Crellin v. Brooke had been tried first, and both parties knew very well what they were to prove. If the defendant's counsel had been so cautious as to ask no question at all, the case might have been different; but he cross-examined that witness called by the plaintiff as to the account itself, thus adopting that as the account between the parties, and he also cross-examined as to the existence of the persons named in the plea as partners in the Isle of Man Banking Company; and it appears to me that that produces precisely the same effect as if the defendant had himself called the witness. It was admitted at the bar that the latter course would have concluded the defendant. I think, therefore, that there was evidence to go to the jury that the defendant was a partner in the bank. In Crellin v. Brooke it appeared that the defendant became a shareholder in the Isle of Man Joint Stock Bank, the business of which was carried on at Douglas; that there was a clause in the deed empowering the directors to establish a branch bank at Castletown, as well as the principal one at Douglas, upon obtaining the consent of the shareholders as therein mentioned. A branch bank had been established at Castletown, but whether according to the terms of the deed or not, does not appear; and it was the branch bank which, while the defendant continued to be a shareholder, became indebted to the plaintiff. It is contended that there is no evidence that the directors had any power to establish the branch bank, and that the defendant was not shewn to be answerable for its liabilities. I am not at all prepared to say that without any clause at all in the deed the directors would not have had the power to establish the branch so as to bind the defendant; but it is contended that as the plaintiff has put the deed in evidence, it shews that they had no power to set up a branch bank, except upon certain conditions, which are not proved to have been complied with. Against the defendant, however, I think the verdict may be sustained in either of two ways. I think, if the defendant knew of the existence of the branch bank and did not shew that he had objected to it, the jury were warranted in concluding either the conditions were complied with, or if the concern were carried on without complaint, that the defendant had assented e it. I think, therefore, that this rule must also be discharged.

ROLFE, B.—In the first of these cases, Crellin v. Calvert, I have the misfortune to differ from my lord, and from my brother Platt. It was an action of indebitatus assumpsit, to which the defendant pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of thirteen persons, who were joint contractors. Upon this issue was joined. I take it, the course at the trial was clear. The issue was upon the defendant to prove that the contract was made between the plaintiff on the one hand, and on the other the defendant and the thirteen other persons jointly. It was proved that the thirteen, and also certain others, were partners in the bank, and the plea in abatement was consequently not proved. It seems to me that the result was that the plea in abatement was removed, and that the position of the parties was the same as if there had been no plea at all. But then there was evidence of a debt against the persons who were shareholders in the bank. That does not seem to me to affect the defendant. The defendant says, My contract was made jointly with thirteen other persons. It appears that a contract was made with fifteen persons, who are shareholders in the Isle of Man Bank, but of whom the defendant is not shewn to be one. Suppose the case had been that defendant had pleaded that he made the promise jointly with A, and all the evidence given was, that A and 150 other persons were partners in the Isle of Man Bank, but there was no evidence that the defendant was one of them, would that fix the defendant with any debt that was proved to be due from the bank? However, as I have a strong idea that substantial justice will be done by the judgment given by my brethren, I feel the less regret that my own view is wrong on this occasion, and will be deprived of its effect. With respect to the other case, I must confess that in that also I have had the very greatest doubts; but I think I now see my way to the same conclusion with the rest of the Court. Now, how does the plaintiff prove the liability of this defendant? He shews, what he did not shew in the other case, the execution of a deed by which defendant became a partner in the Isle of Man Bank. The defence in this case is quite of a different nature to the other. It is said here, the plaintiff deposited not with the original bank, but with a branch afterwards established at Castletown. The defendant says, "I was a partner to the deed, and became a partner in the Isle of Man Bank. I did not become a partner in the branch at Castletown, nor did I authorize its establishment. By becoming a partner in a bank at London, I should not give my consent to a branch at Newcastle." It is necessary to shew either that the branch at Castletown was established pursuant to his authority, or that he afterwards consented to and ratified its establishment. I cannot accede to the notion that you can presume any thing on the subject. The doubt I had was, whether there was evidence to warrant the jury in finding that, whether this was done in pursuance of the provisions of the deed or not, it was done in fact, and that the defendant ratified it. I doubted whether there was any evidence at all on the subject. These doubts are now so far removed that it would be idle, under the circumstances, to press them, and the leaning of my mind is now the other way. My Lord asked me what I would have said if the man had lived next door to the bank at Castletown. He does not live so near; but that makes it only a question of degree, and the question is, whether all the world did not know that this bank was being carried on.

PLATT, B.—In the first case, Mr. Watson maintained that the defendant was in the same position precisely as if he had suffered judgment by default. That is not precisely so. There was evidence at the trial of a debt of this amount due from the joint-stock company. That is the only evidence of any debt; surely it is for the jury, when it turns out that thirteen out of the fifteen shareholders are the very persons mentioned in the plea. In the other case, I agree with the rest of the Court. Rules discharged.

SITTINGS IN BANCO.

(Before Mr. Baron ALDERSON.)

Friday, April 25.

M'INTYRE v. SEWERS.

Where a cause is made a remanet by consent at the sittings after Term, and the plaintiff subsequently withdraws the record, and does not proceed to trial at the next sittings after Term: Held, that the defendant is not entitled to move for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, but must proceed by proviso if he wish to force the plaintiff to try.

In this case Butt, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule of Barstow, for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

It appeared that the cause had been entered for trial at the sittings after Term, and had been made a remanet by consent; after which, at the subsequent sittings, the record was withdrawn by the plaintiff; upon which the defendant obtained a rule nisi for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

The Court called on Barstow to support his rule.

Barstow.—We are clearly entitled to judgment, as the plaintiff ought to have proceeded to try at the ensuing sittings after the cause was made a remanet, instead of which he has withdrawn the record.

ALDERSON, B.—Surely, if the party has gone down to try, he has complied with the requirements of the 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, and you cannot have your rule for a nonsuit.

Barstow.—But here the plaintiff has withdrawn the record, which puts him in default. Gadd v. Burnett (2 B. & Al. 709) is a case in point in favour of the defendant. There the cause had been set down for the sittings in Term, and made a remanet by consent to the sittings after Term; after which the plaintiff withdrew the record. Now, in that case it was insisted, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the cause having been once carried down to trial by the plaintiff, he had complied with the terms of 14 Geo. 2, c. 17; and King v. Peppett (1 Term R. 429), and Newham v. Langley (3 Term R. 1), were cited. But there the Court held that the cause having been made a remanet at the sittings in London or Westminster, differed from the case of a cause made a remanet at an assize, which was the distinction between that case and those cited on behalf of the plaintiff from the Term Reports; and that in that case, the Court held that the cause having been made a remanet by consent, did not prevent the defendant from moving for a nonsuit. It is mere illusion to take down a cause for trial, and after it is made a remanet to withdraw the record, for the defendant has no opportunity to try.

Butt, Q. C. contrà.

ALDERSON, B.—I do not see the distinction between a cause made a remanet by consent at the sittings after Term, and one made a remanet at the assizes; and there is no case in the books that I know of, which shews that the defendant is entitled to judgment as in case of a nonsuit, if the plaintiff does not proceed to try at the next assize after the cause has been entered for trial at the previous assize, and made a remanet by consent. Now, in the case cited by Mr. Barstow, the cause was entered for trial at the sittings in Term, and there, if the record had not been withdrawn by the plaintiff, it would have come on as the first cause in the sittings after Term, without fresh notice of trial. Now in the present case, the cause was entered and made a remanet in the sittings after Term, which are in the nature of an assize; and I believe that even a fresh notice of trial is necessary. If the defendant wishes to try, he should have entered the cause by proviso.

Rule discharged.

NESBIT v. BUCANNON.

Security for costs.

Dowdeswell moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff's attorney to shew cause why he should not give security for costs in this action, on the ground that the plaintiff was not to be found in this country, and that he had been insolvent very lately; or why he should not give the name of the place of abode of the plaintiff. Rule nisi in the alternative.

ANONYMOUS.

Attachment—Subpœna—Excuse for not obeying.

Payne moved for an attachment against a gentleman, who, he stated, was a clergyman residing at Lincoln, for not obeying a subpœna issued in the cause of Goodwin v. Raynes. It appeared that the cause had been entered for trial at the last assize for York and that the subpœna was personally served on the clergyman at Lincoln on Monday, the 17th of March, and the subpœna required him to be at York to give evidence on the 21st, which happened to be Good Friday. At the time of the service of the subpœna, 2*l.* 10s. was given him, to the amount of which he objected, as being too little; upon which a letter was sent to him by a special messenger with 2*l.* 10s. more, and informing him that the cause would be tried on the Good Friday, soon after morning divine service. This was given to his wife, as he was not at home; his wife stating that he would be home in an hour, and that she would give the letter to him (the contents being explained to her). The cause was not tried until the Saturday, when the party who subpœnaed the witness lost his verdict, owing (it was sworn) to the witness being a material one, and not being there to give evidence.

ALDERSON, B.—I do not think the attachment can go; you do not shew conclusively that he could have obeyed the subpœna. The clergyman is summoned to attend on Good Friday, when he has his parochial duties to attend to; and it may be he could not get any other clergyman to do his duty for him. Surely this would be a good excuse for not obeying the subpœna, and if you do not shew that this was not so, I cannot say that there may not be good reason for his non-attendance. Rule refused.

GOSLIN v. COTTERELL.

Where a larger sum than 20l. is indorsed on the back of a writ of summons, the Court will set aside a writ of trial before the sheriff issued in the cause, and will not allow an amendment of the writ, although the particulars only claim 17l.

In this case Pearson had obtained a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the writ of trial in this cause, and all other proceedings thereon, should not be set aside with costs, on the ground that the sum claimed by the indorsement on the back of the writ of summons was for more than 20*l.*

Arnold now shewed cause, and prayed time to amend the indorsement, stating that the sum claimed in the particulars of demand was only 17*l.*

ALDERSON, B.—I have no power to allow that amendment; all the judges have agreed not to allow any amendment.

Arnold.—My lord, there is a case in Dowling's Practice Cases where such an amendment has been allowed.

ALDERSON, B.—I have no doubt there is. You may find a case there for any thing. I have no power to allow the amendment. I dare say, if the defendant had allowed judgment to go by default, you would have been glad enough to have had the costs taxed on the highest scale. Rule absolute.

BACANNAN v. WRIGHT.

Motion to set aside a distringas and subsequent proceedings, on the ground of want of notice.

Lush moved to set aside the distringas and all subsequent proceedings in this case, on affidavits shewing that the defendant had never had any notice of any action having been brought against her until after the judgment was signed. Rule nisi.

LAMPART v. NEWTON.

Practice.

Amending plea—Stay of proceedings after—When it expires—Rule to reply.

In this case Cobbett moved to set aside a rule to reply which had been obtained by the plaintiff, and it appeared that the defendant, after replication pleaded, had obtained leave to amend his third plea, the proceedings to be stayed in the meantime, and the plaintiff to have liberty to reply de novo if he thought fit. The defendant having amended his plea, ruled the plaintiff to reply, and the defendant now sought to set aside that rule, on the ground that the stay of proceedings applied to both plaintiff and defendant, and, therefore, that the plaintiff had as long as he liked to reply in.

ALDERSON, B.—The moment the amended plea is delivered, the stay of proceedings is over, therefore their ruling you to reply is perfectly regular. The stay of proceedings is entirely for the defendant, to give him time to amend his plea. The moment that is done you are in the same position as when the plea was first pleaded, and you have the same time to reply. If you want additional time to reply, you should apply for it in the usual way.

Cobbett then prayed time to reply.

ALDERSON, B.—Take a week.

Rule accordingly.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ON ERRORS FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

(Argued November 27, 1844, and February 3, 1845 Determined April 22, 1845.)

(Before TINDAL, C. J., PARKE and ALDERSON, ROLFE and PLATT, BB. and COLTMAN, MAULE, CRESSWELL, and ERLE, JJ.)

DOWNMAN v. JONES.

1. If a person enter into a contract in writing, and describe himself as agent, and name his principal, the principal is bound, if the agent had authority to contract on behalf of his principal.
2. An undertaking in these terms,—" Your bill of charges in this matter, amounting to 527l. 5s. I also undertake on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile and Co. to pay," signed H. R. D. held, on the face of it to be an undertaking by D. as agent.
3. Where, on the face of an undertaking, it purports to be entered into by a person as agent, it lies on the party seeking to charge him thereon to shew either that there was no such agency or authority, or that the authority, such as it was, has been exceeded.

This was a writ of error from the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench on a special verdict (4 Q. B. Rep. 235, n), that Court having ordered judgment to be entered for the plaintiff. The declaration stated that a commission of bankruptcy had issued against John Waters, Arthur Jones, and David Jones; that before and at the time of issuing the fiat, Waters was indebted to the plaintiff in 53*l*. 7s. 2d.; that 40*l*. 6s. 6d. was due to the plaintiff below for work, &c. in preparing a marriage settlement, and that Waters and D. Jones were indebted to the plaintiff in 527*l*. 5s. for work, &c. by the plaintiff, as their attorney. That plaintiff had proved the first debt against Waters's estate, the second against D. Jones's, and the third against the separate estate of Waters and D. Jones, but had received no dividend, of which the defendant had notice. That in consideration of the premises, and that plaintiff, at defendant's request, would expunge the said three proofs, and would agree to look to the trustees of the said marriage settlement for payment of the second debt, defendant promised to pay him the first and third debts. The declaration then averred that the plaintiff authorized such proofs to be expunged, and agreed to look to the trustees as before mentioned, and that the proofs were accordingly expunged; and that although the two first-mentioned debts had been duly paid according to the agreement above mentioned, yet the defendant had not paid, or arranged any mode of paying, the third debt. There was a second count on an account stated.

Pleas.—1. Non assumpsit. 2. As to the first count, that the contract was duly rescinded. 3. Also as to the first count, that the promise was special to answer for the debts of other persons, and that no agreement or memorandum was made in writing, or signed by the defendant or his agent, according to the Statute of Frauds.

On these pleas issues were taken. The cause was tried before Mr. Justice Coleridge in the Spring Assizes, 1839, but subsequently a special verdict was found, with leave of the Court, and the verdict was to be entered for the plaintiff for 527*l*. 5s. and interest as the Court might direct. The Court of Queen's Bench delivered a long and elaborate judgment, founded on their view of the facts of the case, in which they gave judgment for the plaintiff, on the ground that it was impossible to ascertain with certainty whether the letter set forth in the verdict, and which was alleged to constitute the undertaking of the defendant, did create a personal liability in him or not, and that the special verdict disclosed evidence from which inferences might fairly be drawn in favour of either conclusion. The inference which the Court, however, actually drew from the facts, was that the defendant below had only a special authority, clearly limited in extent by the principals, and falling short of sanctioning the particular undertaking; that no action would therefore lie on the undertaking against the principal, and, consequently, that the defendant below must be held to have made himself personally liable. We think it unnecessary to set out the long detail of circumstances in this case. The principle of law relied on by the Court of Exchequer Chamber may be sufficiently understood by a perusal of the judgment, with the following letter:—

"Church-street, 26th November, 1844.

"My dear Sir,—Your bill of costs against Mr. John Waters, for business connected with the marriage settlement, amounting to 53*l*. 7s. 2d. I undertake to have paid to you. Perhaps I may be enabled to hand you the money to-morrow. The lease or leases of Treventy, &c. you will have the goodness to hold for Messrs. Sir James Esdaile and Co. who claim to be entitled to the benefit resulting therefrom."

"Pembrey Works.

"Your bill of charges in this matter, amounting to 527*l*. 5s. I also undertake (on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile and Co.) to pay, and will arrange with you the time and mode immediately after the dividend meetings; in the meantime, and until this be completed, the documents you hold will be sufficient security. For the amounts thus secured (including Mr. D. Jones's, which you have agreed to look to the trustees under the marriage settlement for), I beg to inclose an authority to the commissioners under the bankruptcy of Waters, Jones, and Co. to expunge from your proofs. I forwarded the draft agreement with Messrs. Esdaile and Co. on Thursday, the 13th instant, and have not yet received it back. I, however, consider the principle as agreed on, and will lose no time in having it forwarded so as to act on it with respect to the appropriation of the dividends. With respect, I remain, &c.

"H. R. DOWNMAN."

Chilton, Q.C. (E. V. Williams with him), appeared for the plaintiff in error.

J. Evans, Q.C. (Henderson with him), for the defendant in error.

Chilton.—The question is, whether the defendant below is personally liable or merely agent of Messrs. Esdaile under circumstances which made them only liable to the plaintiff? When the defendant is only contracting nominally as agent, the burden of proof that he has no authority to bind his principal lies on the plaintiff. In Mr. J. Storey's Commentaries on the Law of Agency, p. 225, s. 263, the rule is thus laid down:—"When an agent makes an oral or verbal contract as agent for another, and at the same time names his principal, he is not personally bound thereby;" and so also in Paley's Treatise on Principal and Agent (last ed. p. 368). In Ex parte Hartop (12 Vesey, 352), Lord Erskine limited the rule very sensibly, and the defendant below admits and adopts the distinction. "No rule of law is better ascertained or stands upon a stronger foundation than this; that where an agent names his principal, the principal is responsible, not the agent. But for the application of that rule, the agent must name his principal as the person to be responsible." Here Downman named his principals, and named them as responsible, and Jones relied on their responsibility. He held himself out to Jones as having full authority to bind Esdaile. The cases cited below are clearly distinguishable. Macheath v. Haldimand (1 T. R. 172), cited for the dictum of Buller, J. about letters, merely shews that when the letter is dubious, the plaintiff must clear up the doubt. Haines v. Finch (Alleyn, 6) is a doubtful authority. In Meriel v. Wynandale (Hard. 205) the undertakers are held not to have given a sufficient undertaking to bind the principal. In Harley v. Bell (Ambl. 778), if the commissioners who gave the undertaking are not liable, no one else was; and Eaton v. Bell (5 B. & Ald. 34) is to the same effect. Appleton v. Binks (5 East, 148) was strongly relied on by the plaintiff below. That was a case of agreement under seal. The express covenant by the defendant for himself and his heirs, on behalf of Lord Rokeby, would not bind Lord Rokeby without a power of attorney, and ought even then to have expressly bound him. In Burrell v. Jones (3 B. & Ald. 47) there was an express undertaking by the attorneys to pay, and they had no power to bind their principals. Holroyd, J. expressly put his judgment on that footing. Hall v. Ashurst (1 C. & M. 714) was another case strongly relied on by the plaintiff below. But Lord Lyndhurst, in his judgment, relied on three grounds: 1st, that the defendant was an attorney, without any power to bind the principal; 2nd, that the letter was in express terms of personal obligation—"I undertake to pay, &c.;" and 3rd, that the person in the country to whom the letter was addressed, could not know who the London creditors were for whom the defendant undertook to pay. Now, suppose, instead of unknown London creditors, the house of Esdaile had been expressly named by Mr. Ashurst. But Johnson v. Ogilby (3 P. Wms. 277), also the case of an undertaking by an attorney, is expressly in point for the defendant below. There it was held, that when an attorney for and on behalf of his client, promised to pay 500*l*. to the plaintiff, being done by the authority of the client, the attorney is not liable, but only the client; secus, if the attorney had no authority from his client to make the engagement. [CRESSWELL, J.—That shews the distinction between Hall v. Ashurst and this case.] Spittle v. Lavender (2 B. & B. 455), per Dallas, C.J. shews the intention must be gathered by a reasonable exposition of the instrument. Here it must be assumed that the defendant was authorized to act as agent. The onus probandi that defendant had not authority, lies on the plaintiff. (Wilson v. Barthrop, 2 M. & W. 863.)

J. Evans, contrà.—The Court of Queen's Bench has decided, first, that the defendant had no authority to bind Messrs. Esdaile; and second, that he might render himself liable, although contracting as agent. No case has been cited to shake the last position. In Jones v. Littledale (6 Ad. & Ell. 486), Lord Denman says:—"If the agent contracts in such a form as to make himself personally responsible, he cannot afterwards, whether his principal were or were not known at the time of the contract, relieve himself from that responsibility." And this dictum is adopted by the Court in Higgins v. Senior (8 M. & W. 845). The distinction is, that the party may sign as agent, but if he makes the contract in his own name, he is personally bound. That is the ground of Mr. J. Bayley's judgment in Burrell v. Jones (3 B. & Ald. 50): "The language of an instrument is to be taken most strongly against the party using it. Now, when the defendants used these words, 'We undertake to pay,' they in effect say that they are the persons to whom the other party is to look for payment." The same distinction is drawn by Lord Lyndhurst, in Hall v. Ashurst: "The ground of my judgment is, that the letter shews precisely that the defendant contracted personally with the plaintiff. It is a contract that he would bear and pay for other persons, not a contract on behalf of other persons to bear and pay." [CRESSWELL, J.—The defendant here makes a contract for Messrs. Esdaile, but does not undertake to pay.] The undertaking is here by him to do something. Appleton v. Binks is on all fours with the present case. There is no distinction in its being by deed. That distinction was raised in Norton v. Herron (Ry. & Moo. 229), and expressly overruled by Best, C. J. That was an agreement expressed to be made by the defendant on behalf of A. B. on the one part, and the plaintiff of the other part, and he stipulated to execute a lease of certain premises to the plaintiff. The premises were proved to belong to A.B. and it was held that the defendant was personally liable. The plaintiff relied on Appleton v. Binks, and Burrell v. Jones; but the defendant answered that there was a distinction between deeds and parol agreements. Best, C.J. however said—"The defendant has clearly and in terms made himself responsible, although he commences by describing himself as agent. No such distinction as that contended for exists." When the contract is made in his own name, the agent is liable, although the principal may be liable also. Mr. J. Story, in pl. 269 (Comment. on Agency) lays down: "A person contracting as agent will be personally liable, whether he is known to be an agent or not, in all cases where he makes the contract in his own name, or voluntarily incurs a personal responsibility, either express or implied." And (Paley, 381) "when an agent contracts in his own name, though on behalf of the principal, he is bound, whether he has authority or not. (1 Sugden, Vend. and Pur. 83, 10th ed. citing Appleton v. Binks, &c.) In Story (pl. 147), the rule is distinctly laid down, that to bind a principal, the contract must purport on its face to be his contract, and his name must appear on it; and although to this rule there are exceptions (pl. 161), they do not apply to this case. In Story (pl. 269), where the rule and the cases of personal liability by an agent are enumerated, the commentator gives the reason as follows: "That from the form of the transaction, the agent has become a direct personal party to the contract, and his promise and liability are precisely the same as those of any other person drawing or indorsing, or accepting a bill, or signing a note." Now here the agent has clearly made himself a "direct personal party." He says, "I undertake on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile." No case can be found where the personal pronoun "I" has been used, though coupled with a statement of being "on behalf" of another, where the person using it has not been held responsible. All the cases cited contrà are different. In Burrell v. Jones (3 B. & Ald. 51), where the expression was, "We, as solicitors, undertake," Holroyd, J. says, "If the solicitors are not bound personally, nobody is; for the assignees are not. The import of the instrument is, not that the assignees undertake, through the medium of their solicitors, but that they, the solicitors themselves, undertake." So here, there is no contract with Messrs. Esdaile. They cannot be sued. The letter does not profess to bind them. [TINDAL, C. J.—The undertaking, "I, as solicitor," is very different from "on behalf of." PARKE, B. The question is, whether it purports to bind Messrs. Esdaile. TINDAL, C. J.—Appleton v. Binks turned on the mode of executing the deed.] The distinction was repudiated in Norton v. Herron (Ry. & M.). [PARKE, B.—That was a nisi prius case.] There may be a distinction between parol and writing, but there is none between a written agreement and a deed. Appleton v. Binks is stronger than this case. It was a covenant that Lord Rokeby should do certain acts. In the case of solicitors, the confidence reposed in the solicitor has not been the ground of the decision. The courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer have not decided this question. The court of Queen's Bench have decided that Downman had no authority to bind Esdailes. But it is not necessary to decide the question whether he had authority; and he has adopted a form of undertaking which creates a personal liability in him. Any doubt on the terms of the instrument must be construed against the party using the words. It has been asked, on whom is the onus? The question arises from a misconception. It is not an action for deceit, for pretending to act without authority, but assumpsit on the contract. The rules cited on the other side from Story, pl. 263-4, are not applicable. They only refer to cases where the principal is supposed to contract. The agent is not discharged, though Esdailes are liable. [PARKE, B.—The question is, whether he purports to contract as agent? If he did so mean, and he had authority, Esdailes are liable.] No doubt in Appleton v. Binks and Norton v. Herron, the agent intended to contract as agent. When the principal purports to contract, and the agent signs for him, no action can be brought against the agent. But if the agent make a personal engagement, it is immaterial to his liability whether he had authority or not. As to the cases cited by the plaintiff in error. In Johnson v. Ogilby (3 P. Wms.) the contract was in the name of the principal, and the agent might be liable in an action on the case. In Ex parte Heslop (12 Vesey) it is laid down that the agent must name the principal as responsible. Here he names himself. In Spittle v. Lavender (2 Brod. & Bing. 452) the adoption by the principal was part of the same transaction. Richardson, J. distinguishes the case expressly from Appleton v. Binks: "By the head of the agreement, it is clearly expressed that Lavender acted only as agent; and further, that he agreed for Randall, his heirs and executors, which distinguishes this case from Appleton v. Binks." Ledbetter v. Farren was an action on a bill.

Cur adv. vult.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—The only question for the determination of the court of error arises on the first issue joined between the parties; namely, whether, upon the facts found by the jury in their special verdict as to the issue on the plea of non-assumpsit, the jury ought to find that the defendant below, the now plaintiff in error, did promise in the manner and form the plaintiff below has alleged? But as to the second and last issue, in which the Court of Queen's Bench have directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiff below, and have given judgment accordingly, there was no real question made in the course of the argument before us that the verdict as to those pleas or the judgment thereon ought to be disturbed; nor, indeed is there any valid ground of objection against either. As to the first issue, the Court of Queen's Bench, when the matter was argued before them in the form of a special case, came to the conclusion that the letter written by the defendant on the 25th of November, 1834, on which the action is grounded, was framed in such terms as to make it impossible to ascertain with certainty, merely from the language in the letter, whether it created a personal liability by the defendant or not, and that the special case disclosed evidence from which the inferences might fairly be drawn in favour of either conclusion. But that Court, at the same time, reasoning on the facts which were placed before them in the special case, and availing themselves of the power of drawing inferences from the facts stated, arrived at the conclusion that Downman had only a special authority, clearly limited in extent by the principals, and falling short of sanctioning the particular undertaking: that no action would therefore lie on the undertaking against the principal; and, consequently, that the defendant below must be held to have made himself personally liable. And looking at the terms of the letter itself, and, still more, calling in aid of its construction the correspondence in the special verdict, which preceded and gave rise to that letter, and which may be considered as part of the same transaction, we think it imports upon the face of it an undertaking made by Downman as agent for the Esdailes; and that the special verdict does not state, either directly or by necessary implication from the facts found, the want of authority on his part to make such undertaking, or any excess of his authority in making it. As to the first part, the very terms of the letter itself, "I undertake, on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile and Company, to pay," would seem to us, in their natural meaning, to point rather to a promise made by one person as agent for another, than as intended to bind the parties speaking in the character of principals; for on the latter supposition there would appear to be no reason whatever for mentioning the names of the principals. To say the least, however, the expression is capable of bearing misconstruction; and when contrasted with the expression used by the defendant in the part of the same letter immediately preceding, namely, "Your bill of costs, amounting to 53*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.* I undertake to have paid to you," the distinction taken between the two modes of expression strongly confirms the interpretation we think it demanded for itself. But the letter written by the defendant to the plaintiff below, and date the 11th of November, 1834, informs him "that Messrs. Esdaile cannot have the deeds of the Pembrey estates without the payment of the plaintiff's bill," and the sum of 527*l.* 5*s.* mentioned in the declaration, which the defendant states he has told the plaintiff below the Messrs. Esdaile would do; and he then continues, "I am now ready to enter into any agreement to that effect." The plaintiff, by his answer to that letter, written on the 17th November, with respect to the above-mentioned debt of 527*l.* 5*s.* states himself ready to enter into such agreement as the defendant had produced, and to sign a written authority to enable him to expunge the proof of the debt, leaving it to be settled and paid by Messrs. Esdaile and Company, according to such agreement. And that letter then further states that, as to the bills, amounting to 53*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.* he will deliver up some pieces, on which he claims a lien, with many thanks for the promise to have it paid him. Upon comparing together the language of the letter of the 26th of November with the language of that to which we have just adverted, we think the necessary result of the undertaking on which the action was brought was, as we have before stated, an undertaking given by the defendant, as agent of Messrs. Esdaile, and not given in his own individual capacity, and that it was so understood to be given by the parties themselves. On the part of the defendant in error, however, it was contended by Evans, that in point of law, the letter of the 26th of November must necessarily import an undertaking by Downman, the defendant, in his own individual capacity, and that it could not be construed as an undertaking which should bind the principal. If such should be the necessary construction in point of law, there would be an end of all further doubt; but we think none of the cases referred to establish that position. In Appleton v. Binks, on which the most reliance was placed, the only point decided was that a man who covenanted for himself and his heirs under his own hand and seal for the act of another, should be personally liable, though he described himself as agent in the deed; a very different proposition from that now before us; for the question before us is, that if a person enter into a contract in writing, and describes himself as agent, and naming his principal, whether the principal shall be bound, provided the agent had authority to enter into the contract on his behalf; a point which we consider too clear to admit of doubt or argument. If, then, this contract, upon its legal construction, be, as it appears to us, it is a contract entered into by the agent on behalf of his principal, the only ground on which the agent could become personally liable on his contract is that laid down by Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Law of Agency, so often referred to in the course of the argument. But even if the law be as is there laid down, in order to create or let in such personal liability, the want of authority on the part of the agent must be found by the jury; and as the letter of the 26th of November is the plaintiff's evidence, and the only evidence by which he affects the defendant, whether as agent or principal, and as such liability is on the face of the letter the liability of agent, we think the burden is imposed on the plaintiff below of shewing by clear proof that there was no such agency or authority as is stated in such letter, or that his authority, such as it was, has been exceeded. But we all agree in thinking that on the facts stated in this special verdict, such defect of authority is neither found by the jury directly, nor is it to be inferred by necessary implication from the facts found. We therefore think the judgment of the Court below, so far as relates to the first issue, is to be reversed, and the judgment thereon entered for the plaintiff in error; and as to the residue, the judgment is to be affirmed. Reversed as to the first issue; affirmed as to the rest.

BAIL COURT.

Saturday, April 26.
(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

REG. v. HODGES.

When an application is made to remove into this court an indictment found at an inferior court, upon a suggestion that difficult points of law will most likely arise, such points should be specifically stated.

On a former day (April 25), F. V. Lee applied for a certiorari to remove into this court an indictment found at the Central Criminal Court against the defendant, for perjury committed before one of the commissioners of bankruptcy, under a proceeding taken by virtue of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 12, in swearing that "he verily believed he had a good defence to the demand;" and, in support of the application, it was sworn that difficult questions of law would be likely to arise, particularly as to the construction of the said Act of Parliament, and as to what constituted a good defence to an action.

COLERIDGE, J. having taken time to consider, now delivered his judgment as follows.—This was an application for a certiorari to remove an indictment for perjury into this court, on the suggestion that difficulties in points of law would arise, first, as to the construction of the Bankrupt Act, the 5 & 6 Vict.; and, secondly, that it would be a question as to what amounts to a good defence to an action at law. Now, although there are some cases in which, from their very nature, this general allegation would be sufficient, this is one in which the rule that requires that the specific objections should be pointed out to the Court applies. I am in general not disposed to place much confidence in this general statement, and I think that this is just one of those cases in which it ought to be shewn what are the points of law expected to arise. It is quite impossible, from this affidavit, to see how any difficulties are to arise in the case, and that being so, I think I ought to refuse the writ. Certiorari refused.

JONES v. BUTLER.

Quære, whether the sheriff has jurisdiction, under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, to try an issue joined in an action of debt and detinue?

It is a good objection to a cause being tried before the sheriff that the amount recovered will be under 40s. and that the sheriff has no power to certify to deprive plaintiff of his costs.

Sir John Bayley moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why this cause should not be tried before the sheriff of Cardiganshire, and why the indorsement on the writ of summons should not be amended. This was an action of debt and detinue, brought to recover the price of a saddle and bridle, which had been originally lent by the plaintiff to the defendant upon the terms that if he did not return them within a month he should pay 30*s.* for them. The defendant pleaded, "Never indebted," and that "he does not detain them." Application had been made to Mr. Baron Rolfe, at chambers, for an order to try the cause before the sheriff, but in consequence, as it was suggested, of there being no amount indorsed on the back of the writ, and of doubts existing whether an action of debt and detinue could be tried by the sheriff, his lordship refused the order. It was now argued that as, according to the decision of the Common Pleas in Walker v. Lee (1 Dowl. N.S. 220), detinue alone is triable before the sheriff, an action of debt and detinue combined is surely so. As regards the non-indorsement on the writ, it was sought to have it amended on the authority of Eccles v. Cole (8 M. & W. 537).

COLERIDGE, J.—Won't you be met with this objection,—that as you only seek to recover thirty shillings, the case ought not to be sent to the sheriff, who has no power to certify to deprive you of costs?

Bayley.—There may be no court of requests in which to bring the action.

COLERIDGE, J.—You could sue in the county court. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

Quære, whether the six months within which a certiorari must be moved for to remove an order of sessions runs from the time of the making the order, when it is the subject of an appeal, or from the period when the appeal is determined?

Under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, continued by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, it is proper for the justices to direct a fixed sum to be paid over out of the highway rate, for the repair of a turnpike road, and not a proportion of the rate.

An order directing that the sum of 9l. 5s. "being a portion of the rate or assessment levied, or to be levied, by virtue of the statute passed in the sixth year of the reign, &c. intituled, &c. shall be paid by the surveyor," &c. sufficiently describes what rate is intended.

Wordsworth shewed cause against a rule nisi obtained by Hawkins for a certiorari to bring into this court an order made by two justices at a petty sessions in Hertfordshire, whereby it was ordered that "the sum of 9*l.* 5*s.* being a portion of the rate levied by virtue of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50 (the General Highway Act) should be paid by the surveyor of the highways of the parish of Bygrave to the commissioners of the Baldock and Bournbridge turnpike roads."

From the facts of the case it appeared that an information having been exhibited by the clerk of the turnpike trust called the Baldock and Bournbridge Trust, to two justices, "at a special sessions of the highways, holden at the Bull Inn at Royston, in and for the division of the hundred of Odsey, in the county of Hertford, on the 21st day of June, 1843," that the funds of the said trust were wholly insufficient for the repair of the turnpike road called the Baldock and Bournbridge Trust, situate in the parish of Bygrave, in the said county, and praying the justices to make an order in the premises, the justices heard the parties, and having examined the revenues and debts of the trust, and the state and condition, and the repairs of the said road within the parish, they adjudged and ordered "that the sum of 9*l.* 5*s.* being a portion of the rate or assessment levied or to be levied by virtue of the statute passed in the 6th year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, entitled," &c. should be paid by the surveyor or surveyors of the highways of the said parish of Bygrave, on or before the 1st day of August, 1843, to the commissioners of the said turnpike trust, &c. Against this order an appeal was entered at the quarter sessions for the county, which, after several adjournments, was finally heard in April, 1844, when the order of petty sessions was confirmed with costs. Subsequently, a rule for a certiorari was obtained to bring up the order of quarter sessions, and pending that rule, the present rule was obtained to bring up the order of petty sessions. On the argument, the former rule was made absolute, on the ground that several magistrates who were interested in the result took part in the trial of the appeal. Upon this at the same time application was made to discharge the present rule as altogether unnecessary, since the justices, in returning the order of quarter sessions, would of course also return the order of petty sessions upon which it was founded. It was, however, arranged that this rule should stand over until it should be seen whether or not the order of petty sessions would in fact be returned. The return to the certiorari having been made, and the order of quarter sessions having been returned without the order of petty sessions, this rule came on for argument. (Reg. v. The Justices of Herefordshire, 4 L. T. 291.)

Wordsworth took two preliminary objections: 1st, that this certiorari had become unnecessary by the former proceedings, and that the justices ought not to be harassed by two motions, when the original application could well have included both orders; 2nd, that this motion is out of time, more than six months having elapsed since the making of the order and the application for the writ.

Hawkins, contrà.—As regards the first objection, this application has been rendered necessary by the omission of the justices to return the order of petty sessions; and as regards the second objection, we could not, pending the appeal, have applied for this writ; we came to the Court within six months of the decision of the court of quarter sessions, which was in good time. (Rule 1 Anne, cited in 1 Salkeld, 147; Rex v. Sparrow, 2 T. R. 196.)

Wordsworth then shewed cause on the merits.—It is said that this order is bad on three grounds: 1st, because it does not shew that it was made by justices acting for the division in which the parish is situate; 2nd, that the order does not state what proportion of the rate is to be handed over to the commissioners; and, 3rd, that it is uncertain as to what rate the amount is to be taken from. As regards the first objection, the act of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, which is continued by the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, and which is the statute under which this order made; unlike the 4 & 5 Wm. 4 c. 50, contains no provision that the petty sessions shall be held within the division in which the highway is situate; but merely enacts that "it shall be lawful for the justices at any special sessions for the highways, upon information," &c. That as to the second objection, there is a distinct direction as to the amount to be paid over; and as the word of the Act is "portion," and not "proportion," the order is sufficiently clear and explicit upon this point. As to the third objection, the order clearly means the rate to be levied for the repair of the roads by virtue of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50.

Hawkins, contrà.—1st. It was clearly the intention of the legislature that the petty sessions should be holden in the division where the road is situate, otherwise parties might hold a sessions at one end of the county for a highway at another. (Reg. v. Martin, 2 Q. B. 1037; Re Peerless, 1 Q.B. 143.) No other justices have jurisdiction, but those acting for the division; and here it in no way appears that the parish in question was within the division where the sessions were held. 2nd. The justices should have specified the proportion of the rate, and not have named a precise sum, since as no rate can exceed 10d. in the pound, nor can more than 2s. 6d. in the pound, being the amount of three rates, be collected in one year; the amount awarded may, according to this method of directing payment, exceed the legal amount to be levied. 3rd. The order directs "that the sum of 9*l.* 5s. being a portion of the rate or assessment levied," &c. and does not point out what rate is meant, or whether the amount is to come from one or more rates, and is therefore uncertain and bad on its face.

COLERIDGE, J.—As regards the first of these objections, and the preliminary point as to time, I will look at the affidavits. As to the two last objections, I have no doubt whatever that there is nothing in them. The Act of Parliament makes use of the word "portion;" but it is said that this word must be read as though it were "proportion;" but as the Act does not require this in terms, there must be some strong implication to make this necessary; this argument is founded on the duty of the magistrates to examine the state of the revenues and the repairs and the length of the road, and to find how much is turnpike road. But see how uncertain would be any such proceeding as that contended for; one mile of the road might require a great deal of repair, whilst another very little or none at all. If the justices have given an improper sum, that would be merits, and might be the subject of an appeal, but is certainly not an objection upon the face of the order. We cannot infer that if one-third of the road requires repair, that one-third of the rate would be the proper amount to direct to be paid over. Then it is said that it is not mentioned out of what rate the amount is to be paid, and this objection is chiefly founded upon the fact that the Act permits three rates to be levied; but they have no right to levy a second rate till the first is found to be insufficient; the order speaks of a rate sufficiently certain.

Cur. adv. vult on the other points.

On Friday his lordship gave judgment on the other points.

COLERIDGE, J. said that this was an application for a certiorari directing the justices to return an order of petty sessions, in order that it might be quashed. It was objected that as a rule had already been obtained to return the order of quarter sessions by which this order was confirmed, and as it must be presumed that the original order of petty sessions was at the quarter sessions, that this rule was unnecessary and vexatious. Now this would be perfectly true if the magistrates had returned the original order with the order of quarter sessions; but if they had not done so, as appears to have been really the case, this rule has become necessary and proper. There was another preliminary objection, that this motion was out of time in having been made more than six months from the making of the order; but it is well settled that in a case like this the six months run from the time when the order is confirmed. This brings me to the objections on the face of the order, and it is said that the justices who made it had no jurisdiction. The order is made by two justices of the county of Hereford, holding a special sessions of the highways at Royston, in and for the division of the hundred of Odsey, in the said county, but it nowhere states that the road in question was within the division for which they were acting. The order is made under the provisions of the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, which says "that it shall be lawful for the justices at any special sessions for the highways," &c. Now these words manifestly apply not to any two justices of the county, but to the justices acting for the particular petty sessions pointed out in the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 94; namely, "to the justices at some special sessions for the highways to be held within the division in which the said highway may be situate;" and it is consistent with the policy of the Act that these meetings should be of the magistrates acting within the respective divisions, for by the 45th section of the Act the justices of the peace, within their respective divisions, are to hold not less than eight nor more than twelve special sessions in every year for executing the purposes of the Act; the days of the holding thereof to be held within fourteen days after the twentieth day of March in every year; and there is then this proviso, that it shall not be necessary to cause any notice to be given or sent to any justice, acting and residing within such limits, of the day or time of the holding thereof. The proceedings, therefore, all point to a local limitation and it seems to me that the fact of the parish being within the division for which the petty sessions were held, should have been stated. Here, there is no statement of the kind, and the rule therefore on this ground must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

Ex parte CHRISTOPHER PEMBERTON.

Quære whether a practising attorney is exempt from being chosen for and serving the office of overseer?

W. R. Cole moved on behalf of Mr. C. Pemberton, who is an attorney practising at Cambridge, for a certiorari to remove into this court an order of justices appointing him overseer of the poor, or for a writ of privilege. It appeared that on the 29th of March last the justices acting for the division of Cambridge, in the county of Cambridge, appointed Mr. Pemberton, together with a Mr. Parsley, overseers of the poor for the parish of Trumpington; Mr. Pemberton being at the time a certificated and practising attorney, and there being many other persons in the parish eligible for the office. It was now contended, on the authority of Prowse's case (Cro. Car. 389; 1 Bott's P. L. 7; 1 Nolan, 51; Chitty's Archbold, p. 47), and Jerrard's case (2 W. Bla. 1126), that an attorney is privileged from serving this office. It was further objected, that on the face of the order the Christian names of the justices were not set out in full. (Rex v. Bowen, 3 C. & P. 602; Rex v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247.) It was further submitted that, to avoid the inconvenience and expense to the justices of compelling them by mandamus to proceed to the election of another overseer, should the order be quashed on the return of the certiorari; the better course will be to issue a writ of privilege, which contains at once a direction to the justices to appoint another person. (See Tidd's Appendix, tit. Privilege.)

EVANS and ANOTHER v. COLLINS and ANOTHER.

Where upon argument in the court below on an opposed rule, the Court gives judgment which is reversed by a court of error, the plaintiff in error is entitled to his costs of the motion in the court below.

Humfrey, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Peacock for a review of the Master's taxation herein.

The facts of the case were as follow:—This was an action on the case by the sheriff of Middlesex against the two defendants, who had been plaintiffs in an action against one Wright, for falsely representing in that action that a person of the name of Wright was the defendant in the said action, and named in a certain writ of ca. sa. whereupon the sheriff arrested him, when in point of fact he was not the said Wright mentioned in the writ, and for which false arrest he (Wright) had brought an action against the sheriff. The present defendants had pleaded in the present action—1st, Not guilty; 2nd, a denial of any damage; 3rd, that they had reason to believe and did believe that the two Wrights were the same; and, 4th, that they stated circumstances to the plaintiffs which made it probable that the two Wrights were the same. On these pleas issues were joined, and on the trial of the cause the first, second, and fourth issues were found for the plaintiffs, and the third for the defendants, liberty being reserved to the plaintiffs to move to increase the damages from 1s. to 10*l.* and to enter a judgment on the third issue non obstante veredicto; at the same time the defendants had liberty to move to enter a nonsuit if the third plea was an answer to the action. Rules nisi having been granted to both parties, the plaintiffs' rule was made absolute, and the defendants' discharged. Upon this the defendants brought a writ of error, and the Court of error reversed the decision of the Court below upon their rule. On taxation before the Master, the defendants, in addition to the general costs of the cause, claimed the costs of opposing the plaintiffs' rule in the court below. For the plaintiffs in the action it was now contended that the defendants were not entitled to these costs, the Court of error having said nothing about costs, and it being a general rule, that where proceedings fall from an error of the Court, neither party is entitled to costs. (Rutzen v. Lloyd, 5 Ad. & Ell. 456; Bower v. Hill, 5 Dowl. 183.)

Peacock, contrà, contended that, inasmuch as, by the judgment of the Court of error, the defendants had succeeded in their opposition to the plaintiffs' rule, they ought to be placed in precisely the same situation as though they had succeeded in the first instance in the Court below. (Gillard v. ——, 12 East, 668; Adams v. Meredue, 3 Yo. & Jer. 419.)

COLERIDGE, J. thought the case of Adams v. Meredue precisely in point, and directed the rule to be made absolute. Rule absolute.

RENNIE v. BRUCE.

JUDGMENT.

(See 5 Law T. 58, April 22.)

His lordship gave judgment in this case, which was a motion to discharge a defendant out of custody, on the ground of defects both in the original writ of summons and the copy of the capias, holding that, notwithstanding the arrest under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 is for many purposes a collateral matter, the application for the writ must be founded on an action properly commenced, which in this case it was not, as the writ of summons bore date in the year 1840, and was therefore mere waste parchment, and that he had no power to amend the writ, inasmuch as the affidavits shewed nothing by which it could be amended, nor would an amendment obviate the objection.

Rule absolute, with costs.

THE QUEEN v. JEFFS and LANG.

It is no sufficient ground for granting a certiorari to remove an indictment from the Central Criminal Court that the defendant is a reputable tradesman, and that he believes the prosecution has been instituted from malicious motives by one of the witnesses.

It is a sufficient ground, however, for the writ, that the prosecution is an unusual one, and is instituted at the immediate instance of the Crown, and upon which the high Crown officers will attend to prosecute, and that the defendant therefore desires a special jury and the assistance of Queen's counsel.

Prideaux moved for a certiorari to remove into this court from the Central Criminal Court an indictment found against the two defendants for a conspiracy to defraud the revenue. The first count charged a conspiracy to convey certain foreign merchandize from the port of London to the house of the defendant Jeffs, without payment of the duties. The second was somewhat similar to the first; and the third count charged a general conspiracy to defraud the revenue. The grounds of the application were—1st, that the case is a proper one to be tried by a special jury; 2nd, that the defendant Jeffs, who is a bookseller in the Burlington Arcade, is desirous of having the assistance of Queen's counsel, particularly as this being a prosecution instituted directly at the instance of the Crown, it would be prosecuted by the highest Crown lawyers. 3rd. That the defendant Jeffs is a person who for twelve years past has carried on with respectability his business in the same place, and that it would be highly derogatory to him to be compelled to take his place in the Central Criminal Court, and that it was sworn that it was believed the prosecution had been instituted from malicious motives on the part of one of the witnesses. (Strange 549; Rex v. Chipping Norton, 1 Barnardiston.) 4th. That the facts charged having taken place four years ago, and from the very nature of the case it is desirable that it shall be tried before one of the judges of this court.

Pollock, on behalf of the Crown, contended that the reasons assigned were not sufficient, and that far from the case not being tried at the Central Criminal Court by one of the superior judges, it would be tried by two of them, as it is always the practice for indictments in which the superior law-officers prosecute, to be tried by the judges themselves.

COLERIDGE, J. thought that none of the special grounds alleged sufficient to justify the granting of the writ; but conceived that inasmuch as this is far from being an ordinary prosecution, and of sufficient importance to justify the attendance of the Crown officers, that it is a case in which the defendants ought to be permitted to have a special jury and the advantage of the assistance of Queen's counsel.

Knowles, Q. C. moved on behalf the Rev. Dr. Molesworth, vicar of Rochdale, in Lancashire, for a rule nisi calling upon a Mr. Jesse Hall, of the same place, to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for certain libellous matter contained in a pamphlet entitled "A Letter to Dr. Molesworth, in reply to his Attack on Clement Royds, esq." Rule nisi.

DOE dem. ANSON v. ROE.

Where proceedings are taken by ejectment under the 1 Geo. 4, c. 87, by a landlord against his tenant, the notice at the foot of the declaration should be to appear on the first day of the Term next following; and a notice, therefore, to appear generally "in next Easter Term" is bad, and cannot be made the groundwork for a motion under the statute for security for costs, &c.

J. W. Smith shewed cause against a rule obtained by Keyser, calling upon the tenant in possession "to shew cause why, upon being admitted defendant, he should not, besides entering into the common consent rule and giving the common undertaking, undertake, in case of a verdict for the plaintiff, to give him a judgment to be entered against the real defendant of the term next preceding the time of trial; and also why he should not enter into a recognizance by himself and two sufficient sureties in a reasonable sum to be fixed by the Court, and within any time the Court should fix conditioned to pay the costs and damages which should be recovered by the plaintiff in the action; or why, in default thereof, judgment should not be entered for the plaintiff." This was an ejectment brought by a landlord against his tenant, under the provisions of 1 Geo. 4, c. 87, the first section of which provides for this application, and enacts "that it shall be lawful for the landlord at the foot of the declaration to address a notice to such tenant requiring him to appear in the court in which the action shall have been commenced on the first day of the Term then next following," &c. The notice in the present action (being a country cause) directed the tenant to appear in next Easter Term; and it was now contended that, inasmuch as the Act directed that the notice should be for the first day of the Term, the provision of the Act of Parliament had not been complied with, and so the motion could not be supported. (Doe dem. Holder v. Rushworth, 6 Dowl. 712, 4 M. & W. 74, s. c.)

Keyser, in support of the rule, argued that the statute should be construed liberally, and that it made no difference whether the tenant were directed to appear on the first day of the Term, or during the Term generally.

COLERIDGE, J.—According to your notice, you have made this application too soon, as the tenant has all the Term to appear in; but I quite agree with the point taken on the other side, that the statute has not been complied with.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF CUMBERLAND.—Cowling moved for a certiorari to remove into this court an order of bastardy made at petty sessions, and an order of quarter sessions confirming the same, with the view to their being quashed, on the ground that the corroborative evidence does not appear to have been taken upon oath. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.—Bodkin made a similar motion. Rule nisi.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ARBITRATION OF ANDREWS and OTHERS.—Stock moved for an attachment against one of these parties for the non performance of an award. Rule granted.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK v. PEPPER.—Fortescue moved that the service of the writ of summons herein, and all subsequent proceedings, should be set aside, the copy having been served on the wrong party. Rule nisi.

REG. v. WRIGHT and GALE. — Pearson moved that this indictment, which had been found against the defendants for keeping a brothel in the parish of St. George, Hanover-square, should be quashed, on the ground that it did not appear on the indorsement who was the prosecutor. Rule refused.

GRESLEY v. GRESLEY. — Hance shewed cause against a rule obtained by Flowers for an attachment for the non-performance of an award. It was objected, in answer to the rule, that the arbitrator had not determined on a material question.

Rule discharged, with costs.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ARBITRATION OF WELLFORD and BATTY. — Udall shewed cause against a rule obtained by Temple, calling upon Mr. Wellford to shew cause why he should not pay 7*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* awarded by the arbitrator, and 31*l.* 4*s.* pursuant to the Master's allocatur.

Rule discharged.

EDGE v. ELGIE.—In this case his lordship granted a rule nisi (see Law T. Wednesday, April 16).

Thursday.

DOE dem. THE EARL OF EGREMONT v. STEPHENS.—Cowling moved to stay the proceedings in this ejectment, on the ground of the death of the plaintiff. Rule nisi.

WATSON v. ORME.—In this case, which was a motion for a distringas, Mr. Justice Coleridge's suggestion having been complied with, the writ was granted. (See Law T. Bail Court, April 19.)

Distringas granted.

TRENT v. HARRISON. — Humfrey, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why it should not be referred to the Master to ascertain whether certain sums stated, on the taxation of costs, to have been paid, had in fact been paid before taxation, and if any had not been so paid, why the amount should not be refunded to the defendant, and the Master's allocatur, and the judgment, be reduced accordingly. Grove, contrà. (See 5 Law T. 59.) Cur. adv. vult.

Ex parte JOHN GEORGE MAYER. — Clarkson moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the above party, in order that he may be admitted to bail, and for a certiorari to remove the depositions.

Writs granted.

BOOTH v. STEVENS.—Crompton shewed cause against a rule obtained by Simons for the discharge of the defendant out of custody Simons, contrà.

Rule discharged.

Ex parte WILLIAM CAPP.—Gurney, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Charnock for a prohibition to the Southwark Court of Requests, prohibiting them from enforcing a judgment against the applicant, awarding the payment by him of a certain sum of money to the mother of a bastard child, of which he was said to be the father. It appeared from the affidavits in opposition, that the applicant had made an express promise in the case. Charnock, contrà. Rule discharged.

Friday.

J. M. Cobbett moved for a rule nisi for an attachment against a person of the name of George Carey, who was overseer of the parish of Waldron, in Sussex, for refusing to be sworn, and not producing a rate-book when before the justices on a matter touching the removal of a pauper family from the parish of All Saints, in Lewis. Rule nisi.

SCARTH v. SIR A. L. HAY, Bart.- Collier moved for leave to stick up notice of the writ of inquiry herein in the Queen's Bench office, and also to serve it at the last known place of residence of the defendant. Application granted.

THOMAS BLAND v. THE QUEEN (in error).—Deedes applied for the discharge of the defendant out of custody for the want of a joinder in error. The defendant had been convicted at the Kent Sessions of a misdemeanor, and, having brought a writ of error, Ordered to be discharged.

BEECHY v. HAMMAN.—Piggott shewed cause against the rule obtained herein by Carrington for further and better particulars. Carrington, contrà.

Rule discharged with costs.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, April 30.
Ex parte HARRIS, re CLARKE.

Friendly society, officer of—4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 40, s. 12.

The bankers of a friendly society which by its rules required the treasurer not to retain any sums which might be in his hands beyond a certain amount, are not to be considered officers of the society within the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 40, s. 12.

The bankrupts in this case were bankers, with whom had been deposited by the treasurer of the "Widows and Orphans' Friends Society" moneys belonging to that society. The society being established under the provisions of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 40, and requiring by its rules that the treasurer should not retain in his hands money received above a certain sum, or beyond a certain time, the petition in this case was presented seeking to have their claim paid in full, the bankers being alleged to have been "officers" of the society.

Russell and Rolt, for the petitioners, endeavoured to distinguish between this case and that of Ex parte Whipham, re Wise (3 Mont. Dea. & De Gex, 564). See ante, vol. ii. p. 426.)

Swanston and B. L. Chapman, for the assignees, were not heard.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—I am of opinion that this employment of banker is not an office within the meaning of the clause. I think the enactment is one against common right, and of which the construction ought not to be extended.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEVENSON.)
Friday, April 25.
Re WILLIAMS.

An attorney not admitted in bankruptcy is not entitled to practise in bankruptcy through an agent duly admitted.

In this case Homes having appeared, and for some time opposed the insolvent, an objection was taken that Mr. Davies, of Merthyr, the attorney whose name appeared indorsed on the brief, had not been admitted in bankruptcy.

Homes said he had received his brief from Mr. Perkins, a gentleman duly admitted in the court, and who was then present acting as agent for Mr. Davies, of Merthyr, whose name was indorsed on the brief.

His HONOUR (after consultation with Mr. Commissioner Serjt. Stephen).—I considered this point of sufficient importance to consult my learned colleague upon it before giving my decision. He quite agrees with me in thinking that the attorney for the opposing creditor cannot act as a solicitor in this court either in person or by agent. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73 clearly states the law; the second section prohibits any person from acting as a solicitor without being admitted and duly qualified pursuant to the regulations of that Act. By the 27th section persons duly admitted in one court are made capable of practising in other courts (and the Court of Bankruptcy is specifically mentioned) upon signing the roll of such other courts, but not otherwise. Coupling these sections with the 32nd, which prohibits attorneys from acting as agents for parties not duly qualified, it is clear that Mr. Davies, not being an attorney duly qualified to practise in bankruptcy, cannot appear here himself or appoint an agent. He is not entitled to employ an agent.

King, attorney for the insolvent, offered to waive the objection, but

His HONOUR said he could not permit such an objection to be waived; the Court, having had the fact brought before its notice that Mr. Davies was not yet admitted in bankruptcy, could not permit him to practise until he had duly qualified himself. This could be done, and Mr. Davies's client may still bring forward his opposition on the day for the final order.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

IT will be observed that a Committee of the Lords has been appointed to inquire into the practical working of the Insolvent Act of last session. There will be no difficulty in making out against it an overwhelming case; but we hope the old system will not be restored. If any of our readers should be examined, may we ask them to urge upon their lordships, not a return to imprisonment for debt, but the enactment of the provisions of Lord COTTENHAM's rejected Bill of last session, that gave such ample powers against the property, and inflicted such needful punishment for the fraud of the debtor. When will the Bill for repealing or amending the Transfer of Property Act be produced?

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

EXCHEQUER-BILLS.—The public are indebted to the exertions of Colonel Sibthorp, M.P. for the city of Lincoln, for a return (recently printed) of the number and amount of public bills that have been issued under the head of "Exchequer Bills," under the authority of her Majesty's Controller-General, Lord Monteagle, since the 5th day of March, 1844. It is found, on an examination of one branch of this return, that from the 1st of January, 1844, to the 17th of March, 1845, the total number of Exchequer-bills signed by the noble lord the Controller-General of the Exchequer, amounted to 23,916, representing a value of 38,404,383*l.* and that the total number of Exchequer-bills signed by the Assistant-Controller during the same period amounted to 21,378, representing a value of 7,759,080*l.* The total number of bills signed, from the 1st of January, 1842, up to the 17th of March, 1845, both by the Controller-General and by the Assistant-Controller, amounted to 110,062, representing a grand total value of 138,722,596*l.* In order that the public may form an idea of the industry and application to business manifested by the Controller-General, who receives a large salary for his onerous services, it is stated that during the past year, 1844, Lord Monteagle attended at his office for 189 days (out of the 365), and was absent during the same year 123 days. Since the 1st of January, 1845, he has attended sixty-one days, and has been absent four days.

GLASS.—Mr. Ord, M.P. has obtained, by order of the House of Commons, returns of the amount of duties charged, and drawbacks paid, on glass, and of the quantities imported and exported, retained for home consumption, and remaining in bond, for the year ending the 5th of January, 1845 (in continuation of the sessional paper No. 200 of the year 1844). It appears from this paper that the following were the quantities of glass charged and the amount of duty respectively imposed on the different descriptions of glass in England during the year 1844-45, viz.:—Flint glass, 9,529,291lb. and 55,271*l.*; plate glass, 29,765cwt. and 93,759*l.*; crown glass, 99,180cwt. and 382,710*l.*; German sheet glass, 31,560cwt. and 21,783*l.*; common bottle glass, 345,810cwt. and 27,081*l.* The quantities exported upon which drawback was allowed were of flint glass, 11,277cwt.; of plate glass, 116,955 feet; of crown glass in tables, 1,527cwt.; of crown glass in panes, 6,661cwt.; of German sheet glass, 7,656cwt.; and of common bottle glass, 213,056cwt. It further appears that the quantities of glass retained for home consumption in the United Kingdom for the year 1844-45 were, of flint glass, 83,712cwt.; of plate glass, 24,405cwt.; of crown glass, 93,347cwt.; of German sheet glass, 23,175cwt.; and of common bottle glass, 193,108cwt. The net amount of duty received thereon amounted to the sum of 645,715*l.* The amount of drawback or allowance on glass for the use of churches during the year 1844-45 was 1,343*l.* The quantities imported into the United Kingdom during the same period, from various countries of Europe, &c. were,—of crown or any window glass not exceeding one-ninth of an inch in thickness, 6,680cwt.; of German sheet glass, white or coloured, 1,280cwt.; of all glass one-ninth of an inch in thickness—all silvered or polished glass, of whatever thickness—and plate glass, however small each pane, plate, or sheet, 18,915 square feet (superficial measure); and of flint and cut glass, 2,883cwt. The quantities exported from the United Kingdom of the same description of glass as those which we have already enumerated above were respectively, 6,241cwt.; 906cwt.; 16,971 square feet; and 1,448cwt. The quantities of British glass exported from England in 1844-45 were,—of flint, 11,277cwt.; of plate, 116,955 feet; of crown, in tables, 1,526cwt.; of crown, in panes, 6,661cwt.; of German sheet glass, 17,695cwt.; and of common bottle glass, 213,056cwt.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

FRIDAY, April 25. Lord COTTENHAM brought in a Bill entitled "An Act to consolidate the Jurisdiction of the several Ecclesiastical Courts in England and Wales." The Bill was precisely the same as that which was passed in pursuance of the report of a select committee of that House in 1836. The Bill was read a first time.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS ACT.

Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from traders and retail dealers in London, praying for a revision of the Insolvent Act. They complained chiefly of the 20*l.* clause, and prayed that some remedial measure might be passed in the present session of Parliament. He should himself, if nobody else did, endeavour to apply a remedy, but he would rather that the subject was left in the hands of the Government.—Lord COTTENHAM was glad to hear that his noble and learned friend intended to bring in a measure upon the subject if the Government declined to do so, because the merits of the 20*l.* clause in the Act had been sufficiently tested. There was no adequate remedy for debts under 20*l.* either against the property or the person of the debtor, and that state of the law ought not to be allowed to remain.—Lord CAMPBELL said that if the Government were now prepared to state its intention with regard to this subject, it would give great satisfaction to hundreds and thousands of shopkeepers. It would be much better that the Government, which had originally introduced the measure, should take the matter into its own hands; although he had every confidence in his noble and learned friend's qualifications to apply a proper remedy.—The LORD CHANCELLOR regretted that his noble and learned friend had not given notice of his intention of putting a question in a matter of such great importance. But he begged to remind their lordships that the original measure did not proceed from the Government, but from a committee of that house, which had sat for a considerable time and investigated the question. He (the Lord Chancellor) was a member of that committee, and in the course of discussion suggested a clause of this description which was accepted. If the clause was stated to be inconvenient, he had no objection to the committee being appointed to consider the subject. He was not acting for the Government when he made the suggestion.—Lord BROUGHAM moved that the petition be printed.—The LORD CHANCELLOR would also move that the committee be re-appointed.—Lord COTTENHAM doubted whether that could be done.—The LORD CHANCELLOR would state what motion he should bring forward on the subject on Monday next.—Lord ASHBURTON said that the complaints of the petitioners whose petition he had presented to the house on this matter were not confined to the particular question, but applied generally to the system of legislation adopted by Parliament, which had shewn an extreme feeling for debtors and a reckless want of consideration for the unfortunate creditors. He thought the House would much neglect its duty if it allowed the session to pass over without providing some remedy for those evils.—Lord BROUGHAM suggested to his noble and learned friend on the woolsack that it would be better to appoint a committee to inquire into and consider the operations of the Act passed last session.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said the question was whether they had not gone too far to retrace their steps.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR ACT.

MONDAY, April 28.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from the committee of commissioners of the Court of Requests against the 20*l.* clause in the Debtor and Creditor Act.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said it was his intention to move for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into that Act. (Hear, hear.)—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from Bristol also against the clause.—Lord CAMPBELL said he fully agreed with the noble and learned lord on the woolsack as to the propriety of appointing a select committee to inquire into the objections which were urged against the Bill. (Hear.)—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that it was his intention also to move that all petitions against any portion of the Bill should be referred to the select committee. (Hear.)—The Duke of RICHMOND presented petitions against the 20*l.* clause of the Bill from Sherborne, Shaftesbury, Sturminster, Wareham, Cowes, Gosport, Lymington, Southampton, Portsea, Penzance, Bradford, Trowbridge, Warminster, and Andover.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS' PROPERTY.

The following resolutions respecting the leasehold property belonging to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, passed at a meeting held 15th April, 1845, have been issued by order of the House of Lords:—

1. That no lease for lives be renewed by the addition of a new life, nor any lease whatever upon consideration of a fine.

2. That no estate which is subject to a lease when it becomes vested in the Commissioners, shall at any time be sold to any other than the person beneficially interested under the existing lease, until he shall have had the option of becoming the purchaser.

3. That every estate, already and hereafter vested in the Commissioners, shall at the first convenient opportunity be surveyed, and a full report made of its value, and of its circumstances with reference to the relative advantage of retaining or parting with it.

4. That the Commissioners, having taken such report into consideration, shall, unless they find special reasons for not parting with the property, hold themselves prepared to entertain an offer for the purchase of the reversion from the person beneficially interested in the lease.

5. That in all cases of the Commissioners declining to sell, an entry shall be made upon their minutes of the special reasons for their so declining.

6. That the price of the reversions shall be, as a general rule, the amount of difference between the value of the whole fee, calculated as if the estate were actually in possession, and the value of the leasehold interest.

7. That whether the Commissioners for any special reasons decline to sell, or the lessee decline to purchase the reversion, the Commissioners shall hold themselves prepared, in any case, to purchase the leasehold interest at its market price, if the lessee be willing to sell the same.

8. That in any case in which the lessee shall have declined either to purchase the reversion, or to sell his leasehold interest, the Commissioners shall consider themselves free from any restraint respecting the sale or letting of the property.

9. That tithes, and lands or other hereditaments allotted or assigned in lieu of tithes, vested in the Commissioners, shall not in any case be sold, until due consideration shall have been had of the wants and circumstances of the places in which such tithes arise or have heretofore arisen.

C. K. Murray, Treasurer and Secretary.

Whitehall-place, April 25, 1845.

ALTERATION OF THE CIRCUITS AND TERMS.

The following is a copy of the commission for inquiring into the expediency of altering the circuits of the judges in England and Wales, and (as we intimated last December) inquiring also whether there should be any change in the law terms:—

"Victoria, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith: To our right trusty and well-beloved councillor Sir James Parke, knight, one of the Barons of our Court of Exchequer; and our trusty and well-beloved Sir Edward Hall Alderson, knight, one other of the barons of our Court of Exchequer; Sir John Taylor Coleridge, knight, one of the justices of our Court of Queen's Bench; and James Stuart Wortley, Fizroy Kelly, William Whateley, and John Greenwood, esquires; and Sir William Heathcote, baronet; and Edmund Denison and Thomas Grimston Bucknall Estcourt, esquires; greeting:

Whereas it has been humbly represented unto us that the circuits of the judges in England and Wales are very unequal, as well in extent as with respect to the number of causes tried upon such circuits respectively, and that the intervals between the periods of holding the same in each year are also very unequal, and that it has been considered that some alteration in these particulars might be conducive to the public good.

"Now know ye, that we, being satisfied of your knowledge and ability, have appointed and do by these presents appoint you the said Sir James Parke, Sir Edward Hall Alderson, Sir John Taylor Coleridge, James Stuart Wortley, Fitzroy Kelley, William Whateley, John Greenwood, Sir William Heathcote, Edmund Denison, and Thomas Grimston Bucknall Estcourt, or any five or more of you, to be our commissioners for inquiring and considering whether it would be expedient, with a view to the more convenient and better administration of justice, that any and what alterations should be made in the division of England and Wales into circuits for judicial business, and in the periods for holding such circuits, and whether it would be necessary or proper that any change should be made in the law terms for the purpose of such alterations, and also for considering in what manner such alterations may be best effected.

"And for the better effecting the purposes of this our commission, we do by these presents give and grant to you, or any five or more of you, full power and authority to call before you, or any five or more of you, such persons as you shall judge necessary, by whom you may be the better informed on the subject of this our commission, and every matter connected therewith; and also to call for, have access to, and examine all such official books, documents, papers, and records as may afford the fullest information on the subject, and to inquire of and concerning the premises by all other lawful ways and means whatsoever.

"And it is our further will and pleasure, that you, or any five or more of you, do report to us in writing, under your hands and seals, your several proceedings by virtue of this our commission, together with your opinions touching the several matters hereby referred for your consideration.

"And we will and command, and by these presents ordain, that this our commission shall continue in full force and virtue, and that you our said commissioners, or any five or more of you, may from time to time proceed in the execution thereof, and of every matter and thing therein contained, although the same be not continued from time to time by adjournment.

"Given at our court at St. James's, the fourteenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, in the eighth year of our reign.

"By her Majesty's command,

"(Signed) J. R. G. Graham."

Debtor and Creditor Law.—The Select Committee appointed by the House of Lords, on Monday evening, "to consider the petitions on the subject of the Law of Debtor and Creditor, and to report thereon to the House," consists of the following lords, who were nominated thereon, and who are to meet for the first time on Monday next, at 4 o'clock. All petitions, presented to their lordships' house this session on the subject are to be referred to the said committee.—The Lord Chancellor, the Lord President, the Lord Privy Seal, the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, Earl of Howe, Earl of Bandon, Earl of Rosslyn, Viscount Hawarden, Viscount Canterbury, Lord Stanley, Lord Kenyon, Lord Steward of Garlies, Lord Redesdale, Lord Colchester, Lord Forester, Lord Brougham and Vaux, Lord Denman, Lord Ashburton, Lord Cottenham, Lord Langdale, and Lord Campbell.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

We have taken from the daily papers a variety of statements as to the real or supposed recommendations of the Commissioners appointed to revise the Circuit and Term arrangements. We can trace only some of these to any authority; and we believe, in fact, that no decision of any kind has yet been come to. We give the reports as they are circulated, but our readers must place no reliance upon them.

The Bill for legalizing Mr. Lumley's forms appears to be shelved. In the meanwhile the courts have been crowded with motions to set aside orders founded on them. Undoubtedly the consequences are serious, and the Legislature should interfere to legalize past errors; but it is a stretch of courtesy to make forms, pronounced bad, good for the future as well as for the past. It is unjust towards those who have incurred expense to remedy errors. As it is impossible to say when the Bill will be passed, if ever, a fresh supply has been printed of Mr. Symons's forms, any quantity of which may now be had.

IDENTIFICATION OF PAUPER WITH CERTIFICATE OF HIS CHARGEABILITY.

Considerable doubts prevail whether it be essential to identify the pauper with the certificate of his chargeability, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 69. That section says that the certificate "shall be received in evidence accordingly by and before all courts of justice, and all justices, without any proof of the signatures or of the official characters of the persons signing the same, or of such seal, or of such meeting; and that, for the purpose of making any order of removal or other order, no further or other evidence of chargeability than such certificate shall be required."

But all this, it has been objected, may very well be, and yet the proof is wanting that the A B named in the document is the A B before the magistrates. We know that this objection has been taken very frequently at the last sessions; and though we hold the same opinion we previously expressed on this point (namely, that evidence of identity is requisite), we at once direct the attention of those who are interested in the opposite view to a case just decided in the Court of Queen's Bench, and reported, we believe, in this number of the Law Times, which, by analogy of reasoning, strongly supports the argument that no such evidence is needed. We mean the case of Reg. v. The Inhabitants of St. Anne, Westminster. It appeared that in that case letters of administration were essential to substantiate an estate settlement. These letters were sent to the receiving parish precisely in the same way in which the certificate of chargeability is sent, but there was nothing on the face of the evidence to shew that these letters were produced before the magistrates—nothing, in short, to link them on to the proofs of the case.

Mr. Pashley argued long and learnedly that it was essential to connect the document with the evidence in the case, but the Court listened with marked impatience, and Mr. Justice Williams ironically asked if Mr. Pashley wished the woman who alone gave evidence to say, "By these letters of administration here produced, as by reference to the same being had, will more fully and at large appear?" Sending the document, argued Mr. Pashley, has nothing to do with it,—"But I say it has to do with it," rejoined Mr. Justice Patteson, with no slight emphasis. The order was confirmed without deliberation. Now, the cases are exceedingly similar, for there was nothing in the letters of administration to identify the parties more than there is in a certificate: probably much less; for, when a certificate sets forth that Ebenezer Timothy Tupman, and his wife Rebecca Elizabeth, and their son Jeremiah, aged six, and their daughter Caroline, aged five, are chargeable, it is strange indeed if persons similarly named are not the same. We think, therefore, that, as far as authority goes, this case of St. Anne's, Westminster, is a strong authority in favour of parishes who have omitted to identify their paupers.

On principle we still hold to our old opinion that there ought to be identification, for otherwise that is left to inference which is capable of proof. However probable be the presumption, and however natural the inference, the Court of Queen's Bench has laid it down, times out of number, that nothing must be left to inference. It is idle to say that proof of the inference is supplied here by the Act; it is not so: the Act makes the certificate evidence of all it states, but it does not and cannot make it evidence of something that it does not state, and which happens after the certificate is made namely, the appearance of the same person it names before the justices.

The strongest analogy we are aware of, is that of the certificate of a prior conviction, which invariably requires the evidence of the gaoler or other person present at the trial to which the certificate relates, to prove that the prisoner is the same person who is convicted at the second trial. We really cannot see why this should be less requisite in the case of a pauper's chargeability; at any rate we think it prudent to supply this evidence of identity. We offer the following as a form in which it may be conveniently given:—

I, A B, am relieving officer of the Union. I produce a certificate of the chargeability of D C, &c. [specifying the names of all the paupers], dated &c. and signed by, &c. It relates to the pauper D C, &c. now here before the said justices, &c. and who are the same persons to whom the certificate relates, and who are named therein. J. C. S.

Assessment of Railways.—A most important decision has been come to by a full bench of magistrates at Bishop Stortford, in respect to the assessment of railway property, an appeal being made against the amount claimed by the parish of Sawbridgeworth, from the northern and eastern branch of the Eastern Counties Railway. Mr. E. James appeared for the appellants, and Mr. Ryland for the parish. Mr. James stated the cause of the complaint to consist in that his clients were assessed at the rate of 800*l.* per mile, or 1,600*l.* for the two miles through which the company's line passed in the assessors' parish, being double the amount his clients had been originally assessed at. Mr. Ryland, for the parish, called a Mr. Hill, and also a Mr. Cooke, both surveyors, the former of whom declared the gross returns of the company amounted to 9,000*l.* a year, deducting every expense, and at that valuation the assessment was correct. The bench decided the rate was excessive. It was finally arranged that the assessment should be taken at 300*l.* per mile, a reduction of 1,000*l.* being thus gained to the company through the appeal.

Mr. John Charles Ridgway, who was convicted in the October sessions of the Central Criminal Court, in 1843, in opposition to the charge of the learned judge (Baron Maule) who tried the cause, received her Majesty's free pardon, and was discharged out of custody on Tuesday last, after a full investigation of the merits of his case by the Secretary of State.

Summary.

As the reports are extremely heavy, brevity in other matters is necessary. We can only refer the reader to the various subjects of interest to the Profession that will be found among the leading articles and elsewhere, and many others that were in type are unavoidably postponed. A Supplement next week will enable us to bring up a portion of the arrears.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE CIRCUITS.—The commissioners have decided that in future the spring circuits shall commence invariably on the 1st of February, and that on that day six weeks the sittings in London and Middlesex shall take place. By this arrangement it is believed the terms will not be disturbed, and the winter circuits may be dispensed with.—Times.

SWEARING AND ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS.—The Master of the Rolls has appointed Monday, the 5th of May, at the Rolls Court, Chancery-lane, at half-past three in the afternoon, for swearing solicitors.

GENERAL TOM THUMB.—The Tribunal of Commerce was occupied on Thursday with a trial in which Mr. Edward Sherwood Stratton, father of the far-famed General Tom Thumb, was plaintiff, and M. Nestor Roqueplan, the manager of the Théâtre des Variétés, defendant. The plaintiff applied to the Court to prevent the defendant from placarding a piece which was to be played last evening under the title of "Tom Pouce," and demanded damages to the amount of 2,000*f.* for each offence. For the defendant it was argued that the plaintiff, being a foreigner, could not plead; that the name of Tom Pouce, like that of Petit Poucet, belonged to any one that chose to take it; that it could be made the subject of a vaudeville; and that no confusion could arise between the piece at the Variétés and the miniature man at the Concerts Vivienne, since the bills announced that the part of Tom Pouce was to be filled by the little Duhamel. The tribunal rejected these arguments, and declared that, as the young Stratton was known by the name of Tom Pouce, as it was that under which he exhibited at the Concerts Vivienne, and which had become his property, the defendant must remove from the bills the name of "Tom Pouce," and pay all the costs of the suit. The piece at the Variétés has since been advertised under the name of "Tom Pouff."—Galignani's Messenger.

THE NEW LAW COMMISSIONS.—The Lord Chancellor has given notice of his intention to move for a commission to inquire into the law of insolvency and imprisonment for debt. In the year 1839 a commission was issued on bankruptcy and insolvency, from which resulted the present Bankrupt Act, and the new Insolvent Debtors Act, as administered by the Court of Bankruptcy. A very great improvement has been effected in the bankrupt law by placing the allowance of the certificate in the hands of the commissioners; and one of the principles of the new Insolvent Debtors Act was the power given of hearing parties without going to prison, and, notwithstanding the abuse of the privilege, the provision has had a beneficial effect. But last session a sudden alteration was made in the same Act, which has produced a great change in the law of debtor and creditor—namely, the abolition of imprisonment on executions for debts not exceeding 20*l.* It is complained that no remedy has been provided for the boon granted; and it is understood that one of the objects of the commission will be to inquire whether a remedy can be suggested, so as to supersede the repeal of the clause in question. Prisons have been emptied, and debtors have defied their creditors to take proceedings against them, as they cannot touch their persons. diminution of about one-fourth in the number of writs issued by the law courts, since the operation of the last Act, has taken place. There are two laws (besides the Debtor and Creditor Act) relating to insolvent debtors, and the commissioners will have to consider their assimilation, and they will also have to consider, before they recommended the full repeal of the 20*l.* clause, the instances of oppression by creditors, as recorded in the last report of Captain Williams, the prison inspector.—Morning Herald.

COINING IN GAOL.—During the last few days an extraordinary éclaircissement has taken place, from which it has been discovered that an illegal mint was for some time actually established and regularly worked within the heart of our city prison. It will be in the recollection of most of our readers that at the January quarter sessions a man named Patrick Ronan was tried for having base coin in his possession, and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment in our city gaol. A prisoner gave information that he had seen Ronan, with another prisoner named Russell, a private of the 4th Dragoons, undergoing sentence of confinement for a robbery, engaged in coining. On the 10th instant an examination was made of the prison, and in the apartment termed the men's day-room, the entire coining apparatus was discovered concealed, apparently in so hurried a manner, that it was evident it had been in use but a few moments before the appearance of the constabulary upon the scene of action. A quantity of counterfeit silver coin was also found upon the person of the prisoner Ronan.—Kilkenny Moderator.

PROCLAMATIONS OF OUTLAWRY.—A few days ago, in the Sheriffs' Court, Red Lion-square, it being county court day, proclamation was made in the usual manner, by Mr. Hemp, the sheriffs' officer, before Mr. Under-sheriff Burchell, and the following were declared outlaws, at the suit of their several creditors:—Robert Montgomery Martin, Alexander Farquhar Mortimer, Percy Drummond, at four several suits, Charles Coghlan, Crewe Read, Thomas Elisha Bramell, James Duthie, Sir Charles Edward Gray, bart. Patrick Leonard O'Reilly, Richard Gray, Charles White, Henry Whittaker, and the Rev. George Bridges Lee Warner (clerk).

THE WILL OF THE LATE REV. SYDNEY SMITH.—Probate of the will and three codicils of the Rev. Sydney Smith, late of Combe Florey, in the county of Somerset, and of 56, Green-street, Grosvenor-square, clerk, canon residentiary of St. Paul's Cathedral, has just been granted to his relict, Catherine Amelia Smith, the sole executrix. The personal estate sworn under 80,000*l.* The will is of great length, and professionally drawn and fairly copied, except the conclusion, which is in the testator's handwriting; it is dated June 6, 1843. He directs the trustees to pay over to his wife 10,000*l.* immediately after his decease, for her own absolute use, and bequeaths to her for life the rents arising from the Guildhall coffee-house, and the house in Charles-street, Berkeley-square, and all interest and dividends payable from securities in America and France; he also leaves to her the house in Green-street, and the furniture and effects in and about the same, and expresses a wish that she should continue to reside therein, and after her decease he directs that a moiety of the rents should remain as settled by himself and wife under a deed; the other moiety he bequeaths to his son, Wyndham Smith, and appoints him reversionary residuary legatee. Bequeaths legacies to his servants; and on the death of his wife he leaves to his servant, Anne Kaye, a legacy of 100*l.* and an annuity of 30*l.* The testator concludes his will by the following bequests and directions in his own hand:—"I appoint my wife sole executrix. I leave to Sarah Westwood, and to Massey, the housemaid at Combe Florey, 10*l.* each; to Christopher Hodgson, ——, to buy a flat silver candlestick, on which shall be engraven, 'To commemorate the confidence and good nature of many years;' I will also that not only the dilapidations of Combe Florey, but those also of all my ecclesiastical preferments, shall be paid for out of my estate by my trustees, and not out of the property bequeathed to my wife; and I will also that Wyndham Smith do settle himself apart from his mother, and that he receive the annuity which she is directed to pay him only upon the express condition of establishing a domicile for himself apart from his mother, and the annuity to be paid by the trustees on the same condition.—SYDNEY SMITH." The codicils are entirely in the testator's handwriting. By the first, dated January 3, 1844, he bequeaths to his son, Wyndham Smith, an annuity of 300*l.* on the conditions named in the will. By the second codicil, dated October 18, 1844, he appoints Nathaniel Hibert and Dr. Holland to be his trustees in the room of those appointed by his will, and leaves 10*l.* to Mary Chitty. The third codicil is in these words,—"I revoke that part of my will which relates to the property which is to be conveyed to Wyndham Smith by my trustees after my death, and that of his mother, and I direct that there shall be conveyed to him after that period the sum of 30,000*l.* of Three per Cent. Reduced Government Stock, as also the fortune he is to receive from me; and I leave to my wife my houses in Green-street and Charles-street, the Guildhall coffee-house, my New-York and French Stock, in addition to whatever I may have left her in the preceding will." "This codicil was signed by the testator in our presence, and by us in the presence of the testator and of each other.—December 14, 1844."

THE LATE EARL OF EFFINGHAM.—Probate of the will and codicil of the Right Hon. Kenneth Alexander Earl of Effingham, late of the Grange, in the county of York, was granted on the 16th instant to the executors, the Right Hon. Henry Earl of Effingham (late Lord Howard, the son of the testator), the Right Hon. the Earl of Rosebery, the Right Hon. Lord Dalmeny, and Mr. Hervey. The personal estate within the province of Canterbury sworn under 120,000*l.* His lordship died on the 13th of February last. Bequeaths to his wife, Lady Effingham, 1,000*l.* for her immediate use; also leaves her 1,200*l.* a year, 400*l.* a year by power of appointment under the will of the late Duke of Norfolk, and 800*l.* a year by a like power under the will of the former Earl of Effingham. Directs that the sum of 4,000*l.* which his lordship received with her on marriage, should be distributed by the trustees among his younger children equally. By the will he bequeaths to his three younger children 12,000*l.* each, and a legacy of 100*l.* each to be paid within one month. By the codicil he bequeaths to his daughter, Lady Baring, the sum of 4,000*l.*, and to his daughter, Lady Charlotte, an annuity of 150*l.*, and to his younger children a further legacy of 2,000*l.* to each. Directs that his plate, jewels, and books shall descend as heir looms. The residue of his estates, real and personal, he leaves to his son, the present Earl, and to his heirs and assigns. The will is dated July 28, 1837, and the codicil July 31, 1844; signed, "Effingham."

WILL OF SERJEANT TADDY.—Probate of the will and codicil of the late William Taddy, esq. of Old Palace-yard, Westminster, her Majesty's most ancient Serjeant-at-Law, and Attorney-General to her Majesty the Queen Dowager, was granted on the 15th instant, to the Rev. John Taddy, clerk, the brother, the sole executor. The personal effects were sworn under 35,000*l.* He died on the 14th of March last. The will was made on the 7th of September, 1839, though not dated, and the codicil on the 7th of March, a week before his death: both are very short, and in his own handwriting. He directs that 2,000*l.* shall be paid to his wife immediately after his decease, and leaves to her all the plate, jewellery, and furniture. Bequeaths to his brother Charles an annuity of 400*l.* and appoints his brother John his residuary legatee.

WILL OF THE LATE LORD CHURCHILL.—Probate of the will of the Right Hon. Francis Almeric Lord Churchill, late of Cornbury-park, Witney, in the county of Oxford, and of Upper Wimpole-street, Middlesex, who died at Brighton on the 7th of March last, was proved on the 26th of April, by his son, the Right Hon. Francis George Lord Churchill, the sole executor. The personal estate sworn under 12,000*l.* His lordship's will commences by reciting that his father, the late Duke of Marlborough, by his will, devised certain of his estates in Oxford, Wilts, and other places, to trustees, as a provision for his lordship's family, and charged the same with the payment of an annuity of 2,000*l.* for the life of Lady Churchill, and with a further sum of 30,000*l.* for younger children, and, subject to such charges, devised the estates to the eldest son. It is further recited, that the late Duke of Grafton, the father of Lady Churchill, by his will, left her ladyship a sum of 13,000*l.* as a provision for her children. His lordship names his 12 children, being eight sons and four daughters, and bequeaths to them, in addition to the above provisions, the following legacies:—To his second son, a sum of 1,500*l.*; to his third son, 1,400*l.*; to each of his younger sons, 1,000*l.*; and to each of his daughters, 2,600*l.*; and bequeaths to his wife, Francis Lady Churchill, 100*l.* for her immediate use. The jewellery left to his lordship under the residuary clause of the will of his mother, the late Duchess of Marlborough, he leaves to her ladyship for her life; then to his eldest son, now Lord Churchill; and appoints his lordship residuary legatee. Leaves to his godson, Francis T. Browne, a legacy of 500*l.*, and bequests to his servants. The will is of moderate length, dated December 20, 1844, signed 'Churchill;' witnessed by N. S. Greene, solicitor, Brighton, and his clerk.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

Richard Frederick Thompson, of Chelsea New Town, near Leighton Buzzard, has been fined 5*l.* by the Commissioners of Stamp Duties, on the information of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, for having issued precepts from one of the superior courts of common law, he at the time not being a certificated attorney.

ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE DUTY.

Sir Thomas Wilde has undertaken to present the petition for a repeal of this duty procured by the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, and has kindly tendered his assistance in support of the prayer of it, in which he entirely concurs. It is signed by 4,500 attorneys. At the same time he will present a similar petition from the attorneys and solicitors of Ireland, signed by about one thousand attorneys of Ireland.

We shall be able next week to announce the day on which it will be presented, and meanwhile we exhort our friends to obtain every 'vantage ground within their power in aid of the attack thus made on this unfair impost.

Other petitions to the same effect have been presented this session, but as they proceeded from some minute section of attorneys, and were signed but by units or tens, they have not been heeded. We expect that this united effort, the conjoint solicitation of 5,500 men, and those men attorneys of both kingdoms, will meet with a different fate.

The voice of 5,500 will surely roll audibly enough to strike the dull tympanum of the financial ear.

DENBIGHSHIRE AND FLINTSHIRE LAW ASSOCIATION.

At an adjourned special meeting of the Denbighshire and Flintshire Association, held at the Lion Inn, Mold, on Thursday, the 1st of May, 1845

It was unanimously resolved, that the attorneys who attend the Denbighshire and Flintshire Quarter Sessions do at the next and subsequent sessions, as an especial mark of respect to the magistrates, and for the purpose of adding greater formality and forensic dignity to the court, appear in gowns, which are of right their ancient costume whilst attending the courts; and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to every member of the Association.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Wigton, April 21, 1845.

Sir,—I observe with regret in your last week's Law Times that the Magistrates' Clerks Bill has been withdrawn, for the purpose of making some alterations, most probably in the 12th section. I have consulted several of the Profession, and it is their opinion that the section is a very just one, and that clerks should not be engaged either for the prosecutor or prisoner in any prosecutions whatever, and they ought not to be concerned in any matter brought before the magistrates, where they act as clerk and legal advisers of the magistrates in petty sessions. I shall feel obliged if you will call the attention of the Profession and Law Societies to this clause, for the purpose of getting it retained.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.

W. Lazenby.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A Practising Attorney" thus notices a recent case:—

A case appears in the Law Journal of this month to which I think the attention of the Profession should be directed, as it points out a grievance to which all attorneys, with one exception in each county, are subject. The case is that of Cox v. Balne (14 Law J. N.S. Q.B. 95), and I need do little more than quote those parts of the case stated, and the observations of counsel and judge, which shew that there is an evil without a remedy.

The case is an application on behalf of the sheriff for a rule under the Interpleader Act.

It was "opposed by the plaintiff's attorney, on an affidavit, stating that, at the time of the issuing of the fi. fa. the under-sheriff was the agent of the petitioning creditor; and that, after the writ had been delivered to him, and before the fiat had issued, he had made a communication to the parties prosecuting the fiat, which had the effect of accelerating the issuing of the fiat. It also stated that, when the writ was delivered to the under-sheriff on the 8th, he looked at the amount which was indorsed on it, and said that it would be no use executing it, as a docket would be struck immediately. That deponent then requested the under-sheriff to execute a bill of sale to the execution creditor, which he refused to do; that there was ample time for him to have executed a bill of sale, and that deponent verily believed that the issuing the fiat had been accelerated by the communication made by the under-sheriff."

Barstow, on behalf of the sheriff, moved upon an affidavit of the under-sheriff, denying collusion, and stating that, before the time of the issuing of the fi. fa. he had been concerned for the creditors of the defendant, but not denying that he had made the alleged communication to the parties prosecuting the fiat. The under-sheriff was perfectly justified in taking the course which he did since the stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, which has repealed the statutes of 1 Hen. 5, c. 4, and 22 Geo. 2, c. 46, prohibiting an under-sheriff from practising as an attorney while in office. As an attorney, then, he was bound (!!!) to make a communication which affected the interests of his clients, the general body of creditors." * * * * "At all events, under the present state of the law, his conduct was quite justifiable."

Williams, J. refused the rule, observing, "Undoubtedly an under-sheriff may now act as an attorney during the time that he is in office, still he has no right to act in such a manner as to delay or defeat a writ of fi. fa. which is intrusted to him to be executed." "He ought to have held his hand, and abstained from acting professionally for either party." "While the execution is pending, the under-sheriff's mouth ought to be closed, which has not been the case here." Rule refused.

The result of the case is, that the under-sheriff loses his protection under the Interpleader Act; but it does not appear how far the means he took to accelerate the fiat have deprived the execution creditor of the proceeds of the levy.

The judge clearly lays down the duty of an under-sheriff, but, with the best intention, can a practising attorney keep within such limits? An execution is put into his hands, and at the same time another creditor of the defendant consults him. The knowledge he has professionally obtained renders it impossible to advise him without referring to the facts in his own mind, and if he "holds his hand and abstains from acting professionally," his client must immediately conjecture the reason, and act through another attorney, as if the under-sheriff had told him in direct terms.

The office of an under-sheriff is now a most important office, comprising that of a judge as well as that of an executive officer, and is sufficient in itself for any party without joining the emoluments of the Profession. It is desirable that it should be permanent, as its duties require experience in a particular department of legal knowledge.

For what reason the wholesome statutes which prohibited an under-sheriff from practising as an attorney while in office is repealed I know not, but I think the case of Cox v. Balne will convince every member of the Profession that the prohibition should be renewed, and in so strict a manner that it may not be evaded.

A Country Attorney asks, how are disputes to be compromised before action?

I am engaged at present in a case similar to others which have often occurred to me previously, and which must be every day happening in professional practice, [illegible] to compromise a claim before action. [illegible] to be due to him from B. B said nothing was ever due. The matter has been compromised by letters between the parties, wherein A agrees to accept, and B to pay 25*l.* in full. The money is not paid; and probably the arrangement cannot be further enforced by either party. Indeed it seems that agreements to compromise can scarcely be made at all without an instrument under seal, unless after writ issued. And yet what difference in principle does the writ make? If in this case A should try to recover the 25*l.* on the agreement, it will be requisite he should aver and prove that he had a good demand in respect of at least one-half of the 50*l.* which he may not have had, the 25*l.* being offered and accepted, on the ground that it was uncertain whether A was entitled to the 50*l.* or to nothing.

It seems to me the late cases upon accord and satisfaction in pleading have carried this point to an inconvenient degree of stringency. What becomes of the thousand and one animadversions of the Bench upon parties not compromising their claims before litigation, if in law such compromises are invalid? How is the attorney to act in such cases; must he require releases under seal upon every amicable arrangement? (See Longridge v. Dorville, 5 B. & Ald. 117; Allies v. Probyn, 2 C. M. & R. 408; Edwards v. Baugh, 12 Law J. 426, Exch.; Reeves v. Hearne, 1 M. & W. 325.) There appears to be no remedy in equity to restrain either party from availing himself of the legal inefficacy of these compromises.

To Readers and Correspondents.

An Articled Clerk.—There are lectures at the London University, at King's College, and at the Law Institution, but we do not know the subjects or the terms.

Another Articled Clerk.—We do not undertake to give opinions gratis.

An Attorney.—Of course, such a question cannot be answered.

A Friend.—There is an obvious motive for this sarcasm. The editor happens to be a professional rival of the learned gentleman. It is not worth notice.

R. S.—The publisher of the Law Times can procure any forms at the regular prices. What is the cost of the set inquired for he cannot ascertain.

E. O. (Stockport).—The letter is much too long for insertion at this busy time. When the business of the courts slackens it shall have a place.

A great mass of correspondence is unavoidably postponed to make way for the flood of reports, to which precedence is always given as being of most immediate importance. The monster printing machine will be ready in about three weeks, and then we shall be enabled to meet occasional pressure of materials by frequent double numbers. Till then, we must pray the indulgence of our readers.

Subscriber.—The publisher of the Law Times will pay the carriage of any parcel of forms the price of which exceeds 1l.; and books for binding and any other works wanted by the subscriber will be inclosed in the same parcel.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Publisher begs to inform the Subscribers to the Law Times that the subscription for the current half-year should be transmitted in the course of the ensuing week, by those who wish to avail themselves of the advantages of pre-payment.

Members of the Verulam Society are requested at the same time to forward their subscriptions for the current year.

The pre-paid subscription for the current half-year of The Critic, henceforth to be published weekly, will be 8s. 6d. only.

The Indices to the fourth volume being now completed, the numbers for binding may be sent, through the post, in parcels open at the ends, with a mark by which they may be known, and of which the Publisher should be advised by letter, as also how, when bound, it is to be returned. If sent by parcel, advantage may be taken of the opportunity to inclose other books for the binder.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1845.

TO READERS.

An accidental delay in the completion of the monster printing machine, now in course of erection for printing the Law Times, will prevent the adoption, for three weeks, of the multiplied pages to meet occasional pressure of material.

In the meanwhile we shall endeavour to bring up some of the heavy arrears by a Supplement next week.

THE ROGUE'S INDEMNITY ACT.

So Lord Brougham is at last convinced that his famous Bill was a great blunder.

Strange to say, the Law Times was the only journal in the United Kingdom that represented the wrongs inflicted upon creditors by that most cruel enactment.

But though it was our lot to fight the battle single-handed, it was done effectually. The speech of the noble and learned lord (vide report) betrays the process by which his conversion was brought about. That process was recommended by the Law Times.

Our advice was, that each case of wrong inflicted by the 20*l.* clause should be forthwith stated in a letter, and addressed to the noble lord, as the author of the wrong, through the medium of the penny post.

The advice was adopted by the Profession, and behold the result! Lord Brougham's breakfast-table was flooded with epistles, each one detailing some grievous injustice which his lordship had been the means of inflicting. Such evidence was overwhelming and irresistible; so down comes the author of the iniquity to the House of Lords, declares that he can no longer endure the clamorous complainants, and impatiently demands the repeal of a law which threatens to stifle him with penny-post letters!

But the proposed manner of redressing the evil is as unstatesmanlike as was the production of the mischief.

The country asks not the repeal of the law, but the amendment of the law. There is no desire to restore imprisonment for debt; all that is required is an efficient remedy in lieu of it.

Nothing can be more simple and certain than the plan we have proposed, and which has received, we believe, the unanimous approval of the Legal Profession and of the mercantile classes.

We repeat it, that it may be urged again and again upon the attention of those who are about to apply some remedy to the existing grievance. It is contained in few words.

The creditor demands that the debtor shall pay his debt; or if he do not pay, that he shall shew why he does not pay; if he can pay, that he should be made to pay; if he cannot pay, that he should prove that his inability proceeds from no dishonesty, ere he shall be entitled to relief and protection; and if guilty of fraud, that he shall be punished for that fraud.

These are the obvious principles upon which any law of insolvency should be framed; and in accordance with these principles, we propose—

That upon the return by the sheriff of nulla bona to a fi. fa. the judgment creditor shall be empowered to summon the debtor before the nearest Commissioner of Bankrupts; that thenceforth he shall be in the custody of the Court, until he shall have proved his title to protection by disclosing all property in possession and reversion, and accounting for his non-payment. If guilty of fraud in the contracting of the debt without reasonable prospect of payment, or in the disposal of his effects, the debtor to be subjected to a limited term of imprisonment as a punishment for such fraud, and not by way of imprisonment for debt.

Such is the outline of a provision which would answer all the ends of justice, secure the creditor, relieve the honest debtor, and punish the dishonest as he deserves, without resorting again to imprisonment for debt, the total abolition of which might with such safeguards be adopted advantageously.

FLINTSHIRE QUARTER SESSIONS.

WE were, it seems, wrongly informed as to the decision of the Flintshire and Denbighshire Law Society in relation to the endeavour to establish a Bar at the sessions of the former county. It has been stated to us officially, and we hasten to correct the error into which we had been misled, that so far from their approving the projected innovation, the members present at the meeting were unanimous in their conclusion that the claim of exclusive audience preferred by the Bar could not and ought not to be sanctioned, and loud, and we must say, not uncalled for, complaints were made of the letter of Mr. DENTON to the Chairman of the Sessions, in which some needless and very unjust aspersions were cast upon the attorneys.

But the following letter addressed by the Secretary of the Society, on behalf of the Profession practising in those counties, to the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions, so well sets forth all the arguments by which the attorneys claim a continuance of the privilege they have there immemorially enjoyed, that we cannot do better than lay it before our readers:—

ATTORNEYS AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—My attention has been directed to a leading article, headed as above, which appeared in the LAW TIMES of last Saturday, in relation to the claim made by certain barristers to exclusive audience at the late Flintshire Quarter Sessions (erroneously stated by you as the "Denbighshire" Sessions), wherein you state, "We have been informed that the subject [of such claim] was subsequently mooted at a meeting of the attorneys of the county, and that a majority of those present were decidedly in favour of the attendance of a Bar."

The meeting alluded to was that of the "Denbighshire and Flintshire Law Association," held at the Leeswood Arms Hotel, in Mold, on Saturday, the 19th inst. when I presided, and resolutions disapproving of the intrusion of a Bar at the Denbighshire and Flintshire Quarter Ses- were unanimously adopted, for the rea- given in the inclosed document addressed to the Honourable Lloyd Kenyon, the Chairman of the Flintshire Quarter Sessions, which has been signed by nearly every attorney in the two counties, and which you may oblige me by inserting at the foot of this letter. You may therefore judge of my astonishment at seeing the erroneous statement alluded to.

I have since ascertained, on the very best authority, that the false information was furnished to you by a barrister! and one word of comment from me upon so flagrant a breach of the truth would be superfluous. I leave him to be dealt with by you, whom he has so grossly misled, and by his brethren of the Bar, whose province and interest it is to maintain untarnished the honour of their branch of the Profession.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
JAMES EYTON,
President of the Denbighshire and Flintshire Law Association.

Mold, April 30, 1845.

TO THE HONOURABLE LLOYD KENYON, CHAIRMAN OF THE FLINTSHIRE QUARTER SESSIONS.

SIR,—We have been furnished by Mr. Horne with an extract from your letter to Mr. Roberts, the clerk of the peace, requesting that the attorneys would furnish you in your official capacity with their reasons, in writing, against the barristers having exclusive audience in your court, and we beg respectfully to submit the following.

1st. That Mr. Serjeant Manning, the Recorder of Oxford, and Mr. Waddington, the Recorder of Lichfield, both counsel of considerable eminence and long standing, have judicially decided, and mentioned the name of the Lord Chief Justice of England as their authority for such decisions, that attorneys have a right to act as advocates at sessions, although a sufficient number of barristers are present (LAW TIMES, Jan. 1845, pages 303-4; and we hold a letter from the town clerk of Oxford confirming the fact of Mr. Serjeant Manning's decision), whilst the only decision in favour of barristers being allowed exclusive audience is that of Sir Gregory Lewin, the Recorder of Doncaster, which appears to have been founded upon his individual opinion only, without adducing any authority in support of such opinion.

2nd. That as attorneys have from the earliest times practised as advocates at the Flintshire Quarter Sessions with satisfaction to their clients and the public, we consider the attempt now made by the barristers to obtain exclusive audience as an unfair invasion of our rights.

3rd. That the attorneys who have heretofore practised as advocates at the Flintshire and Denbighshire Sessions have made the Poor and Criminal Law their peculiar study, and we consider that the amount of business will not support a Bar of experience and eminence. The local knowledge of attorneys and their intimate acquaintance with the language and habits of the people also give them advantages in advocacy that barristers cannot hope to attain.

4th. That the barristers who attended and claimed exclusive audience at the last Flintshire Sessions may, without invidiousness, be designated as of small standing at the bar, as not one of them to our knowledge has ever been engaged in a parish appeal, by far the most important and intricate branch of sessions practice, or ever drawn or settled the grounds of an appeal, which latter demand more practical than theoretical knowledge of the Law of Settlement; and it is not known that any one of them has ever led in a prosecution, or been intrusted with the defence of a prisoner. We therefore respectfully submit that our clients ought not to suffer whilst these gentlemen are being initiated and trained in the business of advocacy.

5th. That the attorneys are responsible to their clients for the conduct and management of their cases, and should the barristers have exclusive audience, the suitors will be burdened with the heavy additional expense of bringing over from distant counties, by special retainers, such barristers of tried and known ability as the attorneys and their clients can confide in.

6th. That the promised saving of expense to the county purse from decreased litigation, held out by Mr. Denton as a bait for the admission of barristers to exclusive audience, is, we humbly submit, unfounded and illusory. To justify a charge so grave, so unfounded, and so offensive to the attorneys as a body, we Mr. Denton should have adduced incontrovertible facts, and not contented himself with mere declamatory assertions.

7th. That the practice of advocacy tends to elevate the standard of intelligence, professional fitness, and respectability among the attorneys, which we respectfully submit it is the peculiar interest and duty of the magistracy by all means to promote, not only as their best safeguard and bulwark in the exercise of their difficult and onerous public functions, but as tending to the general welfare of society.

We have the honour to remain, Sir, your most obedient servants,

(Signed) JAMES EYTON,
President of the Denbighshire and Flintshire Law Association;
J. LEWIS, Secretary;

and by thirty-five other attorneys.

To this we have only to add, on our own parts, that in the remarks we have made upon the question at issue, we did not contemplate an exclusive audience for a Bar, or the exclusion of the attorneys from any privilege they had previously enjoyed. The utmost the new comers can ask is that which Lord DENMAN has sanctioned, and which is we think all that they can claim, pre-audience. It will then be at the option of the attorneys of the county whether they will have them or not. Certainly to compel their employment to the exclusion of those whose lives have been devoted to practice in these courts, would be an arbitrary interference which is not likely to be sanctioned by magistrates or judges, and which the Bar would do wisely not to attempt.

Since the above was written, we have received the resolution of the Quarter Sessions; it is as follows:—

At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held by adjournment at the County Hall, in Mold, in and for the county of Flint, on Thursday, the 1st day of May, 1845: present,

The Hon. Lloyd Kenyon, Chairman.	Thomas Mather, esq.
The Right Hon. Lord Mostyn.	Edw. Pemberton, esq.
The Hon. E. M. L. Mostyn.	C. J. W. D. Dundas, esq.
The Hon. T. P. Lloyd.	Edw. Lloyd, esq.
Wilson Jones, esq.	H. Lleigh Thomas, esq.
F. C. Philips, esq.	J. Prys Eyton, esq.
R. J. Mostyn, esq.	Peter Parry, esq.
Ll. F. Lloyd, esq.	H. M. A. Jones, esq.
	The Rev. Thomas Pennant.
	W. T. Ellis, esq.

The question of the application of the five members of the Bar for audience at Quarter Sessions, to the exclusion of the Attorneys, who have been heretofore accustomed to practise as advocates in this court, having been discussed, the magistrates declined to grant such application.

THE PRESS AND THE BAR.

THE letter of a correspondent, published last week, directed our attention to a proceeding on the part of one of the daily papers, the particulars of which are detailed in the number, just issued, of the Law Magazine, from whose pages we extract a narrative of one of the most tyrannous attempts to wield the power of the press against an individual which has ever been exhibited in this country, where that power has hitherto been exercised with a most commendable regard for justice.

The propriety of permitting barristers on circuit to perform the office of reporters for the newspapers has been greatly discussed during the last quarter. One circuit, the Oxford, has passed a resolution prohibiting all barristers on it from reporting for any newspapers: others contemplate doing so. The circumstances which gave rise to this resolution on the Oxford Circuit are of sufficient importance to interest, as they unquestionably affect, the Profession at large; nor will this case recommend itself less to the attention of the Profession because it discloses a personal grievance. Our readers will learn with surprise that Mr. Serjeant Talfourd has become the object of a system of cowardly malignity of which it is almost as difficult to discover the cause as to appreciate the baseness. They who are aware of the tenure by which a professional position is ever held at the bar,—how contingent is its permanence on the various and secret influences on opinion not always well informed or wisely guided, will well understand the effect alike on the prosperity and fame of an advocate, liable to be produced by the suppression of the usual modes of publicity to his progress and successes. It is, perhaps, to be lamented that honour and reputation are dependent on appliances which have no relation to merit; but so it is; and it is just as impossible to deny taht notoriety is a road to forensic fortune, as to doubt that it is an essential element to fame. The injury done to Serjeant Talfourd is the utter exclusion of his name from the reports of the leading journal of this country, in which publicity is always first sought, and from which exclusion is the most significant and injurious. Not only does the Times never report Serjeant Talfourd's name in any cause in which he is engaged, but his name is struck out of the reports sent to the office by the gentlemen who report for it. The last time [illegible] name appeared in the Times was in a special jury cause tried at Stafford, which Serjeant Talfourd and Mr. Whitmore are reported in the Times of the 21st of March to have appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Alexander, Q.C. Mr. Lee, and Mr. Symons, for the defendant. Just previously a discussion took place at the Bar mess on the propriety of the resolution we have already named. Serjeant Talfourd, however, himself moved the previous question, which was carried; and spoke against the exclusion. It is therefore impossible that by his conduct on that occasion he could have given umbrage to any one connected with the Times newspaper. In the three causes tried at Shrewsbury (the next town on the Oxford circuit) which the Times alone reported, Serjeant Talfourd led. In that of Jobson v. Loxdale, in the Times of the 26th March, the names of the counsel for the plaintiff (Talfourd and F. V. Lee) were omitted, and those for the defendant inserted; so that the report records alone that Mr. Whateley, Q. C. and Mr. Godson, Q. C. appeared for the defendant. In the case of France v. Dawson, in which the names of the counsel for the plaintiff (Mr. Godson, Q. C. and Mr. Keating) are inserted, Mr. Whateley, Q. C. is stated to have appeared for the defendant, omitting the name of Serjeant Talfourd, who led for the defendant. The judge paid a compliment to the "speech of the counsel for the defendant," which was thus made to apply to Mr. Whateley, though actually addressed to Serjeant Talfourd! A third falsification occurs in the Times of March 27, in the report of Stokes v. Boycott, in which Mr. Lee, Mr. Keating, and Mr. Whitmore were counsel for the plaintiff, and Serjeant Talfourd, Mr. Alexander, Q.C. and Mr. Yardley, for the defendant. The Times, however, omitted the names of Serjeant Talfourd and Mr. Yardley. Serjeant Talfourd, who happened to be in every cause at Shrewsbury, is reported in none. At Gloucester, where he was retained in a majority of the thirty-two causes in the list, his name is studiously excluded. In one case the words "the learned serjeant" have been left in the body of the report, thus plainly proving the mutilation.

Mr. W. H. Cooke, being the avowed reporter of the Times, was called upon for an explanation by the circuit of this conduct; his reply was, that he had fairly and properly reported Serjeant Talfourd's name, and that the erasure of it must have occurred at the Times office. At Gloucester, where the matter was finally discussed, Mr. Cooke read to the circuit a letter addressed by him to the person at the Times office, to whom his reports were also directed; in this letter he complained of the omission, and sought the means of vindicating his own conduct from the imputation cast upon him. He also read a reply to it from the Times office, couched in terms of coarse and vulgar insolence, containing a refusal to give any explanation for the satisfaction of the circuit, or to gratify the "vanity" of any of its members! The circuit then passed the resolution already named, and appended to it a vote, of which the object was to express the satisfaction of the circuit with Mr. Cooke's conduct in the whole affair.

The attack did not end with the assizes. Though Serjeant Talfourd has appeared in several causes and arguments during this Term, his name has been rigorously excluded from the reports in the Times. We must name a recent and signal instance; that of Reg. v. Gregory, reported in the Times of April 24th, in which Mr. Serjeant Talfourd appeared for the Crown. We happen to know that the learned gentleman, who reports both ably and fairly for the Times in the Queen's Bench, sent Serjeant Talfourd's name in his report to the office of the paper; it was struck out, and the case appears without any counsel's name, although in the next case (Ex parte Kinney) the counsel's name engaged are allowed to appear. There are other instances equally flagrant; and Mr. F. V. Lee appears to share in the same exclusion.

"An injury to an individual is ever interesting to society;" but much is that interest strengthened when it relates to one whose urbanity and genius, whose qualities of head and heart have wrought a double victory, disarming envy whilst achieving eminence,—one who has raised the eloquence of the Bar and enriched the literature of England,—but whose worthiest trophy is the cordial esteem his virtues have commanded, in the very arena of his conquests, from the rivals of his success: a man of the most lively and generous sympathies, gifted by nature with all the highest attributes of popularity,—

> From the charmed council to the festive board,
> Of human feelings the unbounded lord.

We believe that of all those engaged in the conflict of passions and interests which beset the Bar, none have risen more honourably exempt from the malice of jealousy, or the qualities which provoke dislike.

The injury attempted to be thus inflicted on such a man and by such means, from whatever quarter it spring, is a pitiful, wanton, dastardly outrage; and is so characterized not only by all persons acquainted with the fact, but nowhere more cordially than in Westminster Hall. We never remember a more unanimous feeling of disgust. Of the Times newspaper, as a journal, of its leading proprietor, and of those who control its political conduct, we speak not; for it is utterly impossible that any men of ordinary sagacity could have recourse to a system of attack so certain to entail contempt on its perpetrators. The nature of the injury sufficiently points to the grade of persons from whom it springs. Mr. Walter, as a man of sense and a gentleman, who has a character and a status in society to maintain, must either be unaware of the scandal cast on the journal, or he is less connected with it than the world imagines.

One word as to the conduct of the Bar: the Oxford circuit has, we think, done rightly. If its members are liable, through the arrangements of newspapers, and the class of persons into whose hands reports fall, to be thus subjected to imputation or suspicion of base conduct, then the office of reporter is incompatible with the dignity of their position alike as barristers and gentlemen. There are other reasons why it is inconvenient, if not incorrect, that barristers should on circuit report for any newspaper, though honourably conducted, as we believe the Chronicle, Herald, and Post always are in respect to these reports. What is it that these barristers are required to report? Not law points, like those alone reported in the standard Reports, and in the Law Journal, Jurist, Justice of the Peace, Law Times, &c. but facts only: facts consisting mostly of the raciest food for the least refined tastes—details of murders, robberies, and the pungencies of the criminal courts. This is not proper occupation for a barrister; neither is it the province of first-class reporters on a morning newspaper—a body of gentlemen no less distinguished for the great men who have sprung from them, than for the abilities and fairness which have of late years so signally enhanced the importance and rank of their functions. Reporting for newspapers on circuit much more nearly partakes of the office of the penny-a-line dreadful accident and horrid murder mongers, than that of parliamentary reporters. The Bar is more in need of moral elevation than of further license: its tone requires that we restrict its downward tendencies, and remove, rather than sanction, resources tending to laxity and liable to discredit.

In this language of indignant rebuke we entirely concur. Whatever be the motive that has influenced the conductors of "the leading journal" to this shabby, pitiful, and cowardly abuse, for the gratification of some petty personal spite against an individual, of the power which the confidence of the public has reposed in them, in full reliance upon its generous and truthful exercise, we trust that so glaring an offence against all rules of justice and fair dealing will not be permitted to pass without an emphatic protest from the other journals against the introduction of a practice whose tendency must be to degrade the character of the press, and to overthrow its influence with the public, by destroying all confidence in its veracity. Hitherto it has been the boast of our journals that no party or personal feelings were permitted to colour their reports. Facts were fairly and truly stated, without reference to their bearing upon the men concerned in them. But this wise and prudent policy is, it seems, so utterly abandoned by the foremost of our journals, in a spiteful endeavour to injure a gentleman in many ways an honour to his country and an ornament to his profession, that it condescends to the exceeding shabbiness of garbling and falsifying its reports to avoid the mention of his name.

That such an attempt must utterly fail to accomplish its malicious design, that it will re-act upon those who have resorted to it, in no manner diminishes its iniquity, or renders an emphatic condemnation of it by all other journals who value the character of the press, a duty which they should promptly and unequivocally perform.

The Profession, whose independence and integrity are thus indirectly assailed, will deem it an insult offered to all its members. The Times is famous for a keen sense of its own interest. If its managers could hear, as we do, with what feelings their dirty doings in this matter are received by the Profession to whose support it is so largely indebted, they would yield to expediency what they deny to justice. Though the spirit of the gentleman does not appear to influence them, the spirit of the trades-[illegible] tell them that such a proceeding as we have here described and denounced will be as unprofitable as it is dishonourable.

The professional question mooted by our contemporary must be reserved for future consideration. It is a very grave one.

VERULAM FORMS.

It has been found necessary, in order to prevent confusion in orders, to adopt a different system in numbering the forms. In future each form will have a distinct number, without regard to classification, although in the lists and advertisements they will be classified, with their numbers appended, and by those numbers they should be carefully indicated in the order. The list in the advertisement of to-day presents the numbers by which they are now and will in future be known.

The following are in preparation:—

- Notice of Declaration in Ejectment.
- Cognovit.
- Warrant of Distress for recovery of Tithe Rent-charge.
- Notice of Claim (Counties)
- Ditto (Boroughs)
- Notice of Objection, ditto.
- Common Covenants in Conveyances.

We shall be obliged by suggestions of useful forms by experienced practitioners.

The Conditions of Sale were exhausted in three days: hence the disappointment of so many applicants. A fresh supply is now procured, and it is hoped that, in future, abundance of them will be kept on hand. The number was purposely curtailed at first, lest any improvements should be suggested by the Profession. But we are glad to find that they are everywhere much approved. They were indeed prepared by a very able hand and with extreme care. There will be no difficulty in adapting them to almost every variety of circumstances.

It should be added, that the publisher has agreed to pay the carriage of the parcel wherever the order for forms exceeds 1*l*. This will remove the only obstacle to their general use.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The sixth number of Practice Cases is issued. The eleventh number of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases will be ready on Wednesday. The fifth number of Criminal Law Cases, the twelfth of Real Property, and the seventh of Practice Cases are in the press.

The following new members have been added since our last report:—

- Whittaker, G. W., Bampton, Oxon.
- Weston, M. C., Dorchester.
- Scriven and Young, Hastings.
- Wakefield, John Charles, 1, South-square, Gray's-inn.
- Wake, G. A., Southampton.
- Fardell, Rev. H., Vicarage, Wisbeach.
- Dransfield, John, Penistone, Barnsley.
- Bretherton, Edward, Liverpool.
- Coombs and Son, Dorchester.
- Castleman, Edward, Wimborne.
- Finlason, W., 5, Essex-court, Temple.
- Windeyer, E., 6, Old-square, Lincoln's-inn.
- Rawstone and Wilson, Preston.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

A Practical Treatise on the Laws relating to the Church and the Clergy. By Henry William Cripps, M.A. of Lincoln's-Inn and the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and Fellow of New College, Oxford. London, 1845. Sweet.

Mr. Cripps proposed to himself a twofold object in the authorship of this portly volume: that it should be at once "of easy reference to the lawyer and of practical utility to the Churchman." This has unavoidably increased its bulk, for it is impossible to make legal topics intelligible to the non-legal world without circumlocutory explanations both of technical terms, whose employment is often unavoidable, and of the subject-matter, which must continually be but imperfectly comprehended by those whose studies have not been turned to jurisprudence.

Mr. Cripps has been more successful in his somewhat perilous design than we could have anticipated from its first aspect. It usually happens that endeavours to make a book at once popular and professional fail in effecting either purpose, inasmuch as the very modifications calculated to please the one party are pretty sure to be distasteful to the other. The lawyer would be like to deem ly of a book which avoids legal language, to more intelligible than any periphrasis; and the layman would close with disappointment a volume that discoursed to him after a professional fashion, which to his ears conveys little more meaning than so much Hindoostanee. Nor can we say that Mr. CRIPPS has altogether escaped this dilemma. But in judging the results of his toil, it must be remembered that no other course was open to him, and that the evil was unavoidable. The lawyers interested in clerical law are not numerous enough of themselves to reward the toil and cost of getting up so heavy a publication; it was practicable only with the combined patronage of both Professions, and therefore each must be content to excuse concessions made to the other, for the sake of the possession of a work which has long been wanting to both.

The subject of this huge volume of 790 pages is divided into eight books, some of which are again subdivided into chapters. As the most useful form in which we can make known to our readers the progress of professional authorship is by a summary of the form into which the author has thrown his treatise, we will describe the order of the contents of Mr. CRIPPS's essay.

The First Book treats of persons ecclesiastical. This is subdivided into chapters, which discourse successively of the Church of England; the church establishment, and the Queen's supremacy; of ordination; the convocation; the government and discipline of the ecclesiastical body; the ecclesiastical commission; the powers, privileges, and restrictions of ecclesiastical persons generally; the rights, privileges, and duties of ecclesiastical persons separately, from the archbishop to the curate; and, lastly, of ecclesiastical officers, servants, &c.

The Second Book treats of the property of persons ecclesiastical, and of the provisions recognized by law for their support. It comprises four chapters, relating successively to the lands of ecclesiastical corporations, tithes and tithe rent-charge, offerings and obventions, first-fruits and tenths, and their application.

The Third Book is devoted to things ecclesiastical; and its five chapters treat of ecclesiastical parishes and districts; churches, seats, and pews; the goods, utensils, and ornaments of churches and churchyards.

The Fourth Book is solely occupied with the important subject of church-rates; and the Fifth with that of benefices, dealing in three chapters with "things essential to the obtaining complete possession of a benefice;" such as advowsons, presentations, induction, lapse, &c.; then of "things incident to the possession of a benefice;" as residence, pluralities, &c.; and then of "the manner in which a benefice or the profits thereof may be lost;" as sequestration, resignation, and so forth.

The Sixth Book sets forth "the duties of a clergyman in discharge of his holy office," classified under the following heads: public worship, baptism, marriage, burial, administration of the Lord's Supper.

The Seventh Book describes the duties of a clergyman in his intercourse with his parishioners; wherein the author in three chapters sets forth the law of parish vestries; the duties of the clergyman in respect of the union workhouses, and treats of dissenters from the Established Church, and of the laws affecting them.

The Eighth and last book is devoted to the subject of "offences against religion."

It will be apparent from this outline of the author's scheme, that his treatise is very comprehensive, and comprises all that might fairly come within the title of his book. Such a work affords abundant material for instructive and interesting extract; but at this season, with so many yet more urgent claims upon our space, we must, though with reluctance, resist the temptation, and commit Mr. CRIPPS's Laws of the Church and Clergy to those of the Profession to whom any of the various topics above named may be wanting, assuring them that they are treated with research and acumen, and rendered readily accessible by a copious index.

NOTE.—We give place to the above review of an able work, in justice to the author, by whom, and not by the publisher, the volume was transmitted; and we take this opportunity of answering to the readers of the LAW TIMES a question which has been frequently put to us, namely, why it is that the publications of Mr. SWEET are not noticed in its columns, in common with those of other booksellers. We can assure them that it proceeds from no wrong feeling on the part of the conductors of the LAW TIMES. Books are here noticed with strict impartiality, careless of the name of publisher or author. Mr. SWEET's publications alone have not been named here because, for some motives best known to himself, he chooses not to reciprocate the kindliness with which the JURIST, which is his property, has ever been treated by the LAW TIMES.

It is scarcely necessary to repeat our assurance that the uncourteousness of the publisher will never tempt us to treat his books and authors with neglect or unfairness. If he does not choose to avail himself of the medium of a Journal which circulates more extensively among the Profession than all the other legal periodicals put together, his is the loss, and his rivals reap the gain. But we are anxious that it should not be supposed that we are actuated by any such unworthy jealousies, and that the non-appearance of notices of Mr. SWEET's publications is wholly the result of his own choice, and proceeds from no ill-will on the part of the LAW TIMES.

This explanation will, we trust, be deemed satisfactory by those who have asked it.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

ON OPENING BIDDINGS.

THE case of Gravenor v. Miles, reported in this number of the LAW TIMES, induces us to offer some remarks upon the law applicable to opening biddings in general.

The chief aim, as Sir E. Sugden expresses it, of courts of equity in sales made under its direction is to obtain as great a price for the estate as can possibly be got; and accordingly the Court is in the habit of opening the biddings after the estate is sold. This, however, must be done upon the motion of some person who is willing to make an advance upon the price at which the estate has been sold. There appears to be no fixed rule as to the amount of advance at which the Court will open the biddings, it having varied from ten to five per cent. and even less than that amount, where the report of the first purchase has not been absolutely confirmed.

Where, however, the report of the purchase has been absolutely confirmed, the Court will not open the biddings "unless some particular principle arises out of the purchaser's character, as connected with the ownership of the estate, or some trust or confidence, or his own conduct in obtaining his report." This was Lord Eldon's judgment in the case of Morice v. The Bishop of Durham (11 Ves. 57), and it has since been followed in many cases, so that now it is necessary, after the report of the purchase has been confirmed, to shew some fraud or improper conduct, as well as a willingness to advance the price, in order to induce the Court to open the biddings.

The advance which is to be made upon the biddings is to be deposited to the credit of the cause by the person who moves to open them, and the costs of the previous purchaser are to be paid by the same person. The biddings are considered as opened for the benefit of the suitor, and not of the person who proposes to make an advance, and therefore no case of hardship upon the person proposing to be a purchaser in the former sale, will induce the Court to open the biddings, unless there are other circumstances which render it beneficial for the parties in the cause that the applicant's motion should be granted.

When a person is desirous of opening the sale as to some lots, he must submit to take the other lots at the price paid for them, if the first purchasers desire it.

The biddings having been opened, and the person at whose application they were opened having been outbid, he will be entitled to have his deposit returned, with interest at four per cent. and his expenses, where it appears that the opening has been bonâ fide, and the estate has been benefited by the proceeding. This appears to be perfectly fair and reasonable, and we call particular attention to it, because the case of Filder v. Bellingham, upon which the later case of Gravenor v. Miles was founded, is, we believe, the first case which has gone so far as to allow interest and the costs of the party who opened the biddings to be paid to him. The terms, too, in which the solicitor's letter in Gravenor v. Miles is worded, though not consenting to the costs being paid to the party himself, but assenting only to their being costs in the cause, were construed by the Court to be an assent to the party's having his costs, although, from his not being a party to the cause, the strict terms of the letter could not be complied with. None of the parties to the cause appearing upon the action, it was considered by the Court to be reasonably concluded from that letter that the party was to be allowed to take his costs, though not in the way the solicitors were willing to allow them.

There appears to be much equity and good sense in such an allowance, as otherwise persons would be deterred from opening biddings, lest upon their being outbid, beneficial as such outbidding might be to the estate, they should lose the interest on their deposit, as well as incur considerable expense in the attempt which has proved a benefit to the suitors in the case. It is not to be expected that parties should enter into a speculation of this kind without having such a security afforded to them, and we trust that the decision in this case will have a beneficial effect in inducing parties who are willing to act bonâ fide, to open biddings, where they are assured of obtaining their deposit, interest, and expenses, in case the estate should be so benefited by their proceeding as to have their advance outbid.

VALUE OF RAILWAY PROPERTY.—From a recent return of the annual value of railway property, made to the Income-tax Commissioners to April, 1843, for each county in England and Wales, it appears that Middlesex, the smallest county but one in England, is richest in railways, having an annual income of 960,443*l*. Lancashire comes next, with a clear annual value of 593,515*l*. Surrey is next, with 191,018*l*.; then Durham, with 171,089*l*.; Derbyshire, with 104,204*l*.; and Yorkshire, with 95,510*l*. There are still twenty counties in England and five in Wales altogether without the benefit of railways.

We understand the beautiful estate of Blair, in the parish of Carnock, near Dunfermline, was on Wednesday sold by public auction, within Messrs. Stevenson's sale-rooms, George-street, at 12,000*l*., to Mr. Allison, proprietor of the estate of Oakley, in the same parish.—Edinburgh Evening Post.

SALE OF THE HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—On Thursday a sale took place, at the Auction Mart, of the Queen's Concert Rooms, celebrated as the Hanover-square Rooms, on which occasion many of the élite of the musical and theatrical world were present. These premises were built, about sixty years ago, by Sir T. Gallini, who bequeathed them to his daughter, the late Miss Gallini, by the direction of whose devisees in trust they were disposed of. At these rooms the Queen's Ancient Concerts, the Philharmonic, and other celebrated music meetings, have been held. When the Duke of Cumberland rented the rooms, at which time he was one of the active members of the Ancient Concerts, they were let for 1,100*l*. per annum. The clear rent of the rooms, which comprise the great concert-room (in which her Majesty's box forms the centre of the east end of the hall), capable of containing an audience of about 800 persons, and a supper-room, in which 400 persons can be accommodated, &c. is now 600*l*. per annum. The first offer for the property was 6,000*l.*; the second, 8,000*l.*; and it was knocked down, after great competition, for 12,250*l.*

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

EASTER TERM.

PLAYFORD v. PLAYFORD.

Expectant heir—Consideration—Agreement—Implied abandonment.

An agreement with an expectant heir, however advanced in life, in respect to the disposal of his reversion, will not be enforced against him where a sufficient consideration is not secured to him under it.

Where there is an obscurity in the terms of an agreement, and laches have been committed on both sides in performance of the conditions contained in it, the Court will not decree a specific performance.

The plaintiff in this case being forty years of age, and heir in tail, subject to the life estate of his father and mother in certain lands, at Northrepp, in the county of Norfolk, applied to his father and mother to join him in barring the entail, and conveying their life estates and the fee upon mortgage for the sum of 1,200*l*. and interest, to which they consented upon his entering into an agreement for the settlement of the estate upon terms; whereupon an agreement was executed between the father and the plaintiff, in the words following:—"That subject to the mortgage the uses of the fine and recovery should be limited to the father for life, remainder to his mother for life, remainder in case the father should at any time be obliged to pay the interest due upon the said mortgage, or any part thereof, or the plaintiff should not, by August 1836, pay off and satisfy the said mortgage, and the father should then pay off the said mortgage and release the plaintiff therefrom, and from such mortgage debt, then the said trustees should stand seized of the estate to the use of the father in fee, and the father covenanted that in the event of his taking the estate he would by deed or will give and devise to the plaintiff, or his issue, not less than one-seventh part in value of the estate; and as to the remainder or reversion after the decease of the father and mother of the plaintiff, in case the plaintiff should by 1836 pay off and satisfy the said mortgage, then, that the said trustees should stand seized of the estate to the use of the plaintiff and the heirs of his body in tail, subject to and charged with 500*l*. to be raised within two years of plaintiff obtaining possession of the estate, and paid in such manner as the father should appoint." The estate tail was barred, and the estate conveyed to Wilkinson upon mortgage, to secure 1,200*l*. and interest; and plaintiff alone covenanted with Wilkinson to pay the mortgage debt; no resettlement of the estate was ever executed; the father continued in possession of the lands, and paid the interest due on the mortgage up to his death; the plaintiff did not pay off the mortgage in 1836 or afterwards; the father never paid off the mortgage. The father by his will devised all his estates generally to his three sons, the defendants, and did not name the plaintiff therein or take any notice of the agreement or of his having paid the interest on the mortgage. Upon the death of the father his widow entered and executed a lease for 21 years to the defendants, and continues to pay the interest on the mortgage; at her death the defendants, who were previously in possession, continued to occupy the lands. The plaintiff files a bill praying that he may be declared entitled to redeem the mortgage; that the agreement may be declared inoperative, and offering to pay whatever shall be found due on account of the payments made by the father or mother on account of the mortgage debt and interest, and that the lease to the defendants might be declared void. After this bill was on the file the defendants paid off the mortgage and took a conveyance of the fee, whereupon the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill to redeem the mortgage, and have the usual and all other account taken, and on payment of what should be found due to have the lands conveyed to him by the defendants. The defendants then filed a cross bill to have the articles of agreement confirmed and carried into effect, and the original and supplemental bills dismissed.

Walker and Bagshawe contended that the agreement ought to be declared void, from its being a dealing with an expectant heir for his reversion, and inadequacy of consideration.

Romily and Shadwell, for defendants, contended that it was a family transaction, that all the parties to the agreement were of sufficient age to judge of what they were doing, and that the courts of equity were very scrupulous in interfering in such arrangements.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This case turns altogether upon the effect of this agreement in respect to the re-settlement of the estate. No question arises in respect to the mortgage, the mortgagee was no party to the agreement: the fact of there being a mortgage does not come under consideration. The agreement is very obscure in shewing the intention of the parties at the time; they could not have understood the meaning of the arrangement made: it cannot be supposed that it was meant that the father, by payment of a comparately trifling amount, such as five or ten shillings, on account of the interest, should thereby become entitled to the estate, on default of the son paying the mortgage off in 1836, and the son was then only to have one-seventh of the estate, and the amount of the mortgage for an estate of such value, which, by consent, appears to be worth about 7,000*l*. It is therefore clear that, under this agreement, a sufficient consideration was not secured to the plaintiff for the property he might lose if a literal construction was put upon the words used. The father, by the payment of the smallest sum on account of interest, might entitle himself to take advantage of plaintiff's difficulties, and deprive the plaintiff of all but one-seventh of the estate; and if he was prevented doing so, he was to have 500*l*. out of the estate; in fact the agreement bore everywhere in favour of the father, and nowhere in favour of the son. The true effect to be given to this agreement may be more clearly arrived at by considering the acts of the parties which have taken place, and the manner they treated those acts, as affecting the rights of the plaintiff. The father paid the interest on the mortgage up to the time of his death, having previously made a will, by which he bequeaths all his property generally to his three younger sons, the defendants. He takes no notice of the agreement. He does not bequeath the estate as forfeited to him by having paid the interest on the mortgage; he does not appoint the 500*l*. he was entitled to in case the estate was not forfeited; he does not mention the name of the plaintiff in the will; it is quite clear, therefore, he did not consider he had acquired any right under the agreement. But did his acts, or those of the plaintiff, entitle him to any thing beyond a life estate in the lands? He paid the interest; the son failed to pay off the mortgage by 1836; he did not then pay off the mortgage, nor did he devise to the son one-seventh of the value of the lands. It therefore appears neither party carried out the conditions of the agreement, or acted in contemplation of them. Mutual laches would prevent this agreement being carried out in favour of either party, independent of the want of consideration secured to the plaintiff under it. I must, therefore, consider it as abandoned by the parties and inoperative, and dismiss the cross bill with costs; and in the original and supplemental bills decree a redemption in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants, who submit to be charged as mortgagees in possession from the death of their mother, and to be charged with an occupation rent to be fixed by the Master, except so far as the rent was settled by the lease, reserving the consideration as to whether under the form of the pleadings any inquiry can be made as to the validity of the lease; plaintiff to be charged in the account with the amount paid by his father as interest on the mortgage, and interest thereon at 5 per cent. and to have no costs in the original suit. Costs in the supplemental bill as in a suit for redemption, and to be dealt with accordingly, with the usual directions for the delivering up of deeds and papers belonging to the estate on payment of mortgage debt and costs, with liberty to apply as in a suit to redeem.

BIGGS and OTHERS v. PENN.

Parties—Administration—32nd Order of 31st August.

The 32nd order of the 26th Aug. 1841, which enables a plaintiff who has a joint and several demand against several persons, either as principals or sureties, to proceed in equity against any one or more of such persons without joining the other parties to the suit, does not apply in suits for an account of an administration.

The defendant, Penn and Bromley, deceased, were executors and trustees, and acted together in the administration until Bromley died insolvent and intestate; the plaintiffs, the residuary legatees, finding the estate deficient, filed the bill against Penn alone, stating a breach of trust in the administration, and prayed a general account of the administration, and that Penn should be decreed to make good the loss sustained by the breach of trust. The defendant, by his answer, submitted generally whether all proper parties were before the Court, and claimed the same advantage of the objection as if he had demurred. The plaintiffs, under the 39th of the orders above mentioned, set down the cause to be argued on that objection only.

K. Parker and Stinton, for the plaintiff, submitted that the defendant should open, but Wray, for the defendant, contended that as the plaintiffs had come before the Court it was their duty to begin, and K. Parker was directed to open.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Where a general account is prayed of assets, and a charge of breach of trust in administration is made, the 32nd order of the 31st Aug. does not apply, that order only applies where a distinct claim is made against a defendant, and complete relief can be had against him; in such cases others equally liable may not be parties, but in administration suits the order does not apply.

Declare the objection for want of parties valid, and the plaintiffs to pay the costs of the hearing.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, May 1.

WALTER v. LESS.

If the judge refuses to certify that an action might have been tried before the sheriff, taxation must be on the higher scale, though the damages are not above 20l.

Covenant, for improper dismissal of a servant. The verdict was for the plaintiff, 20*l*. damages, but the Master taxed as above 20*l*. allowing the rate of fees &c. on the higher scale. Patteson, J. refused to make any order, and referred the matter to the Lord Chief Justice, who refused to certify that the cause might have been tried before the sheriff. Nevertheless the Master taxed on the higher scale.

Dasent shewed cause.—The rule of H. T. 4 Wm. 4, requires the taxation to proceed on the lower scale. (Wallen v. Smith, 3 M. & W. 138; so also according to 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42; Eliman v. Williams. 13 Law J. Q. B. 219.)

Bovill, contrà.—This rule must be made absolute. It is an action for unliquidated damages, and therefore does not fall within the Act. (Lismore v. Beadle, 1 Dowl. N. S. 566.) Equally so if the demand was limited to less than 20*l*. if it were an action not triable before the sheriff. (Jacquot v. Bouro, 5 M. & W. 165; Croft v. Miller, 3 B. N. C. 975; Roffey v. Shoobridge, 9 Dowl. 957.) Rule absolute.

REG. v. GEORGE HEWDALL.

Quo warranto.

The affidavits must set forth all the facts.

Counsel will not be permitted to interrupt each other in the statement of facts.

Quo warranto to try the right of George Hewdall to be a burgess of Ilchester; he became a capital burgess on the 3rd of October, 1812, and was elected bailiff in September 1843; he was not resident in the town. The charter did not state that a burgess must be an inhabitant. The affidavit in support of the writ averred that it did.

Watson, Q.C. (with whom was Fitzherbert) shewed cause.—Mr. Hewdall is a bailiff, to whom burgesses are assistant; therefore a bailiff cannot be a burgess of Ilchester, and the writ cannot go. (Rex v. Morris, 4 East, 17, per Lord Ellenborough; Rex v. Hughes, 5 B & Cr. 886.) [PATTESON, J.—Then he must be re-elected a burgess after he ceases to be bailiff, and does not remain a burgess as a mayor remains an alderman? Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We entertain no doubt whatever as to that; you are clearly wrong.] The application is too late under the terms of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, ss. 21, 23. [Lord DENMAN, C. J. severely reprimanded one counsel for interrupting another, "like attorneys at petty sessions."] There is collusion in this case. The charter is falsely misquoted in the affidavit; it is nowhere said that inhabitants can alone be burgesses. Inhabitant is a term of doubtful legal meaning (Rex v. Mosshiter, 6 Ad. & El. 153), and may mean having land in a place, and need not mean residence: neither does the word "burgess" incorporate that of "inhabitant." (Rex v. Salway, 9 B. & Cr. 424; R. v. Greet, 8 B. & Cr. 363.)

Crowder, Q. C. (with whom was Moody).—The words of the charter clearly mean burgesses inhabiting. (Rex v. Salway, suprà, Rex v. Auden, 4 B. & Cr. 772.) The burgess has a local function, and must reside. (Doune v. Mostyr, 8 B. & Cr. 62.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It may be that Mr. Hewdall was improperly elected; but the Court has a right to expect and will insist on facts essential to its decision being correctly and distinctly stated on the affidavits. This will obviate that most objectionable system we have experienced to-day, of interruptions of counsel by each other in their statement of facts, a practice which perhaps I somewhat too severely rebuked in this instance, but which we much wish discontinued, as being most disagreeable and improper. I find no such words in the charter as those cited. I do not say that collusion has been practised, but gross negligence has been committed, and there has also been great loss of time in coming to the court, of which we must make an example. The rule therefore is discharged without costs.

PATTESON, WILLIAMS, and WIGHTMAN, JJ. concurred.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF SOUTH FERRIBY.

Costs of bringing up a case from the sessions, which is not heard in consequence of technical objec[tion].

This was a rule obtained by Archbold (suprà, 3, 390), calling upon the inhabitants of South Ferriby to shew cause why they should not pay the costs of a special case which had been sent up from the sessions, but not heard, because there was nothing for the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Bain now shewed cause. This was a special case granted by the Court of Quarter Sessions, but not argued here from a preliminary objection taken to the form. The statute 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 30, does not therefore apply. The word "such," in the second section, refers not to orders confirmed. "Such" limits preceding general words. (Plowd. 201.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There can be no general rule as to the construction of the word "such;" it depends upon the subject matter. PATTESON, C. J.—According to your argument the recital of the 3rd section would be untrue; for it would refer only to delays after amendments made, and there was no power to make amendment until this statute.] Then it is an application to the discretion of the Court whether costs ought to be granted. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The practice seems to be when the case is heard upon the merits and the order confirmed, it is so entered; but where it is decided only upon a technical point it is not so entered, although the effect is that the order is confirmed, and therefore the recognizance will not apply here.] Costs ought not to be inflicted upon the appellants here. They acted in good faith, and the case was drawn in accordance with Reg. v. Carnarvon (2 Q. B. 325), and Reg. v. West Riding (2 Q. B. 331); but before it was heard, Reg. v. Kesteven (3 Q. B. 810) was decided, and the objection being taken, the case was not heard.

Archbold, contrà.—There were several cases decided before Reg. v. Kesteven, which ought to have pre[vented] this case being drawn in this way.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We think it is not a case where costs should be granted. Rule discharged.

Mandamus—Notice of appeal against rates in the parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch.

Pashley, moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices of Middlesex to hear an appeal against a poor-rate. The appeal was to be made to the January Sessions. These commenced January 7, at ten o'clock, but according to a printed list issued in October, appeals were fixed to be heard on January 31. The local Act, 53 Geo. 3, c. 1112, s. 121, required seven days notice at least. Notice was duly served upon all but one party on December 30, and after an unsuccessful attempt to serve him on the evening of December 30, he was served at half-past nine on December 31. At the sessions the Court refused to hear the appeal on the ground that the notice was too late.

Pashley now moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus. 1. The notice was in time according to rule of calculation, one day being inclusive and one exclusive or by looking to the fraction of a day. 2. The time for trial of appeals having been fixed for January 31, the notice was in ample time. The following cases were referred to: Clayton's case (5 Rep. 1); Lester v Garland 15 Ves. 248); Webb v. Fairmaner (3 M. & W. 473); Ex parte Farquhar (1 Mont. & Mac 7) Godson v. Sanctuary (4 B. & Ad. 255); Hardy v Ryle (9 B. & C. 603; 4 M. & Ry. 295); Gould v White (ibid, n.); Rex. v. Goodenough (2 A. & E 463); Reg v. Justices of Shropshire (8 A. & E. 173.) Rule nisi.

SMYTHE v. BINSTEAD.

Duncan moved for a rule nisi to amend a judge' order for judgment which had been drawn up con trary to the agreement between the parties for 20*l.* 5s instead of for 20*l.* and interest. The defendant had been taken under a ca. sa. Rule nisi.

GREGORY v. EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

No action will lie against a company for refusing to transfer shares or stock in their books, unless the name of the transferee is given to them; and an absolute refusal in general terms will not dispense with the nomination of the transferee, although that refusal be given to the transferor after his having informed the company that he has a person ready to accept the shares.

This was an action against the East-India Company for an alleged breach of duty, in refusing to transfer stock. The declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of the stock, and the duty of East-India Company to make transfers; and alleged that the plaintiff was desirous of transferring the stock to a person then ready to receive it, and being a proper person to receive it, and about to be named by him, the plaintiff, of all which the defendants had notice; whereupon they refused to make any transfer or transfers whatsoever.

Plea—That the plaintiff did not name the party to whom the stock was to be transferred.

Demurrer thereto; and the objection being taken to the declaration, that no name was given to the Company.

Bovill argued in support of the declaration. The breach of duty is the refusal. [PATTESON, J.—How could there be a transfer to an unknown person?] There could not, but the breach is not that they did not transfer, but that they refused to transfer. An absolute refusal dispenses with what would otherwise have been necessary. Thus an absolute refusal to pay notes dispenses with any presentation for payment of a note payable at a particular place. (Howe v. Bowes, 16 East, 112.) Other similar cases are Jones v. Barclay (2 Dougl. 684); Laird v. Pim (7 M. & W. 474). [WIGHTMAN, J.—If you had him ready to name, why did name him? PATTESON, J.—That which [esse]ntial part of the act to be done cannot be dispensed with. There can be no transfer without the name of the transferee.] The refusal gives the right of action. It cannot be requisite for the plaintiff to perform a nugatory act. (Waterhouse v. Skinner, 2 B. & P. 447; Reay v. White, 1 C. & M. 748; Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 203.)

Peacock, for the defendant, was not called upon.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I have no doubt this declaration is bad upon general demurrer. The averment of refusal to make the transfer must be taken with reference to the subject-matter, and there can be no transfer without the person to whom it is to be made is named. The defendants are bound to transfer by the statute, but only bound when required to transfer, and they are not required if there is no transferee named.

PATTESON, J.—No fresh duty arose from the defendants' having notice, as stated in the declaration, but only the duty under the statute, and that is to transfer upon proper materials being placed before them, and that is the name of the transferee.

WILLIAMS and WIGHTMAN, JJ. concurred.

Judgment for defendant.

Saturday, May 3.

WILLIAMS v. THE QUEEN.

(In error.)

Upon an indictment for horse-stealing, not concluding contra formam statuti, the statutory sentence of transportation may be passed.

The prisoner was convicted upon an indictment for stealing a horse, a saddle, and a bridle; which concluded contra pacem, but not contra formam statuti, and was sentenced to fifteen years' transportation under the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 1. Upon this record the prisoner brought error, assigning for cause that the sentence was not warranted by law.

F. Edwards, for the prisoner.—Horse-stealing is at common law precisely the same offence as the stealing of any other article; but by stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 25, a particular character was given to it, and it was made a capital felony. By subsequent statutes that maximum of punishment has been reduced to transportation for fifteen years. The common law offence, however, still remains, and is quite distinct from the statutory offence. This indictment charges the common law offence only, and the statutory punishment cannot be inflicted. It would be quite enough to sustain this indictment if it were proved that the saddle or bridle alone had been stolen; and yet if this sentence be right, a prisoner might at one time have been condemned to death upon a similar indictment. It is quite true that when a statute only regulates the punishment to be inflicted upon a well-known and well-defined offence, it is unnecessary that the indictment should conclude contra formam statuti; but that is not so where the statute defines the offence. It cannot be said that it makes no difference to the prisoner whether he is tried for the common law or statutory offence; for in the latter case a misdescription of the animal stolen is fatal; but in the former wholly immaterial. In 2 Hale's P. C. 191, it is said, "If an offence be at common law, and also prohibited by statute, with a corporal or other penalty, yet it seems the party may be indicted at common law; and then, though it conclude not contra formam statuti, it stands as an indictment at common law, and can receive only the penalty that the common law inflicts in that case." The rule, that where the statute defines or creates the offence, the conclusion contra formam is necessary, is expressly recognized by Erskine, J. in R. v. Polly (1 Car. & K. 77), and Parke, B. in R. v. Berry (1 Mood. & Rob. 463), referring to R. v. Chalburn (1 Mood. C. C. 403); and the precedents in Archbold on this statute conclude contra formam.

M. D. Hill, Q. C. contrà, was not called upon.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The question is, whether an indictment for a common law offence, which is so prohibited by statute, is good, though it does not conclude contra formam statuti; and I am astonished [t]o hear the objection, because I have always under[s]tood that a common law offence was properly de[s]cribed as such in an indictment, though a particular [p]unishment might have been imposed by statute. The doctrine laid down by Lord Hale in the passage [c]ited can hardly be supported after R. v. Matthews (5 T. R. 162), where it was held that the words [c]ontra formam statuti might be rejected as surplusage.

PATTESON, J.—If I understand Mr. Edwards's [a]rgument, he contends, upon the particular words of [t]he stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 25, that there is a [c]reation of a new offence by that statute; and I ad[m]it that if that were so the statutory punishment [co]uld not be inflicted upon an indictment not con[c]luding contra formam statuti; but I do not agree [w]ith him that that statute creates a new offence of [h]orse-stealing; it first enumerates several offences, [w]hich are offences at common law—"if any person [s]hall steal any horse, mare," &c.—and then it proceeds to a class of offences that are not offences at [c]ommon law; as, "or shall wilfully kill any such [c]attle with intent to steal the carcase, &c. every such [o]ffender shall be guilty of felony," &c. Therefore if any person steals a horse, he is guilty of felony under that statute, though horse-stealing was also a felony at common law; but as to the offence of killing with intent to steal the carcase, I am not prepared to say that an indictment for that offence ought not to conclude contra formam statuti.

WILLIAMS and WIGHTMAN, J J. concurred.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF RIPON.

A ground of appeal, setting up a settlement by payment of rates under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 2, is bad if it omits to state that the tenement consisted of "a separate and distinct" dwelling-house or building.

Upon appeal against an order of removal from Leeds to Ripon, the Court of Quarter Sessions for the borough of Leeds confirmed the order subject to a case, from which it appeared that the respondents relied upon a settlement by apprenticeship in the appellant parish, and to establish that settlement produced an indenture of apprenticeship bearing a 15s. stamp; to the admissibility of which, it was objected that the stamp was too high by 5s., the date of the instrument being 30th June, 1803. On the other hand, it was contended that statutes 43 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 6, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 10, had a retrospective effect, and therefore cured that defect, and the Recorder overruled the objection. The respondents then proved their settlement subject to that objection, and the appellants proceeded with their case. They offered to give evidence of a subsequent settlement by payment of rates, under the sixth ground of appeal, which stated that W. R. rented "a tenement consisting of two dwelling-houses, at &c. for the term, &c. and during the whole of the said year, and for forty days after the payment of the said rates, resided in the said tenement." To this ground of appeal the respondents objected that it was insufficient on two grounds: 1st, that it omitted to state that the dwelling-houses of which the tenement consisted were separate and distinct; and, 2nd, that it did not shew a sufficient residence of forty days. The Court of Quarter Sessions overruled the first, and allowed the second objection, but granted a case for the opinion of this Court upon all the points.

Hall and Pashley, in support of the order of sessions.—First, the stamp was right. By 41 Geo. 3, c. 10, s. 1, an additional stamp-duty of 3s. was imposed; and by 41 Geo. 3, c. 86, s. 1, a further additional duty of 2s. was imposed; raising the amount to 15s. Secondly, the ground of appeal, setting up a settlement by payment of rates, is insufficient in omitting to allege that the tenement consisted of "a separate and distinct" dwelling-house. Those are the words in the enacting clause of 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, and ought to be followed in the ground of appeal. Nothing must be left to inference (R. v. Wymondham, 2 Q. B. 541; R. v. West Riding, 2 Q. B. 505); and the word "dwelling-house" does not necessarily mean a "separate and distinct" dwelling-house. A single room may be a dwelling-house or even a mansion-house. (3 Inst. 65; 1 Hawk. c. 38, ss. 11—16; R. v. St. George's, Hanover-square, Burr. S. C. 692; R. v. Whitechapel, 2 Bott. 100; R. v. The Mayor of Eye, 9 Ad. & E. 670; R. v. Great Wakering, 5 B. & Ad. 971; R. v. Henley, 6 Ad. & E. 294; R. v. Usworth, 5 Ad. & E. 261; Wallis v. Harrison, 5 M. & W. 142.) The last objection is, that it does not appear that the residence of forty days after the payment of the rates was a residence in any way connected with the tenancy. It is consistent with the statement in the ground of appeal that there may have been an interval of ten years between the residence and the tenancy; and if so, the residence would give no settlement. R. v. Kingstead (7 B. & C. 617) shews that the residence must be after payment of the rate; and since 6 Geo. 4, both the payment of rates and residence must be connected with the tenancy. The rule is, that if, consistently with the examination or grounds of appeal, there may be no settlement, they are insufficient (R. v. St. Margaret, Rochester, 2 Q. B. 533, and the recent case of R. v. St. Sepulchre, Norhampton, 1 Bit. & Sym. 140); and here it is quite consistent with the ground of appeal, either that the dwelling-houses were not separate and distinct, or that the residence of forty days was not connected with the tenancy.

Pickering, contrà.—The stamp is certainly right; but the objections to the grounds of appeal cannot prevail. The case cited on the other side as to renting a tenement for a year, occupation—or the averment of a party being single and unmarried had no bearing upon the present case; and so the case of R. v. Henley, and the other cases as to what constitutes a separate and distinct tenement, depended upon the facts appearing in each. The question here is whether when a party says he rented a house, he must be taken to mean that he rented part of a house only; and the Court will make no such intendment. (R. v. Pontefract, 2 Q. B. 548; R. v. Buckinghamshire Justices, 3 Q. B. 800.) Upon the third point, forty days' residence after the payment of the rate is shewn on the face of this ground of appeal. It is enough if the party has been assessed to and paid poor-rates for part of the year only (R. v. St. Mary Kalendar, 9 Ad. & E. 626); the days of residence need not be consecutive (R. v. Gainsborough, Burr. S. C. 586); nor is it clear that the residence need be after the payment of rates since the 6 Geo. 4, R. v. Kingstead having been decided previously to the passing of that Act. It is immaterial when the residence is, provided it be during the year of occupation. (R. v. Willoughby, 4 Ad. & E. 143.)

By the COURT.—The words of the statute, 6 Geo. 4, are, "unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both," &c. no settlement shall be gained; and those words, or equivalent words, ought to appear in the ground of appeal; but this ground of appeal does not state that the tenement consisted of a separate and distinct dwelling-house, and is therefore insufficient.

Rateability of Putney bridge—Shareholders are assessable, and a mandamus will go to compel the justices to issue a warrant of distress.

A rule nisi had been obtained to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, directing the justices of Surrey to issue their warrant to levy a distress on a Mr. Chacemore, for the payment of 46*l.* due from him as a shareholder of the Putney bridge, in respect thereof.

Montague Chambers (with whom was C. Clark) shewed cause. The parties assessed are shareholders, and not trustees; but all the property is conveyed to trustees, the shareholders having merely the receipt of the tolls. The whole of the bridge was conveyed to Sir —— Onslow and other trustees, to have occupation and receive the money. The trustees gave the property into the hands of the shareholders, who were to receive the tolls, and to pay for the repairs; therefore they were the occupiers, and the occupiers must be rated. No further occupation can be wanted than possession and receipt of tolls, and liability to repair. If there were any objection to the mode of rating, it should have been taken at the Sessions. Neither can the whole rate be levied on one shareholder. (Hurrell v. Wink, 8 Taunt. 369.) The magistrates here had no original jurisdiction, and no indemnity could save them from the consequence of their acts. (2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 314; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, s. 6; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 57.) No exact sum could be demanded as due, and therefore the warrant could not be issued, for they may not levy an average computation on the several shareholders. (Rex v. Houldgrave, 1 B. & Ald. 312.) The Court will not interfere with the discretion of the magistrates. (Ex parte Ackworth, 3 Q. B. 397, a) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—If we clearly see that the magistrate has acted wrongly and mistaken his jurisdiction, we shall certainly interfere.] The granting of the warrant is a judicial not a ministerial act. (Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 27, per Lord Kenyon.) It is not stated that the magistrate was a magistrate acting for the metropolitan division.

Crompton (with whom was Moody).—The jurisdiction of the justice need not appear at all. (Bennett v. Edwards, 7 B. & Cres. 586.) We need not go into the question of title. If the shareholders had any interest at all they were rateable, and the magistrate had jurisdiction. They received the profits and repaired the bridge, and Mr. Chacemore was one of them. The warrant ought to follow the summons.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This rule must be made absolute. The trustees had the property vested in them, but only for the immediate benefit of the shareholders, who must be taken to be the real occupiers and the receivers of the profits; they therefore ought to be assessed. One of these must be rated, and he must get contributors from the others as best he can. If the magistrate fears responsibility, he has power to which he may have recourse to throw that responsibility on those who are the real parties at issue.

PATTESON, J.—By the Act it appears that the shareholders hold as tenants in common. The conveyance to the thirteen persons is merely to hold in trust for the shareholders, who are to be permitted to have the sole management and to receive tolls to repair the bridge. It is sworn that Mr. Chacemore is residing on one side, therefore it is an occupation. These subscribers are the persons who are privately occupying, and are very properly jointly assessed.

WILLIAMS, J.—The bridge is rateable property. The trustees are out of the case, for they are not occupiers. The only doubt is, whether Mr. Chacemore is the only person on whom the rate should be levied; on this point I do not speak with confidence; but the shareholders being occupiers, are the parties assessable, and that suffices for the present question.

REG. v. ST. PAUL'S, COVENT GARDEN.

Sufficiency of examination—"In or about" the year 1833 is an insufficient statement of the period of birth in the case of a bastard.

In this case the sessions had, on appeal, confirmed an order for the removal of a pauper, subject to the opinion of this Court on a case, which submitted for the opinion of this Court the question, along with others, whether, to found a birth-settlement for a pauper born out of wedlock, it is sufficient that the examination of his mother state that he "was born out of wedlock, in or about the year 1833, at or in," &c. (the appellant parish). The objection taken to the sufficiency of this statement was, that if the pauper was born after the 14th of August, 1834, he would, by the 71st sec. of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, follow the settlement of his mother.

Wortley, Q.C. and Bodkin, in support of the order of sessions.—(R. v. The Justices of Sussex, 10 A. & E. 682; R. v. The Justices of the West Riding, 2 Q.B. 505; R. v. The Justices of Derbyshire, 1 Wool. & Hodges, 323.)

Pashley, contrà.

By the COURT.—The fact that the pauper was born "about" a particular time, which the express language of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, makes so critical, imposed on the removing parish the duty of inquiring whether or not the pauper was born before the 14th of August, 1834, and, if he was born on or after that day, of inquiring into the mother's settlement. As then the actual date was material, we cannot hold that the words "in or about the year 1833" were sufficient to fix it.

REG. v. DOUGLAS.

Construction of 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 40.

The defendant in this case is a captain in the East-India Company's service, who for some time filled the office of Resident for the company at the court of the Rajah of Tanjore, where he was charged with having received several bribes from several persons, contrary to his duty and to the express provisions of the statutes relating to the subject. These charges were embodied into an information, containing about sixty counts, charging the receipt of so many separate bribes from the several individuals named therein. The evidence adduced at the trial consisted almost exclusively of answers given to written interrogatories which had been sent out under a mandamus to the Chief Justice and the other judges of the court at Madras, and which were exhibited in the Supreme Court of the Presidency to the witnesses, who all resided in that part of the world. The jury found the defendant guilty on fourteen counts.

The Solicitor-General (with whom were Pollock and Forsyth) moved for judgment, when Kelly, Q. C. (with whom was Peacock), now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to set aside the verdict and enter it for the defendant, on the ground that the above evidence was inadmissible: 1st. Because the Court of Queen's Bench had no power under the statute under which the mandamus had been issued (13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 40), to issue any mandamus to the present Supreme Court of Madras, commanding or authorizing that Court to proceed to the examination of witnesses upon written interrogatories, as the statute only authorized the issue of a writ to the Mayor's Court, which was the tribunal which existed at the time when the statute was passed, and not to the Supreme Court, which had been constituted since that time. 2nd. That the mandamus was directed to "the Chief Justice and the other judges" of the court at Madras, whereas the writ had been acted upon by "the Chief Justice and one of the other judges" only. 3rd. That the document which had been transmitted in supposed compliance with the exigency of the writ, was not the original examination, as required by the statute, but a copy of it; there being, moreover, no evidence to shew that the copy was a true one. He also moved for a new trial, because the charge against Captain Douglas was that of having received actual money in the form of rupees, and the evidence proved that all the gifts had been received in the form of bills of exchange drawn by one man upon another, and all payable at some interval after the date, and also, because the persons named as the parties giving the bribes were but agents or messengers.

Lease or agreement.

A letter to an agent, after alluding to the prior leases, stated that in the terms he was to be guided by the character and circumstances of the tenant, and was to act as he would do for himself. Held, sufficient authority to grant a lease under the Statute of Frauds.

This was an action of ejectment in which the lessor of the plaintiff had obtained a verdict, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court, whether the defendant was tenant under a lease or not. The points were,—1. Whether the person who had entered into the supposed lease had authority to do so. 2. If he had authority, whether the document was a lease or an agreement.

Gunning, for the defendant.—The person who entered into this agreement had no authority in writing, as required by the Statute of Frauds. The only material letter is that of August 6, 1834, in which the lessor of the plaintiff, after speaking of other matters, writes to Isaacson:—"As to a future lease, you must be guided as to the term by the tenant, and act as you would do for yourself." In pursuance of this supposed authority, this document was signed. There is no mention of the rent, or the period, or any of the precise terms of the lease. It was written in August 1834, and this document was not executed until June 1835. 2. It is no lease. It is headed "Proposals for letting." The quantity of the land and the rent are stated, and then it says, "To be leased for twelve years, determinable at eight years, provided notice given at the end of the fourth year; the cultivation to be according to the four-course system;" and it is then signed by the supposed tenant, June 8,—"Agreed to the above rent, provided the farm is put into tenantable repair, according to a plan to be settled within a month." Here are no words of present demise. The criterion is certainty of commencement, and here there is no commencement. It is agreed as to the rent only, not as to the other terms. The following cases were referred to: Clayton v. Burtenshaw (5 B. & C. 41); Chapman v. Turner (6 M. & W. 100); Gore v. Lloyd (12 M. & W. 463); Jones v. Reynolds (1 Q. B. 506); Johns v. Jenkins (1 Cr. & M. 227).

O'Malley, contrà, was directed by the Court to confine himself to the second point. The cases do not lay down any strict precedents, but each case must be judged of by itself, to discover the intention of the parties. This then was a lease. [WIGHTMAN, J.—When did the term begin?] When it was executed, that is June 3rd. There are cases which shew that there may be a lease without the commencement of the term being specified. (Staniforth v. Cox, 7 B. 590; Chapman v. Black, 4 B. N. C. 187).

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We are not fettered by previous cases in determining questions of this kind, for each must depend upon its own particular expressions, whether they amount to a present demise, not whether they constitute the relationship of landlord and tennant. Now here it is only proposal for a lease, and it is accepted provisionally, and therefore it is not a lease from June 3rd, the day upon which it was executed.

PATTESON, J.—I have always understood that the question is, whether, from the instrument itself, it can be collected when the lease is to commence. If it is impossible to do this, then it is no lease. In Staniforth v. Cox (7 B. 590), and Chapman v. Bluck (4 B. N. C. 187), the words were, "agree to let," and "agree to accept," and other words which, taken with the date of the instrument and there being nothing to shew that the party was not to enter, the Courts considered the documents to be leases. If, then, the date was there held to be the commencement of the term, and it is clearly not the intention of the parties here that the tenant should enter on that day, then there are no words of present demise, and this is no lease. But besides, it is only accepted provisionally. The words "agreed to the above rent" mean rent with the above accompaniments; that is, provided the repairs are done according to the plan to be decided upon. If there is no plan decided upon, there would be no repairs, and consequently no lease, and the term, therefore, cannot begin on June 3rd.

BURDER v. HODGSON.

Articles exhibited in the Ecclesiastical Court for deprivation of a clergyman, and stating the offence in the same form as in Reg. v. Rowed (3 Q. B. 180), do not shew an indictable offence:—Quære, can the Ecclesiastical Courts proceed pro deprivatione for an indictable offence before conviction?

Kelly, Q.C. (with whom were Dr. Phillimore, M. Smith, and Baddeley) shewed cause against a writ of prohibition in this case. The articles were expressly for deprivation only, and the causes of complaint were certain lewd, disgusting, sodomitical, and beastly practices, which were stated in general terms, like the indictment in Reg. v. Rowed (3 Q. B. 180). It was contended that in these articles no indictable offence was shewn, but only matters disgraceful and scandalous in the highest degree. It was further contended, that if some of the facts charged did amount to an indictable offence, and others did not, the Court would presume that the court below would act upon those which did not shew an indictable offence, and that the suit being for deprivation only, and not for punishment pro salute animæ, the Ecclesiastical Court had power, although the party had not been indicted and convicted. The judgment of the Court turned only upon the first point.

Watson, Q.C., Dr. Addams, and Peacock were heard in support of the rule.

The following were the principal authorities cited in the course of the very learned arguments as to the jurisdiction for deprivation: Free v. Bourgoyne (2 Add. 414, 5 B. & C. 400, 2 Bl. N. & S. 65); Slater v. Smalebrook (1 Lev. 138, 1 Sid. 217); Townsend v. Thorpe (2 Lord Raym. 1507); Serle's case (Hob. 12, 1 Cro. Jac. 130); Royal Court of Jersey case (3 Moo. P. C. 229); Burder v. Hodgson (3 Curt.); Lyndewood, Provinc. pp. 96, 260, 316, 268, 313; Bishop of St. David's case (1 Lord Raym. 420); Paulet v. Head (2 Lee Eccles Cases, App. 568, Fitzgib. 189); Bishop of Clogher's case (not reported); Jenk. 184; R. v. Richardson (1 Burr.); Jeremy Taylor's Treatise on Episcopacy; 1 Berard. Comment. 147; Boyle v. Boyle (Comberb.); Galizard v. Rigault (Salk. 552); Caudry's case (5 Rep. 1); Hart v. Marsh (5 A. & E. 591); Stephen v. Hall (1 D. N. S.); Ricketts v. Bodenham (4 A. & E. 433); 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86; Nash v. Nash (1 Hagg. BROWN v. STURT.

Validity of bye-laws of the corporation of London.

This is an action brought by the Chamberlain of London, in the Court of the Lord Mayor, to recover penalties from the defendant for having followed the occupation of a warehouseman in the city of London. A writ of habeas corpus cum causâ had been obtained, and subsequently a rule had been obtained, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why a procedendo should not be awarded.

Kelly, Q. C. (with whom were Butt, Q. C. and O'Thank) now shewed cause.—The return to the writ sets forth the custom of the city as to non-freemen being forbidden to trade, and the further custom giving the lord mayor and aldermen of the city with the consent of the commonalty, to amend defects in customs, similar to the return in Clarke v. Denton (1 B. & Ad. 92), and since that case the procedendo cannot be opposed upon the same grounds as then failed: but the objection now offered is, that the byelaw of Jas. 1 inflicts a pecuniary penalty, to be recovered by the Chamberlain in the Lord Mayor's Court, thereby, in fact, constituting the same parties at once plaintiffs and judges.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. (with whom were Gurney, Q. C., Ryland, and Laurie) here stated that this very objection had been taken by Holroyd, argued and overruled in an unreported case of Clarke v. Stevens, and that he was in possession of the shorthand writer's notes of the argument and the judgment.

Kelly, Q.C. expressed his extreme surprise, and stated that he had never before heard of the case, and craved time to consider what course to pursue.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I have no doubt, brother Wilde, your statement is correct; but were I counsel for the other side, I should think it my duty to ask for time to satisfy myself.

It was then arranged that the rule should be enlarged, and a copy of the case furnished to Kelly for the defendants.

Rule enlarged.

REG. v. THE CHANCELLOR, MASTERS, AND SCHOLARS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

Mandamus to restore a member of the University degraded by the Convocation for publication of a book alleged to be inconsistent with the Thirty-nine Articles.

Kelly, Q.C. (with whom was Baddeley) applied to the Court, upon the part of the Rev. William George Ward, for a rule calling upon the defendants to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to restore Mr. Ward to the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts, of both which degrees he had been deprived by two resolutions of the Convocation of the University, on the 13th of February in the present year. In 1830 Mr. Ward entered the University, took his degree of B. A. in 1834, and that of M. A. in 1837, and upon each of these occasions he signed, in the usual manner, the Thirty-nine Articles contained in the Book of Common Prayer, and also the three other articles included in the 36th canon. In the year 1844 he published a work, called The Ideal of a Christian Church, containing certain descriptions and statements respecting the character and doctrines of the Church of Rome, as well as respecting the English Reformation and the Church of England. He was, upon February 13, degraded by resolutions of the Convocation, on the ground that the said book was inconsistent with the meaning of the articles, and with the good faith of Mr. Ward. These resolutions were void. 1. Because the publication of the book in question was no offence at all against the laws of England, or against any of the particular statutes of the University of Oxford. 2. That supposing it to be an offence, the Convocation had no original jurisdiction to entertain any charge upon the subject. 3. That supposing the publication to be an offence, and the Convocation to have the power to try and to punish, they possessed no power to inflict the punishment of degradation. 4. Supposing the Convocation to possess the jurisdiction to try and to inflict that particular punishment, they had, in fact, proceeded in such a manner as to render their adjudication upon the subject altogether a nullity. He referred to and read several portions of the statutes, in which the present offence might be expected to be found, if such an offence were to be found in the statutes at all, and where no mention of it was made. At any rate, the punishment of degradation could not be inflicted in respect of it, as the statutes defined but four offences for which that punishment could be awarded. These offences were:—first, if, being appointed an examiner, he refuses to serve, or misconducts himself therein, and is contumacious in his offence; secondly, if, having taken the oath as an inceptor, he omits, without a dispensation, to perform the proper exercise within a year; thirdly, if he refuse to surrender to an officer producing the Vice-Chancellor's warrant for his arrest, or, being arrested, endeavours to escape; fourthly, if in any suit within the university, in which there is a right of appeal, he does not observe the order of appeal directed by the statutes. In the whole collection of the laws by which the university was governed there was no single statute which makes any graduate liable to degradation for any deviation in his private sentiments or public writings from the doctrines or formularies of the Church of England, or for any other theological cause; nor any which provides that the subscription to the articles is regarded or intended as a promise or prospective engagement on the part of the graduate to continue while he shall hold his degree in the belief or opinions which the university may understand or interpret to be signified by such subscription, or that such degree is conferred upon any such condition as that any subsequent departure from them shall be a forfeiture of the degree, but that, on the contrary, the statutes shew by necessary implication that such subscription is not so intended or regarded, inasmuch as power is given by the statutes to the Vice-Chancellor to banish beyond the precincts of the university all heretics, schismatics, and persons "who think otherwise than right" concerning the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England, and all persons in holy orders who shall refuse to sign the articles aforesaid; but do not provide that for any fault or omission in respect to either of these subjects any party shall be deprived of any degree. It was competent to the authorities to call upon Mr. Ward to subscribe the articles, and, upon his refusing three times, to punish him by exile beyond the bounds of the university. This course, however, had not been adopted. But if it was an offence, the House of Convocation was not the tribunal to try him; but the court called sometimes the Chancellor's Court, and sometimes the Court of the Vice-Chancellor, and which always had exclusive cognizance to hear and determine all causes within the university, both criminal and civil, except felony, mayhem, and cases involving the right to a freehold. Before that Court Mr. Ward ought to have been brought in the first instance, whence he could have appealed to the Court of Congregation, and from the latter body to the Convocation, and perhaps from the Convocation itself to the Queen in Council. At least the Convocation was only an appellate jurisdiction. They might make new laws or correct old ones, but not inflict degradation for no legal offence, and without trial. Then the refusal of Dr. Grant's amendment was improper and illegal. Mr. Ward had been degraded without having any opportunity of being heard in his own defence, a course of proceeding which, under any circumstances, must be void, as being at all times essentially contrary to the first principles of natural justice. If Mr. Ward had been regularly cited to the Chancellor's Court, articles would there have been exhibited against him; he could make a regular defence, and could have carried the case to the various courts of appeal. That the rights of which Mr. Ward had been deprived were such as to entitle him to the interference of the Court. (Dr. Bentley's case, 2 Lord Raym. 1334; and Frend's case, 6 T.R. 89.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Is there any thing said of a visitatorial power?] It is expressly denied in the affidavits.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

The coroner of Lancashire had, prior to 6 Vict. c. 12, power to take inquests within the borough of Manchester, when the death took place within the borough, but the cause of death arose without the borough, but in the county.

Watson, Q. C. (with whom was Whigham), shewed cause against a rule to quash an order of sessions, by which the county treasurer had been ordered to pay a sum of money to Mr. Rutter for inquests taken within the borough of Manchester and Bolton on persons who had died within the borough, but the cause of whose death had occurred without the borough, but within the county. If this order is not supported, it will be a decision that in such case no inquest could be held. Reg. v. Great Western Railway Company (3 Q. B. 333) shews that the borough coroner could not have taken an inquest there, and if the county coroner could not, no one could.

Starkie, contrà.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The coroner has here done the duty which he alone could do, and we therefore think him entitled to be paid for his services.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF BURNHAM.

An auditor who has continued to act without reappointment by the Poor Law Commissioners under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 37, is a district auditor within the meaning of the Act, and a certiorari will lie to remove the accounts.

Crowder, Q.C. (with whom was Archbold) shewed cause against a rule for a certiorari to remove certain parish accounts which had been audited by the auditor of Eton Union, who was himself the solicitor to whom a portion of the moneys was payable, and who had allowed them. Having only continued to act as auditor, and not having been appointed or confirmed by the commissioners under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, the certiorari will not lie, as sec. 35 does not apply. It is quite clear upon the affidavits that he has not been appointed or acted under the statute. The commissioners have done nothing.

M. Chambers (with him Wisser), for Mr. Charsley, the auditor. Mr. Charsley is personally most desirous that your lordships should see these accounts. He has been many years a solicitor, and acted for the parish of Burnham, and was subsequently appointed auditor for the Eton and Hareerston unions. He was necessarily concerned in the appeals to which these costs refer. They were not taxed by himself, but by the clerk of the peace, and then brought to him to audit. He wrote to the Poor Law Commissioners to know whether another person could not audit them. They answered he had no power to delegate his authority. He was then obliged to audit them, but he did it in the presence and with the assistance of another person.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We consider that, having continued since the Act to act as auditor for the two unions, he is a district auditor within the Act.

Certiorari granted.

REG. v. CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF BANGOR.

Who is the party compellable to pay the expense of a survey for the purposes of rating ordered by the Poor Law Commissioners?

Kelly, Q. C. (with him Archbold), shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus to the parish officers of Bangor to pay certain sums of money. The question is, whether the guardians of the union or the officers of the particular parish surveyed are to provide for the expense of a survey ordered by the Poor Law Commissioners.

Jervis, Q. C. contrà.—This never has been decided, and the Act of Parliament has not received a judicial interpretation. Mr. Phillips, the surveyor employed, suedthe guardians of the union, and has a cognovit under their hand and seal; and if this rule is not made absolute, will issue execution upon the property of the parish.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There ought to be a return to this mandamus, as there seem to be some nice questions upon the Act. Rule absolute.

ORGAR v. HORNE.

The adjudication of a complaint against the driver of a Metropolitan stage carriage under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, for damage done to the carriage of the complainant, is no answer to an action against the owner of the carriage for the negligence of his servant, and the damage done to the carriage and to the plaintiff who was injured by the concussion.

Demurrer to plea.

This was an action for negligent driving of the omnibus of the defendant by his servant, whereby the plaintiff's carriage was damaged, and he himself thrown out and injured.

Damages, verdict 50*l*.

Plea. That the defendant's omnibus was a metropolitan stage carriage within the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, that the plaintiff complained under that Act to a magistrate, who in pursuance of the statute heard and dismissed the case; and that the grievance complained of were the same as those adjudicated then upon.

Bovill in support of the demurrer. The declaration contains allegations of damage to the person. The plea merely amounts to an allegation that the defendant's servant was not liable criminally. That can be no answer to the declaration. The magistrates can only award compensation to 10*l*.

The COURT then called on

Peacock to support the plea. It depends upon the construction of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86. If the plaintiff is barred of his action for damage to the carriage, he is barred from any action for consequential damages, which the damages to the person here were. Sec. 33 gives the penalty, and the order of the magistrate is conclusive. It is like the case of an assault which the magistrate has summarily decided. Then he is barred as to the damages to the person.

By the COURT.—We do not see the consequence.

Debt on bond conditioned to pay a sum of money on a day certain, and to perform the covenants comprised in an indenture there referred to.

Plea of general performance of all things mentioned in the condition to the bond.

Held, that a replication thereto traversing the payment of the money according to the condition, properly concluded to the country, as the plea must be taken to contain an allegation of such payment.

Semble, that the plea was bad as a plea of performance, for want of a distinct allegation of such payment.

Debt on bond for 2,000*l*. by the testator, William Manser, deceased.

The defendants set out on oyer the bond and condition. The condition was as follows:—"The condition of this obligation is such, that if the above bounden Frederick Barry, James Barry, and William Manser, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the above-named Edward Roakes, his executors, administrators, or assigns, the sum of 1,000*l*. of lawful money of Great Britain, on or upon the 30th day of September now next ensuing, together with interest for the same, after the rate of 4*l*. 10*s*. per cent. per annum, without any deduction, defalcation, or abatement whatsoever, according to and in full performance and discharge of the proviso or condition mentioned in a certain indenture of assignment, bearing even date with these presents made or mentioned to be made between the above bounden Frederick Barry of the one part, and the said Edward Roakes of the other part, and do also well and truly observe, perform, fulfil, and keep all and singular the covenants, grants, articles, conditions, and agreements whatsoever which on his and their parts and behalf are or ought to be observed, performed, fulfilled, and kept, comprised and mentioned in the said recited indenture, and that in all things according to the true intent and meaning thereof, and of the parties to the same,—then the obligation to be void or else to remain in full force."

The defendants then pleaded—1st, Non est factum: 2nd, that the said Frederick Barry and James Barry, and the said William Manser in his lifetime, and the defendants as executors aforesaid, after the death of the said William Manser, did, from time to time and at all times after the making of the said writing obligatory, and the said condition thereof, well and truly observe, perform, fulfil, and keep all and singular the articles, clauses, conditions, agreements, matters, and things in the said condition of the said writing obligatory comprised and mentioned in all things therein contained on their parts and behalf, and on the part and behalf of each and every of them to be observed, performed, fulfilled, and kept, according to the tenor and effect, true intent and meaning, of the said condition of the said writing obligatory.—Verification. Lastly, Plene administravit.

Replication to the second plea, that the said Frederick Barry, James Barry, and William Manser in his lifetime, and the said Frederick Barry, James Barry, and the defendants since the death of the said William Manser, did not pay the said sum of 1,000*l*. in the said condition mentioned, in manner and form as in the said second plea mentioned; and this the plaintiff prays may be inquired of by the country, &c.

Demurrer to such replication, alleging, amongst other causes, that the replication concludes to the country, and not, as it ought to have done, with a verification, inasmuch as the replication is not a mere traverse or denial of any fact or matter alleged or contained in the last-mentioned plea, but contains and alleges new and fresh matter, and therefore ought to have concluded with a verification, and not to the country; and also, that, although the replication concludes to the country, yet the plaintiff, in or by that replication, hath not traversed, or denied, or taken, or tendered any fit or proper issue upon any fact, matter, or allegation alleged or contained in the plea, but hath improperly and informally taken and tendered an issue upon a matter not alleged or contained in the plea.

Byles Serjt. for the defendants, in support of the demurrer.—It is submitted that the plea is a plea of general performance of the condition of the bond, and therefore that the plaintiff should not have tendered an issue thereon, but should have assigned breaches of the condition under the statute 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11. (Sayre v. Minns, Cowp. 575.) [CRESSWELL, J.—Is there any form of a plea of general performance where there is a sum of money to be paid on a day certain?] Perhaps not. Com. Dig. Pleader, 2, V. 13, shews that the defendant may plead performance generally, unless some of the covenants are negative or disjunctive. Hayman v. Gerrard (1 Saund. 101) shews that the replication is bad for not assigning a breach. There it is said also, that "Twysden cited a case where a man was bound to pay to the obligee 10*l*. upon the day of his marriage, and in an action upon the bond, the defendant pleaded that the obligee was not married, and the plaintiff replied that he was married on such a day; and upon issue joined and verdict given thereon, it was adjudged to be aided after verdict, but if the defendant had demurred as here, it had been bad, as he said the opinion of the Court then was." And Holt, C.J. in Meredith v. Alleyn (1 Salk. 138) says, "If the defendant pleads a performance of the condition, though it be not well pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication must shew a breach, for then he has not a cause of action unless he shews one." It is submitted, therefore, that at common law, and independently of the statute, the replication is bad for not assigning a breach. (Plomer v. Ross, 5 Taunt. 387.)

The following authorities were also cited: Bush v. Leake (3 Dougl. 255); and Darbishire v. Butler (5 Moore, 198).

Channell, Serjt. for the plaintiff, contrà.—The plea is bad, or else the replication is good. The plea is bad unless it directly or impliedly alleges a payment by the testator or the two other obligors of the sum of money according to the condition. It is a general rule that the plaintiff has a right to traverse any material matter alleged in the plea or therein necessarily implied. The payment here traversed is necessarily implied; how then does the statute 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, affect this? The plaintiff does not tender an issue on a general performance, but an issue taken upon a particular breach, namely, the non-payment of a particular sum of money, and this, it is submitted, properly concludes to the country. The case of Darbishire v. Butler (5 Moore, 198) is in point, and in favour of the plaintiff, and so also is Smith v. Bond (3 M. & Scott, 528, and 10 Bing. 125).

Byles, Serjt. in reply.—If the indenture referred to in the condition contained covenants negative or disjunctive by which a plea of general performance would be bad, the plaintiff should have shewn this by setting out the indenture in his replication, and then may have demurred. (Plomer v. Raine, MS. note of Buller, J. cited in 4 East, 344, note f.)

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that this replication is well enough. The action is on a bond, the condition to which, when set out on oyer, appears to be to perform several matters: one is, that the testator, William Manser, and the two other obligors shall pay to the plaintiff the sum of 1,000*l*. on or upon the 30th day of September then next, with interest according to the proviso in a certain indenture there referred to. That is one act which the defendant's testator is bound to perform. There is also another; that is, that he shall perform, fulfil, and keep all the covenants and agreements to be by him performed in the said indenture. That is the second act to be performed, and it is entirely separate and distinct from the other. The ordinary and proper way for the defendants to have pleaded the performance would have been to have taken up the words in the condition to the bond, and to have stated that the testator did pay unto the plaintiffs the sum of 1,000*l*. according to the proviso in the indenture, and then to have alleged that the testator did perform, fulfil, and keep all and singular the covenants, grants, articles, conditions, and agreements whatsoever in the said indenture on his part to be performed, according to the true intent and meaning thereof. Instead of doing so, however, the defendants have pleaded a plea which, in strictness, they should not have been allowed to have pleaded. It is said in Comyn's Digest, when speaking of pleas of conditions performed, "If the condition of the bond be to do several things, the defendant cannot plead performance generally, though all are in the affirmative, but shall answer specially to every particular," and for this is cited 1 Lev. 303, and Kel. 95 (b). It therefore follows, that if this had been a proper plea of performance of the conditions to the bond, it would have had a distinct allegation of payment of the money to the plaintiff on the day required by the condition. I allow that it is too late now to take advantage of this objection to the plea; but the defendants ought not to be in a better situation than they would have been if the plea had been properly pleaded. The defendants are to be taken in their plea to have alleged that the testator did pay the money on the day on which it was conditioned to be paid, which brings it, therefore, within the cases of Bush v. Leake, Darbishire v. Butler, and Smith v. Bond. In the case of a mere money bond, no breach need be assigned under the statute, and if here the plaintiff is content to rest on the issue of the money not being paid according to the condition, there is no necessity for him, under the statute, to assign breaches. I do not see how this present case is different from those already referred to. There is an affirmation by one party, and a distinct denial of the same by the other party, and it is impossible for any traverse in the end to be taken except on that same single point. The plea is therefore insufficient, and the judgment must be for the plaintiff.

COLTMAN, CRESSWELL, and ERLE, JJ. concurred. Judgment for the plaintiff.

GOULD v. COOMBS.

Plaintiff declared against the defendant as maker of a promissory note and on an account stated. At the trial the note, when produced, bore on it the name of another maker, which, with the consent of all parties, had been added subsequently. Upon the plaintiff delivering up the note in order to have such additional name placed on the note, he received an I O U signed by the defendant for the amount of the note.

Quære, if the note was void for want of a fresh stamp, and might be objected to under a plea non acceptavit. Held, that if the note was void, yet it was admissible in evidence to shew in respect of what the I O U was given.

Declaration by the payee against the maker of a promissory note for 200*l.* with a count on an account stated.

Pleas.—Traverse of the making the note, and non assumpsit to the last count.

At the trial before Coltman, J. at the Middlesex sittings, it appeared from the evidence that the promissory note was originally given in the following form :—

"200*l.*—We jointly and severally promise to pay Mr. John Gould or order, 200*l.* with lawful interest, for value received.

"JAMES WHITE.
"JAMES COOMBS.
"JOSEPH WHITE.
"ROBERT WHITE."

When, however, the note was produced at the trial there was on it the additional name of Mary White. As to this, the evidence was that Robert White had died after the note had been given, and the plaintiffs had thereupon desired that there should be another name added to the note; and for this purpose the note was given up to James White, he giving to the plaintiff at the time an I O U in the following form :

"I owe Mr. John Gould the sum of 200*l.* for value received. "JAMES WHITE.
"JAMES COOMBS."

This I O U was to be returned by the plaintiff upon his receiving the note with the additional name. The name of Mary White was procured to the promissory note, with the assent of the other parties, and the note, with her name added thereto, was delivered back to the plaintiff, but the I O U was retained. At the trial it was objected on behalf of the defendant, that there had been a material alteration of the note, and that the same therefore was not admissible without a fresh stamp; and it was also objected that the defendant was not liable under the I O U upon the account stated, as the original debt was that of James White, and not of the defendant; that it was only given as a guarantee, and was void for want of any consideration appearing on it. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, with 209*l.* damages, Byles, Serjt. obtained last Term a rule to shew cause why there should not be a nonsuit entered or a verdict for the defendant, pursuant to leave reserved at the trial.

Kinglake, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The alteration in the note, by the adding of the name of Mary White, was an immaterial one; no action could have been brought thereon against her, it had, therefore, no operation or effect. As to this, Catton v. Simpson (8 A. & E. 136) is an express decision in point. If it was a material alteration, it should have then been pleaded, because it would have operated as a new agreement come to between the parties in substitution of the other, and therefore within the new rules requiring it to be pleaded specially. Here the note as set out in the declaration would correspond with that originally drawn, so that the objection could not be raised under a traverse of the making. The effect of the alteration would be, if any, to make a new agreement, but not to destroy the original note; it would therefore be requisite for the party setting up such new agreement to plead it. [ERLE, J. referred to Calvert v. Baker (4 M. & W. 417).] In Mason v. Bradley (11 M. & W. 594), Parke, B. says: "As to the case of Calvert v. Baker, the Court do not appear to have adverted to the circumstance that the alteration in the bill sued on was not such as to require a new stamp, and I am under an impression that this Court pointed out that distinction a few terms ago, and expressed a doubt as to the authority of that case to that extent. I do not think that case can be supported where the alteration is not such as to cause a variance between the statement in the declaration and the instrument when produced, or to raise an objection to the stamp on the document; it is only applicable where the alteration is such as to put an end to existing liabilities. This is a defence of a different nature, which, since the new rules, ought to be specially pleaded."

Hemming v. Trenery (9 A. & E. 926); Davidson v. Cooper (11 M. & W. 778); and Sweeting v. Halse (9 B. & C. 365) were also cited.

As to the admissibility of the I O U as evidence under the account stated, Teale v. Auty (2 B. & B. 99) was referred to.

Byles, Serjt. (Prideaux with him) in support of the rule.—It is submitted that the addition made to this note was a material alteration thereto, which, if it had been done without the consent of the other parties, would have avoided the note at common law, and which, even with such consent, makes it invalid by reason of the Stamp Acts. The effect of it was to change the meaning of the word "we" in the commencement of the note. That word originally meant James White, James Coombs, Joseph White, and Robert White; now it means the above persons and Mary White. It is therefore an alteration in the body of the note, and a material alteration which prejudices the other parties, as in the case of the Statute of Limitations having run out, and a payment afterwards made by Mary White. Less alterations have been held sufficient to invalidate the note. (Calvert v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 417; Clerk v. Blackstock, Holt's N. P. C. 474.) As to the defendant being required to specially plead this, how could he do so? The objection to the note is that there is no stamp to it, not that there is a new agreement. The effect of it is not, it is submitted, the destruction of the original note, but only to prevent its being proved in evidence. Hemming v. Trenery does not apply, because there no stamp was necessary, so that no such question could arise there. Calvert v. Baker is an authority that it need not be pleaded. As to the I O U, it is submitted that this was substantially a promissory note, and should have been stamped as such, on account of the words "value received," which might import a consideration. [CRESSWELL, J.—That might equally be said of every other I O U.] Then as to its not being any evidence of an account stated. This was not given for the debt of the defendant; the evidence was, that the money was originally advanced to James White, and that he alone had any portion of it, and the Court cannot now look at the promissory note, on account of its defective stamp, to see who were the parties thereto, and that the I O U was given in respect of a debt for which the defendant was liable. It stands, therefore, as a guarantee given for the debt of another, and requires a stamp as such.

TINDAL, C. J. was absent.

COLTMAN, J.—Assuming the promissory note to be void, yet it may be necessary to refer to the time when it was valid, and in estimating whether there is any debt due on the account stated, I think it may be used to see the state of things when the memorandum was signed. At that time the promissory note was valid and free from the objection which has been made to it (but which we do not now determine); and although it has been contended that it would not support the first count, yet this would not prevent the party from giving it in evidence under the second count, to shew the state of things at the time the account was stated. As to the first count, if the plaintiff is willing to relieve the Court from giving their judgments respecting the evidence thereunder, and consent to a verdict being thereon for the defendant, the plaintiff may retain the verdict on the second count. I do not wish to express any opinion on the question as to the first count. Considering as I do the decision in the Court of Queen's Bench to be in favour of the defendant, I should wish to take time before I decided against that decision.

CRESSWELL, J.—It is unnecessary to give any opinion as to the question on the first count, as we have been relieved from this. Then as to the second count, it is requisite to see for what the memorandum was given. The plaintiff declares on a promissory note, and on an account stated, and at the trial produces a promissory note, which, primâ facie, supports his case. My brother Byles then meets this by shewing the note produced is not in its original state. Now taking the note to be in such a state as my brother Byles would have it appear, still it was in such a form as to shew that the defendant was debtor to the plaintiff, and it is clear that the I O U was given for that debt. This, therefore, sustains the count on the account stated.

ERLE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I am inclined to believe, with my brother Byles, that the memorandum was given as a guarantee; but the plaintiff has a right to say that it was not given as a collateral security, but in respect of the promissory note on which the defendant was liable; and although the note is not available to sue on, yet it may be given in evidence for this purpose. I am, however, of opinion that there was sufficient evidence, independent of the note, of the defendant's liability of a debt in respect of the note. Then the evidence stands thus: there is proof of an account stated, and an imperfect proof of debt, and that is sufficient to support the count on the account stated. Indeed the account stated is only ever resorted to when direct proof has failed in respect of the original cause of action. The verdict, therefore, must stand on the account stated, and we give no opinion as to the first count.

Verdict for the defendant on the first count, and for the plaintiff on the second count, with damages reduced by consent to 100l.

VALPY and OTHERS, Assignees, &c. v. MANLEY, Esq.

Where money is paid in order to redeem goods from a party who has them in his possession, and the party paying has reason to suppose that if he does not make the payment the goods will be sold, this is not a voluntary payment which will prevent the party paying from bringing his action to recover it back. Therefore, where a sheriff entered, under a writ of execution, before, but did not seize the goods of the debtor under the writ until after, a fiat in bankruptcy had issued against him, and the assignees paid, under protest, the amount of the execution debt and expenses, in order to prevent a sale of the goods which was threatened: Held, that they were entitled to recover the same back in an action for money had and received.

Assumpsit, for money had and received by the defendant, to the use of the plaintiffs, as assignees of Thomas Bate, William Smith Bate, and James Hellings, bankrupts. At the trial, before Erle, J. at the London sittings after Michaelmas Term last, the following facts appeared in evidence:

On the 11th of July, 1843, an officer of the defendant, who was sheriff for the county of Stafford, entered on the premises of the bankrupts, for the purpose of levying, under a writ of fieri facias, the amount of an execution debt due on a judgment obtained against the bankrupts. The officer found there a man in possession of the property, and who had been placed there under a deed of assignment executed for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupts, and dated the same 11th of July, 1843. The officer upon being informed of this said, "I shall consider myself in possession, and shall come from day to day, until I know whether the sheriff will interplead;" he made then, however, no inventory of the property, and it was admitted by both parties that there had been no valid seizure under the execution before the issuing of the fiat against the bankrupts. The fiat in bankruptcy was dated 14th of July, 1843, and on the 29th of that month the messenger thereunder arrived to take possession. The man in possession under the assignment for the benefit of creditors continued on the premises until the arrival of the messenger under the fiat, on the 29th of July. The messenger remained in possession until the 29th of October following. On the 15th of August, the sheriff's officer made a forcible entry on the premises by breaking open the doors, which he found locked against him, and claimed the goods as having been seized by him for the execution debt under the prior entry. He then, for the first time, made an inventory, and on being questioned as to whether he meant to sell, replied he did. Accordingly, and in order to prevent such sale, the assignees, under protest, paid the sheriff on the 2nd of September, the sum of 373*l.* 6s. 9d. being the amount of the execution debt and expenses. The present action was brought to recover back this money, as paid under compulsion, and without consideration. The learned judge entertained an opinion that the action would not lie, but reserved the question for the opinion of the Court, and directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiffs for the sum of 373*l.* 6s. 9d. which they accordingly did. A rule nisi having, pursuant to leave reserved, been obtained for entering a nonsuit—

Sir T. Wilde now shewed cause.—The question is, whether this payment was voluntary or not, and in order to ascertain that, it is requisite to see the conduct of the sheriff's officer upon the occasion; and it is submitted that this was such as to induce the assignees to suppose that he might have a right to sell the goods, and that, if the money was not paid, they might lose the same. The case of Lindon v. Hooper (Cowp. 414), so often cited on these matters, has nothing to do with the present case. There it was decided that the action would not lie to recover back the money paid for the release of cattle, on the ground that it was an attempt to try a right of distress under an improper form of action. One class of cases in which this action has been held to lie is when a party refuses to perform a duty which the public has a right to require him to perform, and a sum of money is in consequence paid under protest; of this class Parker v. Great Western Railway Company (13 Law J., N.S., C. P. 105) and Ashmole v. Wainwright (2 Q.B. 837) are examples. Another class, and to which the present case more properly belongs, is where the party making the demand has got possession of, or in some way connected in interest with, goods which, if not redeemed, the other party has good ground to believe he will be put to inconvenience. As to this Hills v. Street (5 Bing. 37) is an authority. If one person exacts of another a sum of money under a threat, and the other pays in consequence of such threat, that cannot be a voluntary payment. It is immaterial whether there was or not a good and valid seizure before the fiat, if, as it appears from the evidence, the sheriff acted afterwards in a manner which shewed he was relying on a prior good seizure; and however a person who, knowing all the circumstances at the time, makes a payment, intending to submit, may not be able to recover it back, it is very different when the person making the payment disputes at the time the right of the other to receive it, and believes that the person insisting on the payment has a right to do so.

The following authorities were also cited: Close v. Phipps (8 Scott, N. S. 381); M'Combie v. Davies (7 East, 5); Snowden v. Davis (1 Taunt. 359); Knibbs v. Hall (1 Esp. 84); Brown v. M'Kinally (1 Esp. 279); Shaw v. Woodcock (7 B. & C. 73); and Dew v. Parsons (2 B. & A. 562).

Talfourd, Serjt. (V. Lee with him), in support of the rule.—It would be carrying the case beyond all prior authorities if this action should be held to be maintainable. It was maintained at the time of the payment that there was no valid seizure; the money was paid under protest, and it cannot therefore be disputed but that the same was paid with a full knowledge of all the facts. In all the cases which have been cited in which this kind of action has been allowed, there was some power to enforce the payment, or something more existing than here. In Hill v. Street there was an actual duress of the goods, and the party was obliged to pay an exorbitant sum in order to recover them; so, too, in Close v. Phipps. Here there has been no dealing with the goods by the sheriff, neither had he any power to sell them; there was, therefore, no legal compulsion on the plaintiffs to pay this money, and it does not in consequence fall within the cases in which money has been allowed to be recovered back after payment. (Lackington v. Elliott, 8 Scott, N. S. 275.)

TINDAL, C. J.—I am of opinion that the verdict in this cause is right, and ought not to be disturbed. The question is, whether the payment which was made by the assignees on the 2nd of September, 1843, was a voluntary one on their part, or such as the law will say was not voluntary. Now, viewing all the circumstances of the present case, I should say that when this payment was made by the assignees, they had some reason to suppose that if the money was not paid, the sheriff would have proceeded to sell the goods; so that the payment was not made voluntarily on their part. In the first place, the sheriff's officer comes armed with a warrant under a writ of execution; and secondly, he actually makes an entry thereunder before the fiat; and though he did not then make an actual seizure and went out of possession, yet he afterwards, on the 15th of August, enters by force, and makes an inventory of the property; all those shew acts on the part of the sheriff which, as against him, at least, must be taken to prove that he was in possession of the goods; and all the cases determine that if the party is in possession of the property, claiming a right thereto, and another is thereby induced to offer a sum of money in order to redeem such property, this payment is not voluntary. It falls within the principle laid down in Fulham v. Down (6 Esp. 26), where Lord Kenyon said, "that where a voluntary payment was made of an illegal demand, the party knowing the demand to be illegal, without an immediate and urgent necessity (or as expressed by Mr. Bearcroft, unless to redeem or preserve your person or goods), it is not the subject of an action for money had and received;" which clearly admits that if there is an urgent necessity to make the payment for the purpose of redeeming the person or the goods, the person so paying has a right to bring his action to recover it back; and I cannot distinguish this from the present case.

COLTMAN, J.—Snowden v. Davis is fully an authority for the present action. That case was a remarkable one. It was a case in which a distringas had issued from the Exchequer requiring the sheriff to levy issues on the inhabitants of New Windsor. The bailiff, to whom the sheriff directed the warrant, seems to have misunderstood the effect of the writ; he thought it authorized him to levy the whole of the debt on the plaintiff, one of the inhabitants, whereas he was only authorized to levy the issues of one shilling in the pound on the lands. The bailiff threatened to distrain for a part, namely, for the issues he had—for the residue he had not a right to distrain. Under this distress the party paid the amount, and afterwards brought an action to recover it back. Now, the first of these payments was similar to the present, and the Court there held that the party was entitled to recover it back, as it was made to an officer clothed with an authority to demand it, and there had been an actual distress. I do not, however, consider that there is any difference in this respect between an actual distress and a payment to one standing in the situation of a sheriff, with the power of the county to back him in seizing the goods. The payment in such a case is not a voluntary one, and may therefore be recovered back.

CRESSWELL and ERLE, JJ. concurred.

—— Rule discharged.

Wednesday, May 7.

WADE v. SIMEON.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Court of Exchequer on two cheques, in which action an order was made, by consent, for stay of proceedings, on payment of the debt on a day certain. The Court of Exchequer afterwards, at the instance of the defendant, set aside this order, on terms, ordering the cause to proceed to trial. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant in this court, declaring on an agreement to stay the proceedings in the action in the Court of Exchequer, on the defendant promising to pay the debt in that action on a day certain, and that a judge's order should accordingly be obtained for stay of proceedings in that action, to give effect to such agreement.

Held, that this Court would not summarily interfere to prevent t[illegible]laintiff from suing on such agreement, notwithst[illegible] the proceedings which had occurred in the Court of Exchequer.

This was a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why all proceedings in this cause should not be stayed, or why the defendant should not have a month's further time to plead.

The declaration in this cause recited an action brought by the now plaintiff against the now defendant in the Court of Exchequer, for the recovery of the two several sums of 1,300*l.* and 700*l.* and interest, to which action the defendant had pleaded,—that notice for the trial of the same had been given, and that the same was about to be tried at the sittings of Nisi Prius, to be holden at Westminster after Michaelmas Term, 1844, and that the same would have taken place, had it not been for the promise of the defendant, as thereinafter mentioned, and that the plaintiff had incurred costs in the said action. The declaration then recited the service on the plaintiff of a notice of an application to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to restrain the plaintiff from issuing execution in the said action on any judgment obtained by him therein, in case plaintiff should obtain such judgment.

The declaration then stated that thereupon, to wit, &c. being the day next before the day when the said trial was so appointed and fixed to take place as aforesaid, in consideration that the plaintiff, at request of the defendant, would forbear prosecuting and stay all further proceedings in the said action until and upon the 14th day of December, 1844, save and except the taxation of the said costs and charges, and the obtaining and drawing up an order therein, as hereafter mentioned, he the defendant then promised the plaintiff, that he the defendant would on that day pay him the said sums of 1,300*l.* and 700*l.* and interest thereon respectively, as aforesaid, together with the said costs and charges, such costs and charges to be taxed; and that in the event of the defendants not paying the same, the defendant would suffer, and the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign, judgment in the said action; and that a judge's order should and might be obtained and drawn up in the said action to secure such payment; and that the said notice, and the said application and motion to the said Court of Chancery, should be abandoned. And that the plaintiff, confiding in the said promise of the defendant, did then, to wit, on, &c. withdraw the said record, and forbore prosecuting, and stayed all further proceedings in the said action until and upon the said 14th day of December, 1844, save and except the taxation of the said costs and charges, and the obtaining and drawing up the said order to be so obtained as aforesaid; and that, save and except as aforesaid, the plaintiff had from thence thitherto forborne to prosecute, and had stayed all further proceedings in the said action. The declaration then averred a taxation of the said costs of the plaintiff incurred in the said action, and that the amount thereof on such taxation came to 80*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

Breaches.—Non-payment to the plaintiff of the said sums of 1,300*l.* and 700*l.* and the said interest, amounting to 451*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* and the said costs and charges, amounting to and so taxed at the said sum of 80*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* as aforesaid, or any or either of them, or any part thereof; and further, hindering and preventing the plaintiff from signing judgment in the said action. And further, that the defendant obtained a rule and order of the said Court for setting aside, and did thereby procure to be set aside, a certain order before that, to wit, on the 6th day of December, 1844, made by Sir Edward Hall Alderson, Knt. one of the barons of the said court, and drawn up in pursuance of the said promise and according to the same.

It appeared upon affidavit, that an action had been brought in the Court of Exchequer of Pleas against the defendant, at the suit of the present plaintiff, upon two cheques drawn by the defendant on Messrs. Child and Co. bankers, one for 1,300*l.* and the other for 700*l.* The defendant had, among other pleas, pleaded to such action that the cheques had been given for moneys lost by gaming at hazard, and that the plaintiff at the time he became the bearer of the cheques had notice of the same. The cause being at issue, was fixed for trial on 7th December last. On the 6th December an order was made by Alderson, B. by consent, that upon payment of 2,000*l.* and interest on the two cheques from the date thereof until payment, together with costs, to be taxed and paid on or before the 14th day of December then instant, all further proceedings in that cause should be stayed; and further, that in case default be made in payment as aforesaid, the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign judgment and issue execution for the whole amount remaining unpaid. Subsequently such new facts were communicated to the defendants as would, as the defendant believed, have established the defendant's plea above stated. The defendant thereupon applied by summons before a judge to set aside the above order, and on the same being heard at chambers, Rolfe, B. refused to set aside the order, but directed the money to be brought into court, and the proceedings to be stayed until the fourth day of last Hilary Term. In pursuance of such last-mentioned order, the defendant paid into the Court of Exchequer in that action the sum of 2,500*l.* and in Hilary Term last, and before the commencement of the action in this court, the Court of Exchequer granted a rule ordering that the order of Mr. Baron Alderson of the 6th December last be set aside, and that the plaintiff do proceed to the trial of that cause; and further, that the money paid into court by the defendant should remain therein to abide the event of the said trial, and of that cause; and further, that the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the costs to be taxed by the Master of that rule, and of the said order, and of and incidental to restoring the said cause to the position in which it stood at the time of the date thereof. The plaintiff, up to the 8th March last, refused to recognize such rule, and though served with appointments to tax, never attended the taxation of the costs therein mentioned, and the same were therefore taxed at a nominal sum. Subsequently, however, the plaintiff obtained an order for the Master to review his taxation, under which order the costs were retaxed and paid. On the day the rule was granted, the plaintiff commenced the present action in this cause against the defendant. The plaintiff declared as above on the 18th of March last, and on the 20th of that month a summons was taken out before Rolfe, B. the vacation judge at chambers, to shew cause why the writ of summons in this action and all subsequent proceedings thereon should not be set aside, on the ground that the promise on which the action was founded was the subject of the order of Alderson, B. which had been set aside. The learned judge, however, dismissed the application with costs, observing that any defence on that ground might be set up by plea.

Channell and Byles, Serjts. now shewed cause, and contended that the case was not one in which the Court ought summarily to interfere; that there had been no breach of good faith in which the Court would interpose to stay proceedings, as in Moscati v. Lawson (4 A. & E. 331); that the plaintiff here had done all he had by the terms of the agreement to perform, viz. he had withdrawn the record, and delayed going to trial. The declaration shewed a good and distinct cause of action, and that the plaintiff ought not to be prevented from suing in this court by a proceeding which would deprive him of a writ of error; that he was not proceeding in the Court of Exchequer, and was willing to a judgment of non pros. being entered against him in the action in that court.

The following cases were cited: Dicas v. Jay (6 Bing. 519), and Cocker v. Tempest (7 M. & W. 502).

Kinglake, Serjt. (Barstow with him), in support of the rule, relied upon the whole subject-matter of the present action having been heard in the Court of Exchequer, and that that Court had made that which it considered a proper order for disposing of it; that the money, the subject of the present action, had been paid into that court; and that the plaintiff had, by receiving the taxed costs of the rule, adopted its terms. It was an abuse of the process of the court to sue out the writ in this action after the order made by the Court of Exchequer, and the present application falls within the principle laid down by Pollock, C.B. in this cause (14 L. J., N. S. Ex. 118):—"We think there can be no doubt that in any stage of the proceedings, as long as there remains any necessity for an appeal to the authority of the Court, or any occasion to call on the Court to exercise its jurisdiction, the Court has an undoubted right to interfere; and it is its duty to interfere if it perceives that the process or jurisdiction of the Court is about to be used for purposes which are not consistent with justice." Doe dem. Carthew and Others v. Brenton (6 Bing. 469), and Parkyn v. Scott (1 Taunt. 565), were cited.

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that the plaintiff has a primâ facie cause of action against the defendant, and has a right, by the law of the land, to have the judgment of this Court on it, and in case of being dissatisfied therewith, to bring his writ of error thereon, or otherwise, to have the opinion of the Court above, according to the usual course of a cause. We ought to be careful to see that there has been such conduct of the plaintiff as to deprive him of this right, and I cannot see that the Court of Exchequer meant, by the rule they made, to prevent the plaintiff from suing on this agreement; all they did was to refuse giving a summary effect to part of its terms; but that left untouched the rest of the agreement. The plaintiff here insists that it was agreed between him and the defendant, in consideration of his forbearing to prosecute an action against the defendant, that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff two sums of money on a day certain, and that it was one of the terms of such agreement that a judge's order should be drawn up, in order the better to carry such agreement into effect. The Court of Exchequer thought that they had authority to set aside that order, and that Court no doubt had a right, if it thought proper, to do so; but that seems to me to leave standing the agreement between the parties, which was the foundation of that order, and quite separate and distinct therefrom. The defendant may, in this action, if he chooses, put that agreement in issue, and then at the trial, if the plaintiff cannot produce or prove such an agreement, he must fail; if he can establish it, then he would and ought to succeed in the action. The present case does not shape itself under those cases where there has been any breach of good faith. If it had, this Court would certainly have interfered. I think, therefore, this rule ought to be discharged.

COLTMAN, CRESSWELL, and ERLE, JJ. delivered similar judgments.

Rule discharged, without costs: the defendant to have time to plead.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Saturday, May 3.

WASSALL v. SCARISBROOK.

Service of notice of declaration—Time for signing judgment.

Where a notice of declaration has been put under the door, and the defendant admits having received it, judgment is regularly signed eight days after such service, unless the defendant swears to some delay in his receiving it.

Crouch shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by James to set aside the judgment signed by the plaintiff in this action. The affidavit upon which the rule was obtained stated that the defendant had never been served with any writ, and that he had no notice of the proceedings until he received a notice of declaration from his landlord, who had found it under the door. He did not state when he received the notice of declaration

The affidavit in answer positively swore that the defendant was served with a writ, and it also stated that the notice of declaration was served on the 28th March last, by being put under the door, and that on the 31st March the defendant admitted having received it from his landlord. Judgment was signed at the proper time, assuming the notice of declaration to have been received on the 28th March.

Crouch contended that, as the notice of declaration might, for any thing that appeared to the cont ary, have been received by the defendant in proper time, and as the onus lay upon the defendant to shew irregularity in the proceedings, the rule ought to be discharged.

James, contrà.

POLLOCK, C. B.—The ground on which I have come to the conclusion that the rule should be discharged is this: the party originally applying for the rule swears that he received the notice of declaration from his landlord. I think we must take that to have been on the day when it was put under the door. It is quite consistent with every thing that appears that he may have received it in time to make the judgment regular. He has chosen to conceal the time when he really did get it. The rule must be discharged, unless the defendant chooses to have the proceedings set aside on payment of costs.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Rule accordingly.

HOLLAND v. WRIGHT.

Rule nisi—Affidavit of service.

An affidavit of service of a rule stating that the rule was served "on the sister of the defendant's wife, at his dwelling-house," is not sufficient without stating that she resided there, or was a member of the family.

Pearson moved to make a rule to compute absolute on affidavit of service. The affidavit stated that the rule was served by leaving a copy of the same "with the sister of the defendant's wife, at his dwelling-house."

ALDERSON, B.—The officers certify that it is not sufficient unless you go on to state that the sister was one of the family, or that she resided there. It is different from the wife or the servant of the party, who may be taken primâ facie to live in the house; but the wife's sister is a mere stranger, unless the contrary be shewn. You had better amend your affidavit. Rule accordingly.

DOE dem. LLOYD v. INGLEBY.

Tenant—Notice to quit—Expiration of term.

In this case Jerris obtained a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant. The point was reserved by Coleridge, J. before whom the cause was tried, with liberty to the Court to draw the same conclusions from the evidence as a jury might have done.

Welsby and Townsend shewed cause on a previous day in the present Term.

Jerris, contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

POLLOCK, C. B. now said.—In this case it appears that the notice to quit was given on the 2nd April, 1843. The ejectment was brought on a demise of May 4, 1844. The question is, whether the tenancy began so as to admit of that demise being resorted to. The point was reserved by Coleridge, J. and the Court was to be permitted to draw the same conclusions as a jury. On the facts, certainly, I should draw the conclusion that the tenancy commenced on the 12th May, and therefore that the demise was too soon. Rule absolute.

MILLS v. GOFF.

Tenant—Notice to quit—Expiration of term.

A notice to quit was given to a tenant from year to year "on the 11th October now next ensuing, or such other day or time as your said tenancy may expire on." The notice being insufficient for the next 11th October, Held, that the subsequent words did not make it a good notice for the next year.

Trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house and premises, and expelling him therefrom.

Pleas—1st, Not guilty. 2nd. A plea under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 71, alleging that the plaintiff held the premises under the defendant as tenant from year to year, at a certain rent not exceeding 20*l.* a year, &c.; and that before the trespasses, the interest of the plaintiff ended and became duly determined by a legal notice to quit, and that, the plaintiff neglecting and refusing to deliver up possession, the defendant caused the plaintiff to be served with a notice of his intention to apply to the justices of the county in petty sessions for their warrant to certain constables to enter and take possession; that the plaintiff not appearing, the defendant proved the holding and determination of the tenancy, and the neglect and refusal of the plaintiff to deliver up the premises; that the justices issued their warrant, and that the constables entered, which were the same trespasses, &c. Verification. 3rd. Liberum tenementum.

Replication, similiter to the first plea.

To the second plea, That all the term and interest of the plaintiff had not before the said time when, &c. ended, nor become duly determined modo et formâ, &c.

To the third plea, That the defendant has nothing in the said premises, except under one Abraham Turrell, and that before the said time when, &c. the said Abraham Turrell demised the premises to the plaintiff from year to year, and that the defendant, during the continuance of the demise, committed the trespasses. Verification.

Rejoinder—That Abraham Turrell conveyed the remainder immediately expectant on the determination of the demise to the defendant; that the plaintiff thereby, and by force of the statute, became tenant to the defendant, and that before the trespasses the interest of the plaintiff was determined by a legal notice to quit.—Verification.

Surrejoinder—That the interest of the plaintiff was not duly determined by a legal notice to quit modo et formâ.

Upon this issue was joined.

The defendant, at the trial before Williams, J. at the last Suffolk assizes, proved the following notice to quit, which was served on the day after its date:—

"To Mr. ROBERT MILLS,—I do hereby give you notice and require you to quit and deliver up the peaceable and quiet possession of the dwelling-house and premises which you now hold of me, situate at Wrentham, in the county of Suffolk on the eleventh day of October now next ensuing, or such other day or time as your said tenancy may expire on.

"And I do hereby give you further notice, that unless you quit and deliver up possession of the said premises at the time and in manner aforesaid, double rent will be charged for the said premises for so long as you shall hold over the said tenancy.

"Dated this seventeenth day of June, 1840.

"JOHNSON GOFF.

(Witness) "WM. R. SEAGO."

It was admitted that it was a bad notice for the 11th October next, but the question at the trial was, whether the words "such other day or time as your said tenancy may expire on," made it a good notice for the following year.

The learned judge thought it sufficient, and the jury found for the defendant.

Prendergast having obtained a rule for a new trial, on the ground of the insufficiency of the notice,

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause.—The words in the notice must be taken to mean at the earliest time for which a notice would properly be given. For some purposes a tenancy from year to year may be said to expire every year. He cited Doe dem. Lord Huntingtower v. Culliford (4 Dowl. & R. 249).

Prendergast, contrà.

ALDERSON, B.—This notice is upon the face of it a three months' notice for the 11th October, 1840, and if it was intended to make it applicable to the next year, care should have been taken to make it more distinct in its terms. The landlord here seems not to have been quite certain himself of the time at which the tenancy would expire, and he has tried to throw the burden of discovering that upon his tenant.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Rule absolute.

Tuesday, May 6.

ASTON v. BREDIN.

Special demurrer—Strict interpretation of the words "last mentioned."

This was an action of trover against the defendant for seizing and converting to his own use certain chattels of the plaintiff—to wit, twenty tons of hay, two tons of barley, and a certain quantity of turnips. The defendant in his plea justified the taking, as servant to one William Brevit, he being possessed of three undivided fourth parts or shares in the said chattels, as tenant in common thereof, giving colour to the plaintiff. To this the plaintiff replied, that as to part of the said chattels, the said W. Brevit was not possessed thereof in manner and form; and as to the rest of the said chattels, portion of the said chattels in the declaration mentioned, that the defendant of his own wrong took and seized the said last-mentioned chattels, without the matter of excuse in the plea alleged. To this there was a special demurrer, on the ground that the words last-mentioned chattels must be held to refer to the whole of the chattels mentioned in the declaration, the last antecedent being "the said chattels in the declaration mentioned;" therefore, the replication was bad, as answering more than it professed to do.

Unthank, in support of the demurrer, was stopped by the Court, who called on H. Hill to support the replication.

H. Hill.—The simple question is, whether a common sense interpretation is not to be given to this replication; if so, the judgment must be for the plaintiff.

POLLOCK, C. B.—If you put in the words "portion of the said goods in the declaration mentioned" in a parenthesis, then the matter is perfectly plain; but as this is a special demurrer, the objection must prevail.

Hill.—Then the plea is bad, as it does not sufficiently justify any conversion. The defendant merely says he took and seized for a third person, which would not justify a conversion to his own use.

Cases cited: Ascue v. Sanderson (Cro. Eliz. 104); Whitmore v. Cotton (13 M & W. 104).

POLLOCK, C. B.—I think the plea is a good plea, and that the replication is bad. It is very clear what the plaintiff meant by it, but as the objection is taken on special demurrer, it must prevail.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion; there is such an ambiguity here, that as the replication is specially demurred to, the objection cannot be got over: it may be, that the plea also would have been bad if specially demurred to, but as that was not done, we must take it as on general demurrer, and it is well enough.

The rest of the court concurring,

Judgment for the defendant.

TURNER v. MASON.

Where a female servant has been dismissed by her master for leaving his house for a day and a night against his orders, it is no excuse for her to say that she went to see her sick mother, having first been refused permission by the master. Semble, That the Court cannot enter into questions of moral excuses for such disobedience of the master's orders.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover a month's wages, on the ground that the defendant had wrongfully discharged the plaintiff from his service.

The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff, being a housemaid in the service of the defendant, had wrongfully and against his orders left his, the defendant's, service, and stayed away for the space of one day and night, whereupon he dismissed her.

Replication.—That the mother of the plaintiff being dangerously ill, the plaintiff requested the defendant to allow her to go and see her said mother, which the defendant then refused to allow her to do, whereupon she, the plaintiff, went to see her said mother, as she lawfully might for the cause aforesaid, her services not being required during that time by the defendant.

Demurrer.

Gray appeared to support the demurrer, but the Court called on Baddeley to support his replication.

Baddely.—Even admitting the replication to be bad, still the plea is bad also, as it does not disclose any just cause for dismissing the plaintiff. It is not at all alleged in the plea that the defendant required the plaintiff's services during the time she was absent, and it surely cannot be a sufficient reason to a master to dismiss his servant, that the servant went away for a short time, unless it is shewn that the master was damnified thereby. Suppose the servant wanted medical advice, and the master would not give her leave to go out and get it, surely she would be justified in so doing, and the master could not discharge her. Now here she was in the performance of a high moral duty, and it is contended that no cause for the dismissal is shewn. [PARKE, B.—This is a wilful disobedience of orders.] Baddely.—But every disobedience of orders will not justify a dismissal. [PARKE, B.—But a wilful disobedience of lawful orders will, and surely an order not to leave the master's service is a lawful order? and here she goes out, and stays all night.] [ALDERSON, B.—Suppose your cook refuses to cook your dinner on a Sunday, may you not discharge her?] Am I to infer that a servant is not to absent herself to attend the death-bed of her mother? [ALDERSON, B.—This is a question of contract, not morality; for it would be equally moral for the servant to work for her mother if she was starving, yet it could not be contended that she could do that. PARKE, B.—Then you do not sufficiently aver that the master had notice of the illness of the mother.] That is sufficiently shown by the application to the master for leave to go and see her.

Cases cited, Levison v. Kirk (Lane's Rep. p. 5); Callo v. Brounker (4 C. & P. 518); Fillieuld v. Armstrong (7 A. & E. 507); Jackpo v. Butler (7 Dowl. 748).

Gray, in support of the demurrer, was not called on by the Court.

POLLOCK, C. B.—The plea is a perfectly good plea, as it discloses an order of the master, which has been wilfully disobeyed by the servant. Then the replication does not shew any good cause for the disobedience of tha torder; it does not even appear that the master had any sufficient notice of the illness of her mother, or even if he had, that any advantage was to be gained by the servant's going to see her. No doubt it might be very proper for the daughter to go, but that is not the question we have to decide, which is a mere one of contract.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion; in contracts by servants the rule is that the servant is to obey all the lawful orders of the master, and that he may discharge his servant for any wilful disobedience of such orders; now here there is that wilful disobedience. Then does the replication shew any good excuse for the disobedience? I think it does not. The master is the proper person to determine whether his female servant shall absent herself from his house for a day and a night. Even if the mother was like to die, still there is no imperative duty cast on the daughter to go to see her, which can override the master's authority; and if she goes, she must do so at the peril of being discharged.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. There may be a very good moral right for the servant to leave, but not a good legal one. It may be wrong of the master to refuse the servant permission to go to see her sick mother, but we have only to do with the pure legal question, and cannot enter questions of excuse by moral rights. It may be that the servant may be excused leaving the master's house in the case of infectious fevers, or apprehension of personal violence, but it is for the servant to make out the legal necessity, which she has not done here.

ROLFE, B. concurred.

Judgment for the defendant.

JONES v. CHAPMAN and OTHERS.

Where a constable justifies a trespass under a warrant of justices to give possession of a tenement under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, he must shew that he was a constable of the division or district in which the premises or part of them was situate.

This was an action against the defendants for breaking into the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, and removing his goods.

To this the defendants pleaded several pleas, justifying the trespass under the authority of a warrant of justices to them, as constables, to give possession of the said dwelling-house to one William Chapman, under the Small Tenements Act (1 & 2 Vict. c. 74).

Demurrer—on the ground, amongst others, that the plea did not shew that the justices had jurisdiction to issue their warrant, and that it was not alleged that the defendants were constables of "the district, division, or place within which the said premises, or any part thereof, was situate," as required by the Act.

Welsby, in support of the demurrer.—Where a justification is made under an order of justices, it must be shewn distinctly that the magistrates had jurisdiction, and that every proper proceeding has been taken. Now here, although it is stated in the pleas that the justices duly issued their order to the defendants and all other constables of the district of A, it is nowhere shewn that the house in question was within that district, as required by the Act. (Stopped by the Court.)

Peacock, in support of the plea.—This is an action against the constables, and not against the justices; the question is, therefore, whether the constable is bound to inquire whether the justices have authority to make their order. Now it is contended, that even if the constable is not an officer of the district, still the justice may make him his officer by merely directing his warrant to him; and if so, he is not bound to inquire whether or no the magistrate has jurisdiction to make the order.

PARKE, B.—You are all wrong. The statute says that no person shall serve the order to give possession under that statute, except the constable for the division in which the premises are situate. Now here the defendants do not shew in their pleas that they were constables of the district in which the house in question was situate, therefore the plea is bad.

POLLOCK, C. B., ALDERSON, B. and ROLFE, B. concurred. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Wednesday, May 7.

EVANS v. THE DROGHEDA RAILWAY COMPANY (5 Law T. 57).

Semble, where there has been a service of a writ of summons upon a wrong party under a Railway Act, the objection to such service is not waived by the party not moving to set it aside immediately, and a rule to set aside all subsequent proceedings will be granted, although he has had notice of every different step.

In this case Crompton shewed cause against a rule obtained by Peacock to set aside the judgment on the ground that the company had been improperly served.

It appeared that the service had been made in London, on one of the directors of the company who happened to be there; but by a clause of the Railway Act it was provided that, before any service could be made upon a director in an action against the company, inquiries must be made at the office of the company, if known, for the secretary or clerk of the company, who was to be the person served. Now the rule was moved on affidavits shewing that the office of the company was at Dublin, and that the secretary and clerk of the company were at all times to be found there.

Crompton.—Even allowing the service to be bad, still the defendants have no right to lay by until judgment has been signed before they take any step: and as they had notice of every step which has been taken in the case, the Court will treat this as a case of irregular service which has been waived by the defendants, who ought to have moved to set aside the service in the first instance. They had notice of declaration given them; they should then have objected.

PARKE, B.—Suppose you had a letter informing you that there was a notice of declaration stuck up in the Four Courts, Dublin, against you, would you take any notice of it?

POLLOCK, C. B.—There was never any service at all here, as the corporation were never within the jurisdiction.

Crompton.—The cause of action arose in England, and the defendants are a corporation of the United Kingdom.

PARKE, B.—Yes; but you have no right to serve a director anywhere, unless you have made every effort to serve the secretary or clerk at the office in Dublin.

POLLOCK, C. B.—Is there any case which shews that when there has been an irregular service, and the party says, If you go on I shall hold you responsible, is there any case to shew that if you do go on, he cannot apply to set all the proceedings aside?

Crompton.—Here the fact of the defendants having notice of every step which has been taken is a very important feature in the case.

ALDERSON, B.—You are arguing the case on the assumption that there has merely been an irregular service, but this service would have been bad even in Ireland.

Peacock appeared to support his rule, but was not called on by the Court.

Judgment for the defendant.

BEARUP and ANOTHER v. PEACOCK.

In this case M. Chambers had obtained a rule nisi for an attachment for the non-performance of the award.

Knowles now shewed cause, and asked the Court to stay the proceedings in that case, as he was instructed to move to set aside the award itself. This he found he could not do without joint and separate motion, as the objections to the award did not appear upon the face of the affidavits on which the attachment had been moved for.

The COURT said the rule would be made absolute simply; but if a rule nisi was obtained to set aside the award, of course the proceedings on the present rule would be stayed. Rule absolute.

At a subsequent period of the day Knowles obtained a rule nisi to set aside the award, on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrator, on the authority of Dobson and Another v. Groves and Others (14 Law Jour. N. S.; 1 Ver. Prac. Cases, 101).

BEVINS v. HULME.

Pleading several counts, allowance of.

The first count alleged that defendant was retained by plaintiff to prosecute an action, at the suit of A B, for damages sustained by A B by reason of his having been run over by a gig, and that he did prosecute the action, and recover the damages and costs. Breach—That he had not paid the same to the plaintiff, or to the said A B, or any other person. The second count was for money had and received. Held, that these counts were not in apparent violation of the 5th rule of 4 Wm. 4.

Crompton shewed cause against a rule obtained by Prideaux for rescinding an order of Rolfe, B. for striking out one of the counts of the declaration herein, as having been inserted in contravention of the 5th rule of H. T. 4 Wm. 4. The action was against an attorney. The first count alleged that the defendant and one Andrew, his partner, were retained by the plaintiff to prosecute an action for the father of the plaintiff, to recover damages for an injury sustained by the father by reason of his having been run over by a gig; that they did accordingly, as such attorneys, prosecute the action and recover damages; that they recovered a small portion of the debt and damages under a fi. fa. and arrested the defendant under a ca. sa. for the balance, who thereupon paid such balance to the jailer, who paid it to the defendant and his said partner; with a breach, that the defendant had not, nor had the said Andrew, paid the said balance to the plaintiff or to his father, or to any other person. The second count was a common count for money had and received. Mr. Baron Rolfe had ordered one of the counts to be struck out, as it was submitted correctly, for the plaintiff was the party who retained the defendant, and the terms of the breach shewed that the money was to be paid to him, and if so, the action was substantially one for money had and received. The particulars proved that the two counts were in respect of the same transaction.

Prideaux, contra, was not called upon.

PARKE, B.—This rule must be made absolute. The question is, not whether the two counts relate to the same transaction, but whether they are in apparent violation of the rule. Can you say that this special count disclose [illegible] f money had and received to the use of the plaintiff? The mere fact of the breach charging a non-payment to the plaintiff makes no difference. We must look to the nature of the count itself.

ROLFE, B.—When Mr. Prideaux moved this rule, he mentioned a circumstance which I was not previously aware of—namely, that the plaintiff in this action is not the same person as the plaintiff in the original action. Rule absolute.

BAIL COURT.

Saturday, May 3.

(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

Ex parte THE COMMISSIONERS OF STAMPS AND TAXES.

Quære, whether, on an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster being admitted an attorney of the courts at Westminster under the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 4, he is chargeable with an additional duty of 60l. or 120l.

Crompton moved, on behalf of the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, for a rule calling upon an attorney of this Court to shew cause why he should not be struck off the roll.

The rule was moved for, not on the ground of any misconduct on the part of the attorney, but for the purpose of trying the question whether or not an attorney of the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster, on being admitted an attorney of this court, is chargeable with an additional stamp-duty of 60*l.* or 120*l.* It was said that a great many cases will depend upon the decision.

It appeared that the gentleman against whom this rule was moved had paid on his articles of clerkship, which were entered into in order to his admission as an attorney in the county palatine of Lancaster, the sum of 60*l.* pursuant to the schedule of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and that he was accordingly admitted an attorney of that court in 1830; that on the 4th of May, 1844, he was admitted an attorney of this court, pursuant to the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 4, which enacts "that upon payment of the sum of 120*l.* being the amount of duty imposed by law on articles of clerkship entered into by any person in order to his admission in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Stamps, &c. to stamp any articles of clerkship, &c. under which any person may have served or become bound to serve as clerk in order to his admission in any of the courts of great sessions in Wales, or of the counties palatine of Chester, Lancaster, &c.; and thereupon the person having so served shall be capable of being admitted an attorney, &c. in one of his Majesty's said courts at Westminster: provided always, that at the time when such articles of clerkship shall be required to be stamped with the said stamp denoting the payment of the said sum of 120*l.* such articles shall have been previously stamped with a stamp denoting the payment of the duty payable in respect of the same at the date of such articles of clerkship." Upon such his admission, the additional sum of 60*l.* was paid, making, together with the sum originally paid on his articles of clerkship, the sum of 120*l.* On the part of the Commissioners of Stamps, it was now contended that this sum was too little, and that the entire sum of 120*l.* should have been paid under the provisions of the last-mentioned Act, in addition to the original sum of 60*l.*

This gentleman having been admitted on the 4th of May, 1844, this was the last day on which, by the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 29, this application could be made.

TRENT v. HARRISON.

No expenses of witnesses should be allowed on taxation of costs which have not actually been paid.

His lordship gave judgment in this case, which was an application for the Master to ascertain whether certain sums stated in the affidavit of increase to have been paid to various witnesses, had in fact been paid before the taxation of costs; and if any had not so been paid, that the amount should be repaid by the plaintiff to the defendant, out of the money levied on the execution; and that the Master's allocatur and the judgment should be reduced accordingly; and that the plaintiff should pay the costs of the application. By the affidavit of increase it was sworn that several sums of 4*l.* 4s. and 3*l.* &c. had been paid to certain witnesses in the cause, whereupon these sums (slight deductions having been made) were allowed by the Master. By the affidavits used in moving for this rule, it appeared that these sums had not in fact been paid, but that one witness having goods of the plaintiff in his hands, was allowed to deduct the amount therefrom, and that another witness had an I O U given him.

His lordship, in making the rule absolute, said, that although he did not feel himself called upon to impute fraud to the parties, yet that the affidavit of increase was decidedly untrue; and that, according to the practice of the court, which was a very wholesome one, and requires that all payments should in fact be made before they are allowed on taxation, the Master would not have allowed these items if he had been properly made aware of the real facts; and such being the case, notwithstanding the amounts may since have been paid, the rule must be made absolute.

DOWNES v. GARBETT.

A writ of summons described the defendant as "Edmund Garbett, of Wellington, in the county of Salop, but now of Middlesex:" Held bad, for the want of the addition of the place of residence or supposed residence in Middlesex.

Miller shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Lush to set aside the writ of summons, or the copy and service thereof, for irregularity, with costs. The irregularity complained of was in the description of the defendant, which was as follows:—"To Edmund Garbett, of Wellington, in the county of Salop, but now of Middlesex;" and it was contended that this was a sufficient compliance with the 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, the first section of which Act requires that in every writ of summons and copy thereof "the place and county of the residence or supposed residence of the party defendant, or wherein the party shall be or shall be supposed to be, shall be mentioned;" for that the actual residence of the defendant was given as at Wellington, and for the purpose of giving jurisdiction, the county also where he happened to be at the time of service. That inasmuch as the defendant was at the time of service in London, though at no fixed place there (his regular residence being at Wellington), he was properly described in the writ—the object of the description being to satisfy the defendant that he is the person intended. (Border v. Levi, 3 Dowl. 150; Hill v. Harvey, 4 Dowl. 163; Ward v. ——— 5 Dowl. 94; Cotton v. Soyer, 2 Dowl. N. S. 310; Simpson v. Ramsden, 13 L. J. Q. B. 91; Stevenson v. Thorn, 2 Dowl. & Low. 230; Norman v. Winter, 7 Dowl. 304.)

Lush, contrà, was not called upon.

COLERIDGE, J.—Although I am not willing to construe these errors with unnecessary strictness, I think that this rule must be made absolute. It has been contended that if the party's late residence is stated, it is sufficient, according to one of the decided cases; but the writ here does not say late of Wellington, but "of Wellington, in the county of Salop, but now of Middlesex." We must see whether this description is a compliance with the Act. Now, the Act contains certain requisites; it is not enough to state the county in which the defendant resides, but his place of residence, or the place and county of his supposed residence must be given. The Act of Parliament evidently contemplated two different states of facts; one, where the defendant has a known, ascertained residence, and the other, where his residence is uncertain. Now, in this writ they have given both; but the residence as stated, is in a county into which the writ does not run. It is said that here is a minute description given, which cannot mislead the defendant; but it is not a minute description only, that is a compliance with the terms of the Act. It is admitted that, if the words "of Wellington, in the county of Salop," had been struck out, it would not have done; but as the plaintiff has chosen to describe the defendant as "now of Middlesex," it is the same thing as though those words were not inserted. Here is, therefore, no mention of the place of the defendant's residence in Middlesex, and the rule must be made absolute.

Rule absolute, without costs.

REG. v. NEWTON.

When on an indictment found at the assizes the venue is changed at the instance of the defendant to another county, and he enters with a surety into the usual bond to pay all additional costs incurred in consequence of such change, and where the commission-day in the latter county is on a Saturday, and in the former county in the middle of the week, he is properly chargeable with the costs of the witnesses in staying at the assize town on the Sunday, as they were all bound to have been there on the commission-day, and this, notwithstanding the case is tried on the first day of business. The Master is justified in allowing what he conceives to have been the real extra costs, notwithstanding in so doing he may allow, in fact, all the money which has been really paid to the witnesses.

Godson, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Newton, calling upon the prosecutor to shew cause why the Master of the Crown-office should not review his taxation of the extra costs incurred herein by the prosecutor by reason of the trial of this cause having taken place at Worcester instead of Gloucester.

It appeared that an indictment for perjury having been preferred against the defendant at the Gloucester assizes, a motion was made that the trial thereof should be had in the adjoining county of Worcester, it being suggested that from peculiar circumstances a fair trial would not be had in the former county. On the argument the rule was made absolute, upon the usual undertaking of the defendant to pay the extra costs occasioned by the change of venue. This undertaking was the subject of a bond into which the defendant and a surety entered for the security of the costs. The commission-day at Gloucester was on a Wednesday, and the assizes there occupied ten days. The commission-day at Worcester was on a Saturday, and the assizes lasted a week. The indictment, which, according to the usual practice, was set down for trial by the defendant, stood about five in the list of causes, and in consequence of the four prior cases going off, it was called on at about ten o'clock on the Monday, when, at the instance of the judge, it was postponed until the following morning, when it was tried, and the defendant was acquitted. On the taxation of the extra costs, the Master allowed the following items, which were the subject of objection in this motion, namely, 4*l.* 4s. for one day's extra attendance of two professional gentlemen from London; 11*l.* 1s. 6d. in respect of the additional expenses of twelve witnesses, and 2*l.* 2s. as the additional cost of attendance of the attorney. These additional costs were allowed by the Master, on the ground that as the commission day at Worcester was on a Saturday, when at Gloucester it was on a Wednesday, one day's additional expense, namely that of Sunday, had been incurred in consequence of the change of venue. It appeared also that the sum of 11*l.* 1s. 6d. was made up of the conduct-money paid to the witnesses, who had to go to Worcester instead of to Gloucester, nine of whom, coming from Cheltenham, two from Gloucester, and one from Swindon, the whole of whose conduct-money had been allowed as increased costs.

In support of the Master's taxation it was contended that he had taken a fair and proper view of the case; that he had exercised a sound discretion, and that all the additional costs which he had allowed, making, with all the other items, the gross sum of 29*l.* 18s. were fairly and necessarily incurred in consequence of the change of venue.

Newton, contrà, contended that the fact of the Sunday intervening ought not to be considered as necessarily increasing the costs, since, as the assizes at Gloucester lasted ten days, it could not be assumed that, if the indictment had been tried there, a Sunday would not equally have intervened in that case also; that as the defendant had the option of entering the indictment either early or late as he chose, he had, in entering in it so that it came on for trial on the first day of business of the assizes, done more to avoid expense than the prosecutor had any right to expect; that as to the conduct-money of the twelve witnesses, the Master, in allowing the whole of what had been sworn to have been paid, had acted upon a wrong principle, and that at most he should only have allowed a part of this sum, since some conduct-money must have been given to the witnesses if the trial had taken place at Gloucester.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be discharged. The question here is one of principle, and unless it be shewn that the Master has misconceived the principle upon which he should have taxed, I must act upon the rule, which is uniformly adhered to, of not disturbing the taxation on the mere question of amount. It is impossible, upon a matter of amount, that the Court can form any thing like so good an opinion as the Master himself can, who has the parties before him, examines the items, and investigates the various circumstances as stated on either side. Now the three heads of charges in this case reduce themselves in fact to only two, and indeed in the end to only one. Mr. Newton says that it is not shewn that the two London witnesses were delayed longer in consequence of the cause being tried at Worcester than they would have been at Gloucester, as peradventure the cause may have been entered late at Gloucester, whereas it was entered early at Worcester; and that the judge may have directed it to have been tried on any day which he may have thought most convenient. The rebus sic stantibus, all things being the same excepting the place of trial, is that which should be looked at in the taxation. Supposing all things to have happened as they would have happened at Gloucester, has there been an increased expenditure? It certainly became the duty of the attorney and the witnesses to be at the place of trial on the Saturday, the commission-day; the cause may have been entered the very first thing; they were in fact bound to have been there. As to the second item of 11*l.* 1s. 6d. but for the explanation of the Master, I should have thought that the rule ought to be absolute on that point. Now, take the first item in this sum, which is a guinea to Whately, a professional gentleman; it is said, that if the trial had been at Gloucester he could not have had less than this sum; but it may have been that, for particular reasons, such as going there on his own business, he may not have charged any thing, but would have charged it at Worcester. It was stated to the Master that, although not more than the sums actually sworn to as paid were in fact paid, yet that the prosecutor was liable to the witnesses for more; and the Master seeing that in fact the amounts thus paid were such as would have been incurred as extra costs, he allowed them accordingly. The rule, therefore, must be discharged, but without costs.

Rule discharged without costs.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF THE NORTH RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.

In the matter of the Appeal between the Township of BILLSDALE-WEST-SIDE, Appellants, and SUTTON-UNDER-WHITESTONE-CLIFF, Respondents.

Rule for a mandamus to justices, commanding them to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal which they had refused to entertain, as the notice of appeal was not signed by a majority of the overseers.

Bliss moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus commanding the above justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal between the above townships.

It appeared that, on the 29th of July, 1844, an order of removal was made, against which notice of appeal was given in the following September. At the following October sessions the appeal was entered and respited, and at the Christmas sessions it came on for trial, when it was objected on the part of the respondents that the notice of appeal not having been signed by a majority of the overseers, it being signed only by one, when in fact there were two overseers and two churchwardens, that no legal notice had been given, and so the appellants were not entitled to have the appeal heard. For the appellants it was argued that notice of appeal need not be under the hands of the overseers at all; neither the 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, s. 8, nor the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 79, requiring that it should be. The justices held the objection to be good, and refused to hear the appeal. On the following 8th of January, 1845, the pauper was removed, and another notice of appeal, (together with the grounds of appeal,) was served on the 24th. At the ensuing Easter Sessions the appeal came on, when, on behalf of the respondents, it was objected that as the same appeal had been disposed of at the previous Christmas Sessions, the sessions ought not to entertain it. To this it was answered that, as the former appeal had not been heard, the justices ought to proceed with the one then before them. The sessions, however, held that, as the former appeal had been heard, they ought not to entertain the present one, and they accordingly dismissed it. The present application was therefor to direct the justices to hear the former appeal.

ALEXANDER v. ANDY and ANOTHER.

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit—Defective affidavit.

Flood shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Gray, for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, for not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice, and he took an objection to the sufficiency of the affidavit upon which the rule was obtained, which was sworn on the 24th of April, 1845, and stated "that issue was joined in this cause on the 28th of December, and that notice of trial was given for the first sitting in the said Term, which said notice of trial was continued to the second sitting in the said Term; and that the said plaintiff did not proceed to the trial of this cause in pursuance of the said notice." He contended that no default was shewn, as it was not stated in what Term the sittings were, in respect of which the notice was given, no Term having been mentioned in the affidavit, and the 28th December being in Michaelmas vacation.

Gray, contrà, admitted that if such were the defect in the original affidavit, he could not support his rule, and he requested that the original affidavit now filed might be inspected.

Rule discharged, if the original affidavit similarly defective—discharged on peremptory undertaking, if correct.

MALINS v. LORD DUNRAVEN.

The Court has no power to order a sheriff of one county to have a view in another, neither can it compel a jury for such a purpose to go out of the county; where, therefore, in an action of covenant involving a question of mining, it was admitted by both parties that a view would be proper, the Court directed the venue to be changed from Middlesex to Glamorganshire in which the cause of action arose.

E. V. Williams on a former day applied in this cause, on behalf of the defendant, for a rule to change the venue from Middlesex to Glamorganshire. This was an action brought by the lessee of some mining property in Glamorganshire, against the lessor, for alleged breaches of covenant; an action is also pending by the lessor against the lessee, and the same lessee has also sued another party in an action on the case, in both of which latter the venue is in Glamorganshire, and each of which actions involves matters arising out of mining transactions in the latter county. This motion was made on the ground that, as most of the witnesses were resident in Glamorganshire, it would be more convenient for them that the cause should be tried there; that the cause of action arose there, and not elsewhere; and that a view would be necessary, which could not be had if the venue remained in Middlesex.

Butt, Q. C. and Phinn shewed cause in the first instance, and contended that, under all the circumstances, it would be much more convenient to have the cause tried in Middlesex, where it could be fixed for a day certain, than at the Glamorganshire assizes, that a case of Malins v. Price, involving the same questions relative to similar property in Glamorganshire, had been tried (on an issue out of Chancery) at the last assizes for Bristol, and had then occupied seven days; that so long a cause would be exceedingly inconvenient on the Welsh circuit, where one judge has to dispose of the whole civil and criminal business; that from the great influence of the defendant, it is probable that the plaintiff will not have an impartial trial; and that if the venue is retained, the plaintiff would consent to a Middlesex jury having the view in the same way as, on the former occasion, a view was had by the Bristol jury.

Williams, in reply, assured the Court that if the venue should be changed to Glamorganshire, the cause should not be tried Western Circuit fashion! and he would undertake that, far from its occupying seven days, it should not exceed two days in trying.

Cur. adv. vult.

COLERIDGE, J. now gave judgment as follows:—This was an action by a lessee of some mining property in Glamorganshire against his lessor, for breaches of covenant, and it appears that there are two other actions pending, one by the lessor against the lessee, and another by the present plaintiff against a third party, who has an interest under the same property, the last action being on the case, and in both of which the venue is in Glamorganshire. Now it seems to be admitted by both parties that it is desirable that all the three actions should be tried together, and it is admitted also, that in each of the three cases a view is necessary. It is sought, however, to retain the venue in this case in Middlesex, and it is said that the plaintiff would consent to a view by a Middlesex jury. But I am quite satisfied that I have no power to direct a view in such a case; I could not compel the Sheriff of Middlesex to go with the jury and have a view in Glamorganshire; nor could the jury be required to go out of the county. On this ground, therefore, I think the rule ought to be made absolute for changing the venue.

Rule absolute.

WALKER & CO. v. PARKINS.

A writ of summons described the plaintiff as "Walker and Co." and a judge at chambers having set the writ aside with costs as irregular, for not setting out the names of all the plaintiffs, the Court on motion rescinded this order, holding that it could not per se be intended that "Walker and Co." meant more than one person.

Lush on a former day in this Term (April 23rd) obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the order of Mr. Baron Rolfe setting aside the writ of summons in this action with costs should not be rescinded, and why the rule of court thereon should not be set aside.

Pigott (on the 3rd May) shewed cause, and contended that the order should be supported, inasmuch as it set aside a writ which was bad on its face for not properly describing the plaintiffs in the action, the writ stating them as "Henry Walker and Co." To this motion the preliminary objection was taken that it was not made in time. The order in question was made on the 11th of April last, which was made a rule of court on the following 15th (the 1st day of term), on which day (but afterwards) a notice was served that the Court would be applied to for a rule to rescind that order. Upon this nothing more was done until the 18th, when the defendant taxed his costs. Upon that day another notice was served that the case had been mentioned to the Court and that it was directed to stand over. On the 23rd execution issued, and the plaintiff was then informed that the rule had been obtained. Upon these facts, on the authority of Clement v. Warren (1 Dowl. N.S. 196), it was contended that the motion was too late. As regarded the objection to the writ itself, it was contended that the words "and Co." necessarily importing that there were other plaintiffs, their names ought to have been set out; that notwithstanding this is an action on a bill of exchange, and the partys' names were thus set out on the bill, that the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, s. 12, enacting, "that in such actions, where any of the parties to such bill are designated by the initial letter or letters, or some contraction of the Christian or first name or names, it shall be sufficient in the process to designate such persons by the same initial letter or letters or contractions of the Christian or first name or names," does not apply, inasmuch as that enactment had reference only to the names of defendants, and not to plaintiffs; and moreover, that it could in no way apply to this case, inasmuch as this is not the use of initial letters, or the contraction of a Christian or first name, but a substitution of words which are commonly understood to stand for other persons. (Smith v. Crump, 1 Dowl. 519; 2 Dow. & Low. 232.)

Lush, contrà, endeavoured, on the first point, to distinguish this case from Clement v. Warren, and in support of the rule generally, argued, 1st, that there was no apparent irregularity on the face of the writ, for that the Court could not infer that the words "and Co." meant "other persons," and that, in point of fact, they did mean but one person; that the plaintiff carrying on his business and styling himself "Henry Walker & Co.," and that the indorsement on the writ which was to pay the amount "to the plaintiff," clearly shewed that the words "Henry Walker & Co." meant only one person. 2nd. That supposing this an irregularity at all, it is merely a misnomer, and can only be taken advantage of after declaration, pursuant to the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 11. (Scott v. Soans, 3 East, 111; Sargent v. Gordon, 7 Dow. & Ry. 258; 2 Bro. & Bin. 34; 6 M. & S.; 11 Moore, 39.)

Cur. adv. vult.

COLERIDGE, J. now gave the following judgment:—This was a rule obtained on the behalf of the plaintiff, to rescind an order of Mr. Baron Rolfe, setting aside a writ of summons. It appears to me, on the preliminary objection which was taken to this motion, that the application, under the circumstances, was made in sufficient time. Now the objection to the writ itself, upon which the judge at chambers made his order setting it aside, is, that upon its face it purports to be at the suit of more plaintiffs than one, and that their names are not set out; the writ runs in the words "Henry Walker & Co." but the indorsement on the back is in the singular only. The principle applicable to the case appears to be this; if this be merely a misnomer, the proper course is to apply, after declaration, to a judge at chambers to amend; but if the name is nought, or uncertain, it is altogether bad. If in this case there had been an indorsement shewing that there were others who were suing as plaintiffs, the case would have been different to what it is; but judicially I cannot at present assume that "Walker and Co." is not the name of one person. There was the case of Scott v. Soans (3 East, 111) referred to, in which there was an objection taken on demurrer that the defendant was described as "Jonathan, otherwise John Soans," and it was argued that the declaration was for this cause bad, as the defendant was described as having the two Christian names of Jonathan and John, whereas, in law, no person can have two Christian names; and also that it was uncertain by the declaration which was the defendant's real Christian name; but Lord Ellenborough said, "This comes on upon a demurrer to the declaration assuming a fact which does not appear, for non constat but that 'Jonathan otherwise John' is all one Christian name. Names as fanciful as 'otherwise' frequently occur. We cannot intend either way, and if the fact really were so, we should be deciding against the fact if we gave judgment for the defendant upon this demurrer." I think we ought to decide this objection as though it had been taken upon demurrer, and I cannot intend, therefore, that the words "Walker and Co." do not mean the plaintiff alone, and therefore the rule ought to be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

GEDYE v. ELGIE.

An agent's bill is not taxable under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73 (the Attorneys and Solicitors Act).

Gray and Collier shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Lush, to refer the bill of costs of the plaintiff, who was the London agent of the defendant, to the Master, to be taxed. It appeared that Mr. Elgie was an attorney practising at Worcester, and that Mr. Gedye, at the time of the incurring of the bill of costs for which this action was brought, was his London agent; the bill of costs in question was in respect of agency charges in various suits, &c. and it was argued in opposition to this rule that the 37th section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, under the provisions of which this bill was sought to be taxed, does not apply to "agents," who, if they had been intended by the legislature to have been subject to the provisions of the clause, would (since the old law of the 12 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 6, exempting their bills from taxation, was well known) have been specifically referred to, that the Act was obviously only intended to apply to bills between solicitor and client; that the Act has reference to parties acting as solicitors or attorneys for their clients, and that the "agent," which is a term well known and recognized in Acts of Parliament, is never understood as acting in such capacities.

Lush, contrà, contended that the words of the 37th section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, were sufficiently comprehensive to, and did, in fact, include the bills of agents; that the policy of the new Act was to bring within the jurisdiction of the taxing officer every variety of legal charge; that the inability of the Court to tax an agent's bill arose out of the 12 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 6, which provided that the provisions of the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, enabling the judges to refer attorneys' and solicitors' bills to taxation should not apply to the bills of costs due from one attorney or solicitor to another; and that the said Act of the 12 Geo. 2, and so much of the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, as relates to attorneys, being repealed by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, there is no restriction to the power to tax. That if the Court has no power to order an agent's bill to be taxed, it has none to direct him to deliver his bill, since both powers are derived from the same source. That there is the same reason for a power to tax the bill of an agent as that of any other professional person, and therefore it must (as the words of the enactment are general) be taken that the legislature intended no exception in favour of the bills of agents.

COLERIDGE, J.—I think, upon consideration, that this rule ought to be discharged; for on looking at the Act of Parliament I am satisfied that it was not intended to include an agent's bill. Before coming to a conclusion upon this point, we ought to look at the state of the law before the Act passed; and if we do so, w shall find that the courts of common law had no power to order such a bill to be taxed. It is true, as it has been argued, that the courts of equity constantly refer these bills to taxation by virtue of the inherent power which they possess over the practitioners of those courts; but the courts of common law it has been held have no such inherent power, and that the 12 Geo. 2, c. 13, expressly precludes them from taxing them. But it is argued that, under the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, these bills would have been taxable, and that the Act of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, which repeals all the other Acts, and is equally as comprehensive in its terms as the 2 Geo. 2, includes them. Now it is quite clear that before the time of the passing of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, agents' bills were not taxable; that being so, the Act comes into operation. Then what was the state of the law at that time? By the old law, if the attorney became insolvent or died, his assignees or executors were not bound to deliver a bill; neither were bills for conveyancing or some other matters taxable. Now, if in the 6 & 7 Vict. we see alterations in all these matters, but find no reference to the case of agents' bills, the inference is irresistible that it was not intended that the Act should apply to them. The Act makes express alterations in other matters, but makes none whatever in reference to the bills of agents. But it is said that the words of the Act are large enough to include these bills, and therefore that they must be held to include them; it is clear, however, that the word "agent" was present to the mind of the legislature, for mention is frequently made of agents in different sections of the Act, and it must be taken that they knew the state of the law at the time of the passing of the statute; and since it appears that provision is made for the defective state of the old law, and nothing is said about the bills of agents, it must be taken that, as regards them, it was intended they should be left as they were before the passing of the Act. The rule, therefore, must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Reg. v. The Recorder of Bristol.

The Court will not grant a certiorari to remove an order of quarter sessions confirming an order of removal, upon the suggestion that the removing parish had fraudulently concealed the fact that the pauper's settlement had been adjudicated on an appeal in another court, on a settlement acquired since that upon which they last removed, to be in their parish.

Skinner moved for a certiorari to be directed to the Recorder of Bristol, directing him to return an order of quarter sessions confirming an order of removal. It appeared that, in 1844, an order of removal of a pauper had been made from St. Luke's, Middlesex, to a parish in Bristol, on a settlement gained shortly before; against this the Bristol Incorporation of the Poor appealed, and the order was confirmed. Subsequently, the guardians of the Incorporation of Bristol Poor obtained an order to remove the pauper from their locality to West Ham, in Surrey, on a settlement acquired by the pauper in or about 1823 (long prior to the settlement adjudicated upon on the order from St. Luke's), no notice being taken of the prior appeal and adjudication of settlement. Against this order an appeal was entered at the Bristol Sessions, and no information having been given by the respondents of the prior order (though within their knowledge), and the fact not being known to the appellants, the order of removal was confirmed. It was now sought to bring up this last order, in order that it might be quashed, the respondents having fraudulently kept back a fact which would have shewn that they had no right to remove to West Ham.

The Court, however, thought that it could not, under such a state of facts, interfere, as it had no power to review the decision of the Court below.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Fane.)

Tuesday, May 6.

Re Dyer.

Where an insolvent has strictly no right to the protection of the Court, the Court will nevertheless, where any benefit is likely to accrue to the creditors thereby, adjourn the hearing of the petition, and grant the insolvent a protection for a limited time.

In this case the granting of the interim order was opposed by several creditors, on the ground that the insolvent had contracted debts without probable means of being able to pay. The insolvent had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act four years ago, at which time his debts amounted to 2,636*l.* and no dividend had been paid, since which time he had filed two petitions in this Court exclusive of the present petition. Previous to contracting the debts in the present schedule, the insolvent had taken a house in Southwark-street, which he stated he had taken to let out in lodgings. Several of the creditors had been induced to give credit to the insolvent in consequence of the appearance of respectability the occupation of the house had enabled him to keep up. The insolvent had never been in trade, and had no means of his own, but his wife had a considerable income, which she derived under the will of a relation, who had bequeathed it to certain trustees for her sole use and benefit, and over which the insolvent had no control.

Hughes, on behalf of the insolvent, admitted that he could not claim the protection of the Court, but proposed that the petition be adjourned for a month, instead of sine die, to enable the insolvent to make some arrangement with his wife's trustees, with a view to a proposal for the payment of his debts.

His Honour.—There is no ground or pretence for the insolvent coming here. He has no right to any protection from this Court, but if the creditors present consent, and there is any probability of an advantage accruing to the estate by a short adjournment, I will adjourn the consideration of the petition for three weeks, the insolvent, on or before the 27th instant, to file, with the proceedings in this court, a proposal, and also a copy of the probate of the will under which it is alleged that the insolvent's wife is entitled to certain property for her sole use and benefit. Petition adjourned accordingly.

Re POOK, an Insolvent.

The Court will not dismiss a petition on the ground that the blanks left in the form of petition given by the Act are not filled up.

Insolvent was opposed by a creditor of the name of Anderson, who took an objection to the petition, that the blank left in the form of petition, as given in the schedule of the Act of Parliament for the amount of the insolvent's estate, had not been filled up as directed by the rules and orders of the court. In this case the insolvent had not any estate. In support of the objection this decision by Mr. Serjeant Stephen, one of the commissioners of the Bristol district, in the matter of John Jones, reported in the Law Times of the 8th March last, was cited :—"It is a mistaken notion that when an estate is of no value the blank left in the form of the petition presented under the 7 & 8 Vict. need not be filled up. When an estate is worth nothing, it should be stated in the petition as worth nothing."

Mr. Commissioner FANE could see no difference between leaving the blank or inserting the word "nothing;" he should not decide the case upon so trivial an objection.

Wednesday, May 7.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Re JAMES PELL YALLOP, a Bankrupt.

Where a bankrupt's certificate is adjourned for his conduct, the Court will not grant him protection.

The bankrupt, who had carried on business as a builder in Hackney for fourteen months, now applied for his certificate. It appeared he had contracted debts to a very large amount, and there was scarcely any thing for the creditors.

He was opposed by Sturgeon, on the ground that he had obtained credit under false pretences, and had otherwise misconducted himself as a trader.

His HONOUR having adjourned the granting of his certificate for two years on the above grounds, Petersdorff, on the part of the bankrupt, now applied for protection.

His HONOUR said,—I wish it to be generally understood, when I adjourn the granting of a bankrupt's certificate, it is intended as a punishment, and that the bankrupt should be left to the mercy of his creditors during such adjournment; and it will be my invariable practice never to grant a protection to a bankrupt during the adjournment.

Thursday, May 1.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re HAYWARD.

Where an insolvent had previously been bankrupt, and had not obtained his certificate, the debts proved under the bankruptcy must be inserted in his schedule.

Insolvent came up for his final order for protection. His petition stated that he was a trader, but owing debts amounting in the whole to less than 300*l.*

The debts set out in the schedule did not amount to 300*l.*; but the insolvent had been a bankrupt three years before, and his debts under the bankruptcy amounted to nearly 1,000*l.*; his estate had not paid more than two shillings in the pound. All his then creditors had proved under the commission. The insolvent had not obtained his certificate, never having applied for it, and none of the debts proved under the bankruptcy were inserted in the schedule.

The final order was opposed on behalf of a creditor, on the ground that the insolvent, not having obtained his certificate, was not discharged from the debts due previous to and proved under his bankruptcy; that those debts ought therefore to have been inserted in the schedule, and, if inserted, would, after allowing for the two shillings in the pound, paid under the bankruptcy, amount to more than 300*l.*

Cooke, on behalf of the insolvent, contended, that as all the creditors previous to the bankruptcy had proved their debts under the commission, the insolvent was not under any legal liability on account of those debts; the creditors having elected to come in under the commission, could not now bring actions for those debts, and therefore the insolvent was not obliged to enter them in his schedule.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.—The debts still exist, and I do not see how you can get over the objection.

Cooke then applied for an adjournment of the examination, to give the insolvent an opportunity in the meantime to apply for his certificate under the bankruptcy, and to save the expense of filing a fresh petition, in the event of his obtaining his certificate.

His HONOUR.—It was the insolvent's duty to have placed himself in a position to avail himself of the benefit of the Act before he presented his petition to the Court. Petition dismissed.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

PROPERTY-TAX AND WINDOWS.—Lord Duncan, the member for the city of Bath, has procured, by order of the House of Commons, a return shewing the total number of houses assessed to the property-tax in the year 1844, in respect of certain streets, squares, and courts in Westminster and Marylebone; also a similar return of the amount of window duty paid by the several houses assessed, in each of the above classes, distinguishing the amount paid for each class, &c. It is hence ascertained that the total number of houses assessed in 1844 amounted in Regent-street to 302—of which 21 were under 150*l.*, 65 under 200*l.*, 115 under 250*l.*, 49 under 300*l.*, 26 under 400*l.*, 8 under 500*l.*, 5 under 1,000*l.*, and 3 under 2,000*l.*; in St. James's-square, 28—of which 4 were under 150*l.*, 1 under 200*l.*, 3 under 750*l.*, 12 under 1,000*l.*, and 8 under 2,000*l.*; in Berkeley-square, 45—of which 1 was under 100*l.*, 3 under 150*l.*, 3 under 200*l.*, 7 under 250*l.*, 6 under 300*l.*, 5 under 400*l.*, 7 under 500*l.*, 11 under 750*l.*, 1 under 1,000*l.*, and 1 under 2,000*l.*; in Oxford-street, 503—of which 160 were under 150*l.*, 117 under 200*l.*, and 2 under 2,000*l.*; in Grosvenor-square, 45—none of which were under 300*l.*; in Piccadilly, 174—of which 8 were between 750*l.* and 1,000*l.*, 6 under 2,000*l.*, and 3 above 2,000*l.*; in Peter-street, Westminster, to 89; in Berwick-street, Soho, to 98; in Chapel-street, Westminster, to 1; in Little Stanhope-street, to 13; in Dufour's-place, St. James's, to 10; in Cross-street, St. James's, to 14; in Broad-street to 49; in Poland-street, to 63; and in Lancashire-court, Westminster, to 14; all the houses in the above nine localities being lowly assessed in comparison with the others. The amount of window duty paid by the several houses was—in Regent-street, 2,060*l.*; in St. James's-square, 669*l.*; in Berkeley-square, 712*l.*; in Oxford-street, 2,310*l.*; in Grosvenor-square, 983*l.*; in Piccadilly, 1,791*l.*; in Peter-street, 114*l.*; in Berwick-street, Soho, 483*l.*; in Chapel-court, Westminster, 3*s.* 6*d.*; in Little Stanhope-street, St. George's, 62*l.* 13*s.*; in Dufour's-place, 78*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*; in Cross-street, 77*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*; in Broad-street, 332*l.*; in Poland-street, 415*l.*; and in Lancashire-court, 22*l.*

FIRE INSURANCES.—From a return obtained by Colonel Sibthorp, M.P. relative to fire insurances, it appears that during the year 1844, the gross total amount of the sums insured by all the fire-offices, in town and country, on farming stock, exempt from duty, was 54,927,572*l.*; namely, 16,375,817*l.* in the quarter ending the 25th of March, 1844; 5,080,772*l.* the quarter ending the 24th of June, 1844; 8,199,208*l.* in the quarter ending the 29th of September, 1844; and 25,271,775*l.* in the quarter ending Christmas-day, 1844.

BARLEY.—An account "of the quantity of barley imported from the 29th of April, 1842, viz. an account specifying the annual amount made up to the 5th of January in each year, and also the quantity in each month, and the rates of duty paid in each month; with the names of the different ports into which the importations have taken place; together with the annual and monthly quantities imported into such ports," has been procured and printed, on the motion of Mr. Wodehouse, M.P. for the county of Norfolk. From a summary of these varied and voluminous accounts, it appears that the total quantities of barley imported from the 5th of May, 1842, to the 5th of January, 1843, amounted to 50,318 quarters, —50,253 quarters of foreign, and 64 quarters of colonial produce; from the 5th of January, 1843, to the 5th of January, 1844, to 179,280 quarters, of which 178,445 quarters were of foreign, and 835 quarters of colonial produce; and in the year ended the 5th day of January, 1845, to 1,022,076 quarters, of which 1,013,846 quarters were of foreign, and 8,230 of colonial produce. Thus the gross total importations since May 1842, have amounted to 1,251,675 quarters, of which 1,242,545 quarters were foreign produce. The total produce of the duty thereon is not given in this return, but it will appear elsewhere, if it has not done so already.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE ESTABLISHMENT.—A somewhat voluminous return of the names and ages of the Commissioners of Customs, the list of superior officers in London, and the number of officers of inferior rank, &c. was printed a short time since by order of the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. R. Wallace, M.P. for Greenock. From a summary of the particulars contained in this Parliamentary paper, it appears that in the year ending on the 5th of January, 1844, the total number of persons employed in the Customs Department establishment of the port of London amounted to 1,881, and the total expenses thereof (including salaries, pay, &c.) to 259,632*l.* comprising a sum of 11,281*l.* additional for extra clerks and extra day-pay officers, whose services are occasional. During the year ending the 5th of January, 1845, the number of persons employed amounted to 1,858, and the expenses of the establishment in the port of London to 265,649*l.* inclusive of 13,841*l.* for extra clerks and extra-day pay officers, whose services are occasional. Thus an increase took place in the expenditure last year amounting to 6,017*l.* There are nine Commissioners of Customs, three of whom are upwards of 70 years of age, and one 62; two only 26 and 30 years of age, one 46, one 58, and one 53 years of age. Six of the Commissioners, Messrs. S. G. Lushington, W. Cust, C. C. Smith, S. Spring Rice (formerly private secretary to the Chancellor of the Exchequer), G. R. Dawson (ex-Secretary to the Admiralty), and F. Goulburn (a near relative of the present Chancellor of the Exchequer), receive salaries of 1,200*l.* per annum each; Mr. Dean receives, besides his regular salary, 800*l.* more for his services as chairman of the board; the Hon. E. Stewart receives 500*l.* more as deputy chairman; and Mr. H. Richmond receives an additional 800*l.* as a compensation for the loss of his fees as Secretary to the Board of Customs. Thus the services, arduous as they are, of these nine gentlemen, entail an annual expense upon the country of no less than 12,900*l.* Their (nominal) hours of attendance to business, daily, are from 10 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The secretary, Mr. C. A. Scovell, is 60 years of age, and receives a salary of 1,200*l.* a year, and 300*l.* more to the present possessor. The solicitor, Mr. J. Walford, is remunerated with the sum of 2,000*l.* a year, in addition to sundry allowances for drawing briefs, &c. Mr. Maclean, the sub-secretary, receives 900*l.* per annum. Sir W. Boothby, the receiver-general, receives 1,500*l.*; Mr. Irving, the inspector-general, 1,000*l.* and an incidental allowance of 180*l.*; Mr. J. Braysher, the collector, 1,350*l.*; Mr. W. Willimott, the controller, 1,000*l.*; and Captain Phipps Hornby, R.N., Controller-General of the Coast Guard, 1,000*l.* per annum. The subordinate officers and their salaries we have not space to enumerate.

PETITIONS TO PARLIAMENT.—There was lately issued the 21st report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Public Petitions, from which it appears that there are now lying on the table of the legislature (amongst others of less importance) 322 petitions for encouragement to schools in connection with the Irish Church Education Society, signed by 44,156 persons; 112 petitions in favour of a stricter observance of the Sabbath-day, signed by 10,317 persons; 46 petitions in favour of the grant to Maynooth College, signed by 15,483 persons only, whilst there are no less than 7,629 petitions against the proposed endowment of that Popish seminary, signed by the enormous number of 982,862 persons; 197 petitions against the contemplated union of the dioceses of Bangor and St. Asaph (the bill to prevent which design has just been thrown out by the House of Lords), signed by 12,125 persons. The object of these petitioners is to pray the hon. house to adopt such measures as will prevent the union of those sees, and at the same time to provide for the immediate appointment of a bishop to the newly-erected see of Manchester. There are also 261 petitions for agricultural relief, signed by 26,429 persons; 170 petitions for the repeal of the tax upon malt, signed by 22,246 persons; 48 petitions for a repeal or alteration of the Insolvent Debtors Act, signed by 14,972 persons; 200 petitions against the Justices' Clerks and Clerks of the Peace Bills, signed by 1,046 persons; 119 petitions against the Parochial Settlement Bill, signed by 748 persons; 5 petitions for an alteration of the Irish Poor Law Act, signed by 362 persons; 722 petitions for diminishing the nuisance of public-houses and gin palaces, signed by 165,147 persons, whose object is to pray the legislature to adopt measures for preventing the increase of houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating beverages, and for diminishing to a very great extent the number already existing, and to pass a law for entirely abolishing the sale of intoxicating liquor on the Lord's-day; and lastly, 93 petitions for ameliorating the condition of schoolmasters in burghs and parishes of Scotland, signed by 1,061 persons.

CURED PROVISIONS.—A parliamentary paper has been printed, giving an account of the quantities of cured provisions of all kinds imported into the United Kingdom from foreign countries and from the colonies, from the 5th of Jan. 1343, to the 5th of Jan. 1845. It appears that in 1843 the importation of salted beef was 60,633 cwt., and in 1844, 106,766 cwt. The salted pork was in 1843, 27,118 cwt.; and in 1844, 30,780 cwt. Hams, 6,919 cwt. in 1843, and 6,732 cwt. in 1844. Of bacon, 448 cwt. were imported in 1843; and only 35 cwt. in 1844. The quantities retained for home consumption were respectively,—of salted beef, in 1844, 5,204 cwt., on which the duty received was 766*l.*; of salted pork, in 1844, 1,311 cwt., duty, 394*l.*; of hams, in 1844, 3,495 cwt., duty, 2,391*l.*; and of bacon, in 1844, 36 cwt., duty, 23*l.* The quantities re-exported from the United Kingdom as merchandize are given in the return.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ROYAL COMMISSION.

THURSDAY, May 8. A royal commission was appointed for the purpose of giving the Royal assent to several bills. The Lords Commissioners (the LORD CHANCELLOR, Lord WHARNCLIFFE, and the Duke of BUCCLEUGH) having taken their seats on the woolsack, and the members of the House of Commons been summoned to the bar of the House, the Royal assent was given to the following bills:—The Sugar Excise Duties Bill, the Customs Duties Bill, the Auction Duties Bill, the Bastardy Bill, the Sheriffs (Wales) Bill, the Colonial Passengers Bill, the Companies Clauses Consolidation Bills (England and Scotland), the Land Clauses Consolidation Bills (England and Scotland), the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill, the Fisher-lane Improvement (Greenwich) Bill, the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction Canal Navigation Company, the Wallasey Lighting (Improvement) Bill, the Kingston-upon-Hull Docks Bill, the Birkenhead Docks Bill, the London Orphans Asylum Bill, and two or three private bills. Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COMMON LAW PROCESS BILL.

WEDNESDAY, May 7. On the motion of the LORD ADVOCATE of SCOTLAND, the Courts of Common Law Process Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on a future day. The Courts of Common Law Process (Ireland) Bill was read a second time and ordered to be committed

BAIL IN ERROR BILL.

THURSDAY, May 8. This bill went through committee.

PRIVY COUNCIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION BILL.

A clause having been introduced, postponing its operation until the 1st of January, 1846, the bill was read a third time and passed.

CHURCH LEASES.

Report of the Estates Committee respecting Leasehold Property vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, confirmed by the Board, at a meeting held 15th April, 1845.

The committee, on the 12th April, 1845, resumed their deliberations upon the general question, "as to the mode of dealing with estates under lease," which was submitted to them by the Board on the 18th July, 1843; the further consideration of which was adjourned at their sitting on the 2nd August following.

The committee find that in several cases the leasehold interest has already been purchased by the commissioners, and that a few reversions have been sold; that several other negotiations are pending of both kinds, and some also for arrangements in the nature of exchange by the lessees, namely, for the sale of their leasehold interest in a part of the property, and for the purchase of the reversion in the remaining part; and further, that some few offers for the purchase of the reversion by the lessee have been declined, for special reasons shewn upon the report of the surveyor.

The Committee also find that the only fixed rules respecting the leasehold estates vested in the commissioners, are those which, on the one hand, preclude the renewal of leases upon fines, and, on the other, protect the lessees from any sale or letting without first giving them an option.

No definite principle has, however, yet been laid down respecting the general mode of dealing with the lessees; and it is still an open question, whether a compliance with the wishes of lessees to become the owners of the fee is to be the general rule, subject to exceptions for especial reasons; or whether, as a general rule, the sale is only to be conceded if there are special reasons in its favour.

It is still also a point not clearly settled, whether the price required for a reversion is, as a general rule, to be regulated by some fixed principle of calculation.

The committee are of opinion that it is highly important that the commissioners should lay down such general rules for their own guidance upon these several points as may be consistent with a free exercise of discretion in special cases; and they accordingly recommend the resolutions which appeared in the LAW TIMES of last Saturday.

JUSTICES' CLERKS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your last number, a Mr. Lazonby, whom I suppose to be a solicitor, seems to regret the alteration made in the 12th sec. of the Justices' Clerks Bill, and wishes you to call the attention of the profession and law societies to the clause as altered. If Mr. Lazonby, and those of the Profession whom he says he has consulted, had been awake, they might have learned that most of the Profession, and particularly the law societies, saw the injustice of the restrictions which were contained in the clause before its alteration and petitioned against it. The Justices' Clerks Society have manfully resisted the clause, and it is partly owing to their useful exertions that the obnoxious part has been struck out.

The following are some of their reasons against the clause:—

It is based upon the unfounded assumption that clerks are disposed to abuse their trust.

No general grievance can be adduced to justify this stigma upon a respectable class of public functionaries.

As the clerk can only advise, and the magistrates can dismiss him at any moment without cause assigned, it conveys an imputation upon the magistrates that they will connive at their clerks' misconduct.

It will prohibit the public from employing as an attorney, in many cases, the nearest and perhaps most efficient legal practitioner.

Or it will deprive the magistrates and the public of the services, in the office of Justices' Clerk, of persons of high standing in the Profession, and best qualified for the situation.

The restriction as to being concerned in proceedings before magistrates would nearly put an end to a professional man's business altogether, there being scarcely any business not liable in some stage to be brought before local magistrates.

It would prohibit any preliminary interference with respect to proceedings for recovery of tithes, church and poor rates, examinations as to settlements, highways, &c. &c. and disqualify for the justices' clerkship clerks to boards of guardians.

It would prevent Justices' Clerks from acting as solicitors for associations for the prosecution of felons.

The restriction as to any prosecution at sessions or assizes is still more objectionable.

Justices' Clerks are best qualified to conduct prosecutions in matters in which they have as clerks conducted the preliminary inquiries, not only from their experience in criminal law and general local knowledge, but from having sifted the evidence, and observed the demeanour of the witnesses.

The Justices' Clerk may be the regular and confidential adviser of the neighbouring nobility, gentry, and farmers, who would be deprived of his services in prosecutions.

He can conduct prosecutions at less cost, from having usually many cases to conduct.

The prohibition would also prevent Justices' Clerks from supporting and defending orders of removal, indictments as to highways, convictions, and other proceedings of their justices, although the licensing and other statutes provide for payment of costs to magistrates in supporting their convictions.

It will prevent the clerk acquiring that practical acquaintance with the rules and practices of the higher criminal courts and of quarter sessions, which the complicated and ever varying state of the law renders necessary to enable him to advise magistrates aright and protect them from actions for technical irregularities.

The 12th clause, as it has been altered in committee, now prevents the clerk from being concerned in defences, viz. in any matter brought before the justices whose clerk he is, or in defending any person committed for trial by the justices whose clerk he is, or for any appellant from the judgment of any of the justices in the matter of such appeal, or in assisting in any proceeding for quashing or avoiding any order or judgment of any of the said justices. To these prohibitions there cannot be a reasonable objection. Yours, &c.

May 6, 1845. Q.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your reference to the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 70, in a note to the case of Reg. v. Inhabitants of Orton, seems to imply that justices may under that section summon witnesses on inquiries as to the settlement and removal of paupers. Such is, however, not the case, as that clause only applies to that particular statute and certain others referred to therein, and not to proceedings under the laws relating to the settlement and removal of the poor.—I am, Sir, yours,

CHAS. AUG. SMITH.

Greenwich, May 3, 1845.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

WE beg to draw the attention of the Profession to the highly important case of Gedye v. Elgie, decided by Mr. Justice COLERIDGE in the Bail Court on Thursday last, in which it was determined, after a very full and able argument, that the bills of costs of Attorneys' agents are not subject to taxation under the late Attorneys and Solicitors Act (the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73).

Another rule of considerable practical importance to a very large branch of the Profession is now pending in the Queen's Bench, namely, to the Attorneys admitted to practise in the county palatine of Lancaster, and upon whose articles of clerkship the duty of 60*l.* only has been paid, namely, whether upon their admission to practise in the courts at Westminster under the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 4, they are liable to pay the additional duty of 60*l.* only or the full duty of 120*l.* in addition to the 60*l.* originally paid. The report of the rule nisi will be found amongst the reports of the Bail Court of Saturday, the 3rd inst.

The addition of a supplement to this number enables us to bring up a long arrear of legal intelligence, and also to present an unprecedented mass of reports. Some idea of their quantity may be formed from this,—that the reports contained in this single number of the Law Times would occupy at least an entire 12s. part of the Queen's Bench Reports.

FOREIGN-OFFICE, May 3.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Abraham Carlton Cumberbatch, esq. now British Vice-Consul at Constantinople, to be her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople.

The Queen has also been pleased to appoint Charles Duncan Wake, esq. now British Vice-Consul at Copenhagen, to be her Majesty's Consul at Charleston.

WHITEHALL, May 3.—The Queen has been pleased to constitute and appoint the most Hon. John Marquis of Bute, K.T. to be her Majesty's High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Tucker, the younger, of Plymouth, in the county of Devon, gent.; Thomas Mitchell Charlesworth, gent. of Horbury, near Wakefield, in the county of York; John Dendy Sadler, of Dorking, in the county of Surrey, gent.; and Simon Peter, of Liskeard, in the county of Cornwall, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

CROWN OFFICE, May 6.—MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT—Borough of Woodstock.—John Henry Loftus, esq. commonly called Viscount Loftus, in the room of John Winston Spencer Churchill, commonly called Marquis of Blandford, who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds.

CROWN OFFICE, May 8. — MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.—County of Peebles—William Forbes Mackenzie, esq. of Portmore, one of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

May 9.—County of Denbigh — Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, of Wynnstay, in the county of Denbigh, bart.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, May 3.—The remainder of the calls to the bar during Easter Term by this hon. society were published in the dining-hall this evening, and they are as follows:—Mr. Roger Horman Fisher, Mr. Edward Bristowe Phillips Wynne, Mr. John Dakin Gaskell, Mr. John Robert Watts Williams, Mr. John Barnett Kington, Mr. Edward Bury, Mr. Ferdinand Francis Ivers, Mr. James Peard Ley, Mr. George Borman Skipworth, and Mr. John Epworth Vance.

LINCOLN'S-INN, May 6.—The undermentioned gentlemen were called to the degree of barrister-at-law this evening by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's-inn:—Mr. Nathaniel Brindley Acworth, of the Albany; Mr. Henry Charles Eliott, of Upper Southwick-street; Mr. Thomas Ivory, of Balliol College, Oxford; Mr. Henry Fenwick, of St. John's College, Cambridge; Mr. Freeman Oliver Haynes, of Caius College, Cambridge; Mr. Effingham John Lawrence, of Trinity College, Cambridge; Mr. Arthur Hobhouse, of Balliol College, Oxford; and Mr. William Dyke Poore, of Exeter College, Oxford.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

LEGAL RUMOURS.—It has been mentioned in Westminster-hall by some of its learned members, that a matter of considerable interest in respect of admissions to the Inns of Court and keeping terms for the bar, is about to engage the attention of the heads of these places, and that important changes will most likely be effected by the benchers in respect of persons applying to be admitted, as also of assimilating the practice of keeping terms in all of them. At the present time the bye-laws of these places materially differ in the terms of regulations to be complied with to constitute qualification for admission, and for being called to the Bar; as, for instance, fees on entry and admission, University degrees, examination, terms to be kept, &c. It is stated that a desire exists amongst several of the learned benchers of the Hon. Societies of Lincoln's-inn, the Inner and Middle Temple, and Gray's-inn, for carrying into effect a consolidation of their present rules and regulations on the subject.—Times.

COLCHESTER.—ATTORNEYS' GOWNS.—The new Town Hall, Colchester, was opened on Thursday, 1st May, with much ceremony and eclât, and on the following Monday the first petty session was holden in the magistrates' room there, which room is most commodiously fitted up. It will be seen on reference to the LAW TIMES of the 9th November last, that fourteen of the attorneys practising in that borough declared in favour of wearing their official gowns when in the public discharge of their professional duties, and, accordingly, several of the attorneys having business there attended at such petty session in their forensic costume. We understand this practice is likely to be followed up at Colchester, and become universal.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.—We understand that 78 members of this circuit have signed a memorial, praying that the circuit in its present state may be divided into two parts, the proposal to attach York to the Midland Circuit being decidedly objectionable in every respect. If the circuit is divided in the manner proposed, it will probably require two new judges, and by their assistance a new court could be formed at Westminster subsidiary to the Court of Queen's Bench.—Times.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"R. B." thus writes on a point in "CORONERS' PRACTICE"—

I beg to refer you to the stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 64 (the Act for consolidating and amending the laws relating to gaols in England and Wales), sec. 11 of which enacts "that in case the coroner shall hold an inquest on the body of any prisoner who shall have died within the prison, none of the prisoners confined therein shall be a juror." Both Mr. Jervis and Mr. Sewell, in their works on the Law of Coroners, appear to have overlooked this statute, as it is laid down in both treatises "that when the inquest is taken upon a prisoner dying in gaol, there should be a party jury, composed of six of the prisoners and six of the next vill or parish." And as both authorities contain a form of warrant to the gaoler to summon prisoners to serve as jurors on the inquest, it will be seen there is great danger of the practitioner being misled, each work having been published since the passing of the statute referred to.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1845.

THE BAR AND THE PRESS.

It is pleasant to see the indignant language in which two of the daily papers, the Herald and the Advertiser, have protested against the conduct pursued by the Times towards Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, of which full particulars were given in our last. Such protests will help to relieve the press from a portion of the suspicion that proceeding had thrown over its honesty—to restore something of the public confidence in its veracity, which has been shaken by the discovery that the journal which boasts itself the leader of opinion could stoop to the infinite meanness of garbling its reports suppressing the truth, and misrepresenting facts, for the paltry purpose of harming, as it supposes, a gentleman against whom, for some cause unknown, its conductors harbour spite.

If the Times could thus deceive its readers, out of revenge against Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, it would as readily do so in any other case in which its managers please to take offence; and as a newspaper is continually exposed to quarrel with individuals, it is impossible to calculate the extent to which the Times must be in the habit of misleading and misreporting. Doubtless it seeks to punish the many others against whom it has enmity after the same fashion as it wreaks its vengeance on Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, and all confidence in its reports must be destroyed, now that its practice is proclaimed and proved. We remember no event connected with the press which has brought upon it so great reproach, and so tended to lower its position in public esteem. The earnest repudiation of the practices of the Times by its contemporaries will, however, serve to satisfy the country that the moral taint does not prevail universally; that as yet it is limited to one journal; and that, because no trust can be placed in the reports of the Times, it does not follow that its contemporaries are equally untrustworthy.

The golden rule of the newspaper should be, unswerving adherence to truth, without reference to persons. In its commentaries let it be as severe, as one-sided, as it pleases; but in its reports of facts, it should know neither party nor individual. When it records a public meeting, it should state with equal fairness what is said by the speakers on all sides: not to do so is to publish a deliberate deception. When it reports the proceedings of courts of justice, to give the names of some of the counsel engaged, and to suppress others, is not merely a suppressio veri, but actual falsehood, for the arguments used by A, B, and C are thus attributed to B and C only.

But out of this proceeding of the Times arises a professional question which more immediately concerns our readers. It is this: with knowledge of its practices, can any barrister who regards his character continue his connection with it as a reporter in the law courts, whether at Westminster or on circuit?

We are of opinion that he cannot. Waiving for the present the still larger question that has been raised, as to the propriety of barristers reporting for the mere newspapers, and which must hereafter be the subject of anxious discussion, we unhesitatingly assert that they cannot, consistently with professional honour, continue to report for a journal which deliberately falsifies their reports, and subjects them to the charge of being the authors of insult and wrong towards their professional brethren. No man can be secure of his position among his fellows for a single day who is thus liable to have his honour questioned by the acts of persons over whom he has no control, and to be made responsible for falsehoods and personalities contrived for him by others.

Nor are we quite sure that even the proclamation of the fact that the falsification complained of was not that of the reporter, but of the office, will altogether discharge the former from responsibility. By continuing to report, after his reports have been subjected to such foul play, sanctions the proceeding. Honour demands that a gentleman into whose mouth a falsehood has been placed should instantly repudiate the wrong, indignantly denounce the wrongdoer, and by publicly withdrawing from any further connection with him, prove to the world that he had no part in the transaction. Less than this will not, we fear, altogether relieve the Reporters of the Times from the very serious charge that at present attaches to their Reports.

EDUCATION OF ATTORNEYS.

The propositions for the better education of attorneys submitted to Lord Denman by the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, have produced a flood of correspondence, some in reprobation, others in approval, for a tithe of which a place could not be found at any season, but especially at this time, when it is difficult to compress into the columns of the Law Times even the matters of most urgent importance. But it serves to shew how deep an interest is taken by the Profession in the subject thus mooted, and therefore we continue the comments upon it commenced a short time since.

The objectors, for the most part, adopt the same line of argument. Of what use, they ask, is a knowledge of the classics to an attorney, as such? All that is required of him is a knowledge of law, and to this Latin and Greek will not help him.

Now we wish not to disguise the object of the proposition. It is propounded as a means to raise the respectability of the Profession—as the most practical test that the attorney holds that position, in society has received such a training, and is subjected to those restraints, for which the fact of a liberal education, if not always a guarantee, at least affords a strong presumption. It is no answer to say, that some men of good breeding have proved great rascals, and that some uneducated men have proved not only excellent lawyers, but characters of the loftiest integrity and the lights and ornaments of their Profession. We must calculate by a great number of instances, not by a few exceptions. What, in fact, is the usual course of affairs? We appeal to the experience of our readers if, as a general rule, the most liberally educated gentleman be not the most respectable practitioner, and if the great majority of the men who disgrace and dishonour the Profession, and become the pests instead of the benefactors of society, do not consist of uneducated persons, who have made their way into it by indirect means? Sure we are that such is the fact, however unpleasing may be its admission.

We have already shewn why it is of greater importance to society that the attorney should be a gentleman than that he should be a lawyer. We do not pretend to assert that both are not needful qualifications; but if ever there should be a necessity for a choice, we should not hesitate to prefer to commit our affairs to the gentleman by education rather than to a man having more law, but less breeding. Thus should we reason: "We are about to intrust our fortunes to the good faith of a stranger. Whom shall we choose? Here are Smith and Jones. Smith is a gentleman; he has been well educated; holds a position in society; has a character to lose; is bound to uprightness by ties of family, and has breathed from his childhood the atmosphere of honour. But Jones, they say, is a keener lawyer, is more up to points, is not so scrupulous in the conduct of his cases, and will not hesitate to take an advantage for his client. But he can give us no guarantee that he will not take advantage of the power we must confide to him; he has no place in society the loss of which he will dread; in the circle which constitutes his public opinion, the fine laws of a scrupulous honour are not recognized; there is no one link to bind him in resistance to the huge temptation to which we must expose him; we want to retain in our attorney his character still more than his law. The latter, if needful, he can always procure from counsel, but for the former we are dependant upon himself alone; Smith must be our man."

Such are or ought to be the reflections of every client about to employ an attorney; and upon the same principle that has led all civilized people to establish, for public security, tests of competency in professional men, because individuals are not able to judge for themselves, do we contend with the Legal Association that a test should be established for the character as well as the legal knowledge of attorneys, because the public have to employ their characters even more than their law. But we must pause for the present.

FORMS FOR OFFICES.

An improvement in the Forms of Conditions of Sale has been suggested, which will immediately be adopted.

At present, notes in the margin direct the matters to be inserted in the blanks, or erased, according to the exigencies of the various circumstances of each sale. These are essential to the correct use of the forms, but they are unsightly.

A subscriber has proposed this excellent alteration: that only one form in each dozen should have these notes; that the rest should be printed without them. The form with the notes might then be used as a sort of draft, from which the others may be filled up. Thus the object of a guide would be accomplished, without the inconvenience of its appearance upon every sheet.

A plan so obviously convenient will of course be at once adopted.

The following lithographed forms have been added to the list, and may now be had in any quantity.

CONVEYANCING.

COVENANTS FOR TITLE.

No. 61. Freehold, good right to convey, 1s. 6d. per doz.
No. 62. Do. for quiet enjoyment, 1s. 6d. per doz.
No. 63. Do. free from incumbrances, 1s. 6d. per doz.
No. 64. Do. for further assurance, 2 sheets, 3s. per doz.
No. 65. Leasehold, that lease is good, 1s. 6d. per doz.
No. 66. Do. that assignee has good right to assign, 1s. 6d. per doz.
No. 67. Do. for quiet enjoyment, 1s. 6d. per doz.
No. 68. Do. free from incumbrances, 1s. 6d. per doz.
No. 69. Do. for further assurance, 2 sheets, 3s. per doz.

These common covenants have been settled by counsel.

Inasmuch as forms of this kind are used for the most part in conveyances of small amount, the larger ones being usually sent to counsel, these covenants have been drawn in the fewest words, consistent with security, experience having taught us the great value in an attorney's office of conveyancing forms which will bring the deed within a single skin. By help of these useful forms the solicitor will be enabled to prepare small conveyances with ease and rapidity. Other conveyancing forms are in preparation, but as experience is the best teacher, we shall be obliged for hints. Would the trustee clauses and the common covenants for lease of houses be useful?

It may be as well to repeat that, to encourage the general use of the Society's forms, the publisher will undertake to transmit them, carriage free, wherever 2*l.* (not 1*l.* as misprinted last week) worth are ordered.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The 11th number of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases is issued, and the 12th, completing Part III. is in the press.

No. 5 of Cox's Criminal Law Cases will be published on Wednesday, and No. 7 of Practice Cases will follow. The Equity and Common Law Cases will be distinctly paged, for convenience of reference, but comprised in the same volume.

In a short time it is intended to make another endeavour to enlist the orders of a sufficient number of the members to justify the publication of two or three of the proposed text-books on the Practice of the Law.

It is also purposed to make the series of useful editions of Important Statutes, hitherto published by the Law Times, a portion of the works of the society, whose members will, consequently, be entitled to them at the society's prices. The advantage will be extended to the three volumes that have already appeared, namely, Paterson's Joint Stock Companies Acts, Homes's Insolvent Debtors Acts, and Cox's Registration Acts, all of which any member may now have at the reduced prices.

Should they pass, the following will be added: the Settlement Bill, the Medical Bill, the Justices' Clerks, &c. Bills.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

SALES BY AUCTION.

From all parts of the country we learn that advantage is being taken of the repeal of the auction duties to submit estates to public competition, instead of seeking, as heretofore, to dispose of them by private contract. Already the benefits are perceptible. Sales are now bonâ fide, and the prices realized are considerably greater. Many striking instances of this have come to our knowledge. Last week an estate of 1,800 acres in Shropshire was sold under the hammer by Messrs. Winstanley at a bidding of 81,500*l.* From the list subjoined it will be seen that Mr. W. W. Simpson has sold in like manner many extensive properties, the prices named being no longer colourable, as they used to be, but real. From the provinces we learn that the same good results are proceeding from the abolition of the duties, and there can be little doubt that in six months the sale by auction will be universally adopted in preference to that by private contracts. The solicitor who consults his client's interest certainly cannot hesitate which to choose. A year's value is the estimated increase of price in auctions by the repeal of the duty.

Mr. John Round's (M.P.) seat, Danbury-place, Essex, has been purchased, it is said, for the residence of the Bishop of Rochester. The purchase-money is stated to be 26,000*l.*; the timber, furniture, and fixtures to be taken at a valuation.

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c., exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words . . . . . 5s.
For every succeeding 30 words . 1s.

Public Sales.

[In future the results of such sales only as are advertised in the Law Times will be published in this list, and reference will be given to the advertisements, it being found that, without the particulars, the results of sales are of no practical value. As sale by auction will in future be generally resorted to, auctioneers in town and country advertising in the Law Times are requested regularly to forward the results of the sales so advertised.]

A DEFENCE of the LANDLORDS of IRELAND, with Remarks on the Relation between Landlord and Tenant, and a Postscript, containing an Extract from a Speech of the Right Hon. the Earl of Devon, referring to the Condition of Ireland.

By W. W. SIMPSON,

Member of the Royal Dublin Society.

JOHN OLLIVIER, 59, Pall-mall; MACHEN and Co. Westmoreland-street, Dublin; and to be had of all Booksellers.

Extract from the Times of the 9th November, 1844:—"Mr. W. W. Simpson, the well-known and deservedly respected auctioneer and land valuator, has recently published a pamphlet entitled 'A Defence of the Landlords of Ireland, with Remarks on the Relation between Landlord and Tenant.' The Dublin Evening Packet, in reviewing this work, gives the following character of its author—'Mr. Simpson, we scarcely need remind our readers, is an Englishman of vast experience in matters relating to the improvement and value of land in his own country. He is, moreover, a gentleman of most comprehensive views, and possesses an understanding naturally strong, and a stock of practical knowledge and sterling sense which falls to the lot of very few persons in his own or any other rank of life. With the social condition of Ireland he has made it his business, almost as a matter of necessity, to make himself thoroughly acquainted. He feels for her wants, and has contributed as much perhaps as any man in his time to improve her resources, by encouraging the investment of British capital in every department of Irish industry. Such a witness as this we therefore hold to be beyond the reach of suspicion, on the score either of interest or partiality. His testimony must be regarded as invaluable, as it is unquestionably unimpeachable.'"

MALDON, ESSEX.—Valuable Freehold Property.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has received instructions from the Trustees under the Will of the late Henry Coape, esq. to offer for SALE by AUCTION, in lots, at the Mart, London, in the ensuing month, a highly valuable FREEHOLD PROPERTY, consisting of several inclosures of exceedingly fertile pasture and arable land, called Great and Little Portlands, Great and Little Winterslade, Friars, and Tainter Fields, containing in the whole 34 acres, the larger portion of which immediately joins the flourishing, agreeably situate, and ancient borough town and port of Maldon, 10 miles from the county town of Chelmsford and the Eastern Counties Railway, added to which a branch line is contemplated (and no doubt will be very shortly carried out) to Maldon, the effect of which must be greatly to enhance the value of property in Maldon and Dengie Hundred, of which Maldon may truly be designated the capital town. The lands are at present let to Mr Wm. Dawson, Mr. Wm. Hockford, and Mr. Alfred May, highly respectable and opulent tenants, as accommodation fields, at rents amounting to 129*l*. per annum (exclusive of three acres which are in hand), and from their locality they must always command remunerative accommodation rents of great stability. This property is not only valuable viewed as accommodation surface, but a large portion of it possesses frontages and building sites of a most eligible description, and will be sold in such divisions as may be considered desirable for purchasers. A more detailed description will be given in future advertisements, and particulars in due time may be had of William Lawrence, esq. solicitor, Maldon; Messrs. Symes, Teesdale, and Weston, solicitors, 31, Fenchurch-street; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

ESSEX, near MALDON.—Valuable and most desirable Freehold and part Copyhold Estate, consisting of about 252 Acres of superior Arable and Pasture Land, &c.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has been directed by the trustees under the will of the late Henry Coape, esq. to OFFER by AUCTION, at the Mart, London, in the ensuing month, that well-tenanted, deep-stapled, and highly-cultivated ESTATE, exonerated from land-tax, designated Purleigh Barns and Tobyes Farm. It comprises an excellent Farm-house and suitable agricultural buildings, all in a superior state of repair, together with 252 Acres of Land, in a ring fence, and bounded by the high road from Maldon, through Dengie Hundred. It is in the occupation of Mr. Thomas Davy, under an agreement for a lease for 21 years from Michaelmas 1844, at a rent of 300*l*. per annum. The Maldon coach passes the farm daily to the port of Burnham, in Dengie Hundred. The estate possesses great advantages as to roads and markets, and is conveniently situate as to water-carriage. Detailed descriptions will be given in future advertisements, and in due time particulars may be obtained on application to William Lawrence, esq. solicitor, Maldon; Messrs. Symes, Teesdale, and Weston, solicitors, 31, Fenchurch-street; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

ESSEX, near MALDON. — An important and valuable Estate, containing 436 acres of deep-surfaced fertile Arable and superior Grazing Land.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has the pleasure to announce that he has received instructions from the trustees under the will of the late Henry Coape, esq. to offer for SALE by AUCTION, at the Mart, London, in the month of May, that valuable FREEHOLD ESTATE, exonerated from land-tax, and called Bridge Marsh Farm, situate in the parishes of Latchingdon and Althorne. It comprises a convenient bailiff's house, with appropriate agricultural buildings, and 436 acres of highly-productive arable and grasing land. On this estate the late Mr. Coape several years since bored to a vast depth, and after a great outlay he succeeded in obtaining in two instances a constant supply of fine fresh water, which rises on the surface, and has never failed to give that abundant quantity which is so essential to the stock, and without which they cannot thrive. This farm is in the occupation of Mr. James Purkis, a highly respectable tenant, under an agreement for a lease for 14 years from Michaelmas 1844, at a rent of 315*l*. per annum. More descriptive advertisements will shortly appear, and particulars may in due time be obtained of Wm. Lawrence, esq. solicitor, Maldon; of Messrs. Symes, Teesdale, and Weston, solicitors, 31, Fenchurch-street; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

ESSEX, seven miles from Maldon; and about the same distance from Chelmsford.—A very desirable Farm, freehold, and exonerated from land-tax, containing 172 acres of superior land.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON is instructed by the trustees under the will of the late Henry Coape, esq. to OFFER by public AUCTION, at the Mart, London, in the ensuing month, an exceedingly desirable FREEHOLD FARM (a small part only being copyhold), exonerated from land-tax, called Humes and West Wicks, in the parish of North Fambridge. It includes a convenient farm-house, with adequate agricultural buildings, and 172 acres of very productive arable and pasture land, lying in a ring fence, and is in the occupation of Mr. Isaac Foster, a first-class tenant, and is therefore in a high state of cultivation. It is let on lease for an unexpired term of two years from Michaelmas, 1844, at a rent of 150*l*. per annum. The farm is contiguous to a wharf, which affords every facility for the shipment of corn and landing manure. A more detailed description will appear in future advertisements, and particulars in due time may be obtained of Wm. Lawrence, esq. solicitor, Maldon; Messrs. Symes, Teesdale, and Weston, solicitors, 31, Fenchurch-street; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

SUFFOLK.—Freehold Estate, between Beccles and Lowestoft, consisting of a capital Family Residence, excellent Farm-houses and Agricultural buildings, and about 1,000 acres of rich Arable, Pasture, and productive Wood and Plantation Land, lying within a ring fence, abundantly stocked with game.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has received instructions from the executors of the late — Cooper, esq. to offer for SALE by AUCTION, at the Mart, in the month of June next, the following valuable PROPERTY; comprising the North Cove Hall Estate, delightfully situate in the parishes of North Cove, Mutford, and Worlingham, on the high road from Beccles to Lowestoft, comprising an excellent residence, standing in an extensive lawn pleasantly [illegible]ed with pleasure-grounds and plantations, containing complete domestic offices and ample accommodations for a family of the highest respectability, with coach-house, stabling, garden, and about 1,000 acres of remarkably powerful and productive arable, pasture, and marsh land, including also about 50 acres of wood and cars, forming excellent preserves for the game, which abounds on the estate in great variety. The navigable river Waveney, from Beccles to the sea, bounds the estate for nearly a mile, and affords excellent fishing. The estate, with the exception of the mansion, &c. which is in hand, is divided into farms of convenient sizes, with excellent farm-houses, and let to a most respectable and improving tenantry. The above property is equally eligible either for occupation or investment, the neighbourhood being of first-rate character, and the lands of that superior quality which in any times will command superior tenants. The parochial rates are very l[illegible]. It is distant three miles from Beccles, one from Lowestoft, and twenty from Norwich, which is within about half an hour's ride from Yarmouth by the railway. More descriptive advertisements will shortly appear, and particulars in due time may be obtained on application to Messrs. Margitson and Hurteup, solicitors, Bungay; Messrs. Stevens, Wilkinson, and Satchell, solicitors, 6, Queen-street, Cheapside; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury, London.

IRELAND.—In the counties of Galway and Mayo.—Valuable Fee-simple Estates, comprising 2,170 statute acres, in the occupation of a respectable tenantry, at a ve[illegible]y l[illegible] rental.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has received directions to SELL by AUCTION, at the Commercial-buildings, Dublin, in lots, the following exceedingly desirable FEE-SIMPLE ESTATES:—The Lands of Gerbally Blaney, eligibly situate midway between the excellent market-towns of Galway and Tuam, about eight miles distant from each town, containing 679 statute acres of productive arable and pasture land, including a considerable tract of turlough or bottom, yielding excellent herbage for black cattle and sheep. There are only seven tenants on the estate, who hold chiefly on leases. The Lands of Cahernahoon, situate near the last, but a mile nearer to the town of Galway, comprising 175 statute acres of equally productive land, let on leases to good tenants. The Lands of Barneville, advantageously situate within a mile of Kilconnell, only five from the great town of Ballinasloe (where the largest cattle fair in the kingdom is held), and twenty-six from Galway. They consist of 345 statute acres of excellent tillage and grazing land, chiefly in the occupation of one tenant, who has a lease, and farms the land remarkably well. Also the Lands of Crimlin Boulaboy and Course-park, situate four miles from Claremorris, three from Ballidangan, and six from Dunmore, comprising 970 statute acres of excellent arable and pasture land, including about 100 acres of bog, in the occupation of good tenants, who hold chiefly on leases. The soil of the above estates is of a kindly description, being on limestone substratum, and produces excellent corn and green crops. The lands are surrounded by good roads and markets, and occupied by an unexceptionable tenantry, who pay their rents with great punctuality.

The estates may be viewed, and particulars, with plans annexed, may shortly be had of Thomas Bermingham, esq. Caramana, near Kilconnell; of Frederick Sutton, esq. solicitor, 19, Kildare-street, Dublin; at the place of sale; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, Bucklersbury.

BRIXTON. Stafford-terrace, Loughborough-road.—Neat Cottage Residence, with garden, producing a rental of 34*l*. per annum; land-tax redeemed.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at the Mart, in the present month, a substantial brick-built COTTAGE RESIDENCE, with a garden, pleasantly situate, No. 5, Stafford-terrace, Loughborough-road, Brixton, within three miles of the city, and containing two parlours, two bed-rooms, kitchen, store closet, &c. It is let to John Johnson Bartlett, a most respectable tenant, for a term of three years, from Lady-day 1845, at a rent of 34*l*. per annum; held under an agreement for a term of 80 years from Christmas 1842, at a ground-rent of 7*l*. per annum. The property may be viewed, and particulars may shortly be obtained on application to Messrs. Barker, Rose, and Norton, solicitors, 50, Mark-lane; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

NORFOLK.—Dunham Lodge, together with about 300 Acres of superior Arable, Pasture, and Wood Land, and the manor of Little Dunham, extending over 1,800 acres.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has received directions from Sir Chas. M. Clarke, bart. to offer for SALE by AUCTION, at the Mart, in the ensuing month, a very valuable FREEHOLD ESTATE, exonerated from land-tax, situate at Little Dunham, five miles from Swaffham, and eight from East Dereham, in the county of Norfolk, within two hours' drive of the Brandon Station on the Eastern Counties Railway. It comprehends a capital mansion, called Dunham Lodge, containing accommodation for a family of the highest respectability, seated in the centre of a small park, beautifully studded with timber, and all the requisite agricultural buildings, together with about 300 acres of very superior land, in the highest state of cultivation, lying in a ring fence, 180 acres of which are arable, 70 pasture, and the remainder wood, abounding with game. Also the Manor of Little Dunham, extending over 1,800 acres, with the fines and quit-rents thereto belonging. Par[illegible] with plans annexed, in due time, may be obtained of Messrs. Goodwin, Partridge, and Williams, solicitors, Lynn; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.—East Bridgford.—Desirable Freehold Estate, comprising 67 acres of land, including an excellent mansion.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has received directions from James M'Dowell, esq. to offer for SALE by AUCTION, at the Mart, in the ensuing month, a desirable FREEHOLD and TITHE-FREE ESTATE, situate at East Bridgford, 10 miles from the towns of Nottingham and Newark, commanding most extensive and splendid views of the vale of Trent. It comprises an excellent family residence, containing dining and drawing rooms, study, kitchens, and domestic offices, several convenient bed-rooms, with dressing-rooms, nursery, and servants' rooms; pleasure grounds tastefully laid out with delightful walks, extending two miles through the plantations and cliff overhanging the Trent, summer and boat houses, large walled-in and well-stocked garden, cottage, stabling, barn, and other requisite farm-buildings, together with 67 acres of superior meadow, pasture, arable, and wood land, lying within a ring fence, and extending from the road in Bridgford town to the Trent. The property may be viewed, and particulars are in preparation, which may be had in due time of John Hassall, esq. Shelford-lodge; Messrs. Percy, Smith, and Percy, solicitors, Nottingham; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

IRELAND.—County of Antrim.—One of the most improving and extensive Fee-simple Estates in the United Kingdom, containing 50,000 acres, the greater part situate in the manufacturing district of the county.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has received instructions from the Right Hon. the Earl of Mountcashell to submit to public COMPETITION, at Belfast, several extensive and exceedingly valuable FEE-SIMPLE ESTATES, containing in the whole a surface of 50,000 acres, a large portion of which consists of productive meadow, pasture, and arable land, and the remainder fuel and reclaimable bog, mountain, &c. The greater part is situate in the manufacturing district of the county of Antrim, and in the occupation of an opulent, respectable, and chiefly Protestant tenantry, many of whom hold under old leases at head-rents, on the falling in of which a very large increase of rental will accrue. The rents at present amount to between 11,000*l*. and 12,000*l*. per annum, exclusive of the Castle and demesne, which is in hand. Descriptive particulars will, after a survey has been made by Mr. Simpson, be published, and may then be obtained of Messrs. Reeves and Sons, solicitors, Merrion-square, Dublin; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

In the Loughborough-road, Brixton, and Denmark-street, Camberwell.—Two Plots of Building Ground, adapted for the erection of six genteel residences, exonerated from land-tax.

MR. W. W. SIMPSON has received directions from the Assignee of Mr. Elijah Brentnall, bankrupt, to SELL by AUCTION, at the Mart, in the present month, a valuable PLOT of BUILDING GROUND, situate nearly opposite the intended new church, in the Barrington-road, Loughborough-road, Brixton, containing a frontage of about 200 feet on the east side, by a depth of 200 feet; also a Plot of Building Ground, situate fronting a new road in Denmark-street, Camberwell, possessing a frontage of 31 feet by a depth of 119 feet. The property is in the occupation of Mr. Elijah Brentnall, held under an agreement for the respective terms of 80 years from Christmas, 1842, at a ground-rent of 15*l*. 8s. per annum, and 67 years from Lady-day, 1842, at a ground-rent of 1*l*. 7s. 6d. per annum. The situation is very pleasant, and is adapted for the erection six genteel residences. The property may be viewed, and particulars may shortly be obtained, at the Mart, and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

STOCKWELL.—Two genteel Cottages, 24 and 25, Park-crescent, let at rents amounting to 64*l*. per annum, exonerated from land-tax.

MR. [illegible] L by AUCTION, at the Mart, in the present month, in two lots—Lot 1. A desirable COTTAGE RESIDENCE, containing two parlours, two kitchens, and four bed-rooms, with a large garden in the rear, pleasantly situate, 24, Park-crescent, Stockwell, within three miles of the city, and let to Mr. Hopper, yearly tenant, at 32*l*. per annum. This house is held under an agreement direct from the freeholder for a term of 83 years from Lady-day 1843, at a ground-rent of 5*l*. 5s. per annum. Lot 2. A desirable Cottage Residence, situate 25, adjoining the last, and of a similar description, in the occupation of Mr. Key, for three years, from Michaelmas 1844, at a rent of 32*l*. per annum, held on the same terms as 24. The property may be viewed by leave of the tenants, and particulars may be shortly obtained on application to Messrs. Collier, Hedges, and Steele, solicitors, Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn; at the Mart; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Bills in Progress.

MUSEUMS OF ART.

Intituled, "A Bill to enable Town Councils to establish Museums of Art in Corporate Towns." (Brought in by Mr. Ewart, Mr. Brotherton, and Mr. Wise.)

1. That it shall be lawful for the council of any municipal borough to purchase lands, and to erect thereon buildings suitable for museums of art, and to maintain and keep the same in good repair; and to accept any gifts, grants, or devises of lands, tenements or hereditaments (any statute of mortmain to the contrary notwithstanding), for the purposes of establishing, improving, or maintaining such museums of art; and that the costs and charges of such lands and buildings, and the keeping of the same in good repair, shall be chargeable upon, and paid for out of, the borough fund of such municipal boroughs: provided always, that for the purposes of this Act no rate greater than a rate of one halfpenny in the pound of the annual value of the rateable property assessed to the borough rate shall be levied in any one year.

2. For the purchase of such lands, and for defraying the costs of such buildings as may be erected thereon, or keeping them in repair, it shall be lawful for the council of any such municipal borough as aforesaid, to borrow at interest the amount of money which may be required for the same, on the security of the said rate to be levied as aforesaid.

3. In the event of the said moneys so borrowed as aforesaid being repaid, and of funds being again required for carrying out the purposes of this Act, the said council for the time being may again borrow such sum or sums of money as may be so required, and again charge the said rate with the repayment thereof, in manner as aforesaid.

4. Where municipal boroughs shall be adjacent to each other, the councils of such municipal boroughs may unite for the purposes of this Act, and contribute in proportion to their respective assessments, or on such terms and conditions as may be mutually agreed upon by the said councils.

5. The lands and buildings so purchased or erected as aforesaid, and also all specimens of art or science, and articles of every description which may be purchased for or presented to such museums, and accepted by such councils as aforesaid, shall be vested in, and held upon trust for ever, by the corporations of the said municipal boroughs in which such museums shall be situated, and shall be kept in fit and proper order for the benefit of the public.

6. The council, or united councils, of any such municipal borough or boroughs, may, from time to time, fix such rates of payment for admission to the said museums, as they may think necessary for meeting the cost of their support; provided that such rates of payment shall not exceed the sum of one penny for each person admitted; and that they may also make such regulations for the preservation of the contents of such museums, and for the maintenance of order and decorum within them, as may to themselves seem expedient.

ROMAN CATHOLICS' RELIEF.

Intituled, "A Bill for the further repeal of Enactments imposing Pains and Penalties upon her Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects on account of their Religion." (Brought in by Mr. Watson and Lord John Manners.)

Recites the 7 and 8 Vict. c. 102, and that, notwithstanding the provisions of the said Act, her Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects do still continue to be liable, for or on account of their religious belief or profession, to sundry punishments, pains, penalties, and disabilities, ordained and enacted by certain Acts passed by the Parliament of England, the Parliament of Great Britain, and the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland respectively, and to which punishments, pains, penalties, and disabilities none other of her Majesty's subjects are liable:

And that it is expedient that all such punishments, pains, and penalties as aforesaid shall be for ever repealed and taken away:

And that it is likewise expedient that all such and so many of the aforesaid disabilities shall be in like manner repealed and taken away, as do not in anywise relate to the holding of offices, judicial, civil, collegiate or ecclesiastical, or to the presenting to ecclesiastical benefices, or as do not in any other manner tend to the better securing and strengthening the present church establishment, and the present civil government, and the settlement of property within this realm; and proposes to enact:

Sect. 1. That from and after the passing of this Act, the several Acts hereinafter mentioned, or so much and such parts of any of them as are hereinafter specified, shall be repealed; (that is to say,) so much of 1 Eliz. c. 1, as relates to the by writing, printing, teaching, preaching, express words, deed or act, advisedly maliciously and directly affirming, holding, standing with, setting forth, maintaining or defending the authority, pre-eminence, power or jurisdiction, spiritual or ecclesiastical, of any foreign prince, prelate, person, state or potentate whatsoever, heretofore claimed, used or usurped within this realm, or any dominion or country being within or under the power, dominion, or obeysance of your Highness, or advisedly, maliciously, and directly putting in, using, or executing anything for the extolling, advancement, setting forth, maintenance or defence of any such pretended or usurped jurisdiction, power, pre-eminence and authority, or any part thereof, and as imposes penalties for the same; the whole of 5 Eliz. c. 1, except so much and such parts of the said Act as do in anywise relate to the taking and pronouncing the oath therein mentioned by any spiritual or ecclesiastical persons of the Church of England by law established, or by any persons taking orders, commonly called "ordines sacros," or ecclesiastical orders, in the said church, or by any persons to be promoted, preferred or admitted to any degree of learning in any university then within this realm or dominions to the same belonging, or by all or any such of the other officers, ministers or other persons in the said Act mentioned, described or referred to as are not Roman Catholics; the whole of 13 Eliz. c. 2, intituled, "An Act against the bringing in and putting in execution of Bulls, Writings, or Instruments, and other Superstitious Things from the See of Rome;" the whole of 1 Jac. 1, c. 4, intituled, "An Act for the due Execution of the Statutes against Jesuits, Seminary Priests, Recusants," &c.; the whole of 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, intituled, "An Act for the better discovering and repressing of Popish Recusants;" so much of 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, intituled, "An Act for the Uniformity of Public Prayers and Administration of Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies, and for establishing the form of making, ordaining, and consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons in the Church of England," forbidding any schoolmaster or other person instructing or teaching youth in any private house or family as a tutor or schoolmaster, to instruct or teach any youth as a tutor or schoolmaster before licence obtained from his respective archbishop, bishop, or ordinary of the diocese, according to the laws and statutes of the realm, and before such subscription and acknowledgment as therein aforesaid, so far as the same doth in anywise relate to Roman Catholics; the whole of 25 Car. 2, c. 2, intituled, "An Act for preventing Dangers which may happen from Popish Recusants;" the whole of 30 Car. 2, s. 2, c. 1, intituled, "An Act for the more effectual preserving the King's Person and Government, by disabling Papists from sitting in either House of Parliament;" the whole of 11 & 12 Wm. 3, c. 4, intituled, "An Act for the further preventing the Growth of Popery;" so much of 18 Geo. 3, c. 60, intituled, "An Act for relieving his Majesty's Subjects professing the Popish Religion from certain Penalties and Disabilities imposed on them by an Act made in the eleventh and twelfth Years of the Reign of King William the Third, intituled, 'An Act for the further preventing the Growth of Popery,'" whereby it is enacted, "that nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any popish bishop, priest, jesuit, or schoolmaster, who shall not have taken and subscribed the above oath in the above words, before he shall have been apprehended, or any prosecution commenced against him;" so much of 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, as makes it a condition precedent to any relief or benefit being had or taken under or by virtue of the said last-mentioned Act, that the oath thereby appointed shall have been previously taken and subscribed by the party desiring such relief or benefit, &c. and as enacts, "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to give any ease, benefit, or advantage to any person who shall by preaching, teaching, or writing, deny or gainsay the oath of allegiance, abjuration, and declaration hereinbefore mentioned and appointed to be taken as aforesaid, or the declarations or doctrines therein contained, or any of them;" and whereby persons bound by monastic or religious vows are declared to be liable to the laws at any time theretofore enacted against such persons, or for or in respect of the same; and as enacts, that nothing therein contained should make it lawful for Roman Catholics to found, endow, or establish any school, academy, or college within the realm or its actual dominions; and as enacts, "that no schoolmaster professing the Roman Catholic religion shall receive into his school for education the child of any Protestant father;" and "that all uses, trusts, and dispositions, whether of real or personal property, which immediately before the twenty-fourth day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, shall be deemed to be superstitious or unlawful, shall continue to be so deemed and taken, any thing in this Act contained notwithstanding;" and whereby it is provided and enacted, "that no benefit in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any Roman Catholic ecclesiastic permitted by this Act, who shall officiate in any place of congregation or assembly for religious worship permitted by this Act, with a steeple and bell, or at any funeral in any church or churchyard, or who shall exercise any of the rites or ceremonies of his religion, or wear the habits of his order, save within some place of congregation or assembly for religious worship permitted by this Act, or in a private house where there shall be no more than five persons assembled, besides those of the household; [illegible] of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 7, [illegible] if any person, after the commencement of this Act, other than the person thereunto authorized by law, shall assume or use the name, style or title of archbishop of any province, bishop of any bishopric, or dean of any deanery in England or Ireland, he shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds;" and, "that if any Roman Catholic ecclesiastic, or any member of any of the orders, communities or societies hereinafter mentioned, shall, after the commencement of this Act, exercise any of the rites or ceremonies of the Roman Catholic religion, or wear the habits of his order, save within the usual places of worship of the Roman Catholic religion or in private houses, such ecclesiastic or other person shall, being thereof convicted by the due course of law, forfeit for every such offence the sum of fifty pounds;" and as imposes penalties upon any person holding any judicial, civil or corporate office, who shall resort to or be present at any place of worship in England or Ireland other than that of the united Church of England and Ireland, or in Scotland, other than that of the Church of Scotland as by law established, in the robe, gown, or other peculiar habit of office, or attend with the ensign or insignia, or any part thereof, of or belonging to such his office; and also so much of the said last-mentioned Act as relates to the gradual suppression and final prohibition of Jesuits and members of other religious orders, communities or societies of the Church of Rome bound by monastic or religious vows, and resident within the kingdom, and the pains, penalties, forfeitures and punishments thereby enacted against, for or in respect of the same.

CHATTEL INTERESTS (REAL PROPERTY).

A Bill to declare to be valid assignments, surrenders, and releases of chattel interests in real property, made in certain cases.

Reciting that it is the practice in dealings with real estate to assign and surrender terms of years and other chattel interests, and to assign, surrender, or release charges affecting such real estate, and the title to such assignment, surrender, or release is frequently considered defective or doubtful, on the ground that some probate or administration evidencing the title to such assignment, surrender, or release has not been obtained in the proper court.

That every such assignment, surrender, or release as aforesaid as shall have been executed before, or shall be executed after, this Act comes into operation, shall be deemed valid to all intents and purposes whatsoever, notwithstanding any party who shall have made or concurred in making any such assignment, surrender, or release, shall have derived title under a probate or administration (whether general or limited) which shall not have been obtained in the proper court, provided such probate or administration shall have been granted before the first day of January, 1815.

ACTIONS OF DEBT LIMITATION.

A Bill for further limiting the time within which actions of debt, grounded on any lending or contract without specialty, may be commenced.

Reciting that, by an Act passed in the twenty-first year of his late Majesty King James the First, it was among other things enacted, that all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty shall be commenced and sued within six years after the cause of such action or suit, and not after: and that it is expedient that the time for commencing such actions or suits should be further limited; it is to be enacted

That all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty made after the thirty-first day of December next shall be commenced and sued for within four years after the cause of such action or suit, and not after.

SHERIFFS (WALES).

A Bill for assigning sheriffs in Wales.

Reciting that it is convenient that the sheriffs in each of the shires in Wales be nominated and appointed in like manner as is used in other parts of England: it is to be enacted

That after the passing of this Act the sheriffs in each shire in Wales shall be assigned, ordained, nominated, and appointed at the same time and place and in like manner and form as is used according to law for sheriffs in the shires of England.

OATHS DISPENSATION.

This is a bill to authorize commissioners of bankrupt to examine certain persons, and receive their statements, though not upon oath, under certain circumstances.

It recites, that by an Act passed in the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, ss. 36, 37, intituled, "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Bankrupts," it is amongst other things enacted, that it shall be lawful for commissioners of bankrupt to examine the bankrupt upon oath, either by word of mouth or upon interrogatories in writing, touching all matters relating either to his trade, dealings, or estate, or which may tend to disclose any such grant, conveyance, or concealment of his lands, tenements, goods, moneys, or debts, and to reduce his answers into writing, which examination so reduced into writing the said bankrupt shall sign and subscribe; and if such bankrupt shall refuse to be sworn, or shall refuse to answer any questions put to him by the said commissioners touching any of the matters aforesaid, or shall not fully answer to the satisfaction of the said commissioners any such questions, or shall refuse to sign or subscribe his examination so reduced into writing as aforesaid (not having any lawful objection allowed by the said commissioners), it shall be lawful for the said commissioners by warrant under their hands and seals to commit him to such prison as they may think fit, there to remain until he shall submit himself to such commissioners to be sworn: And that it may happen that persons against whom a fiat in bankruptcy may be awarded may be perfectly willing to make a full disclosure of all their affairs, and give true answer to all questions touching the same, but may refuse to take an oath, from conscientiously believing oaths to be unlawful, and yet may not fall within any description of persons whose affirmation is now by law permitted to be received in lieu of an oath, and the commissioners may nevertheless hold themselves bound, not only to refuse such disclosure without oath, but also to commit such person to prison by reason of such refusal, whereby important facts may remain unknown, to the prejudice of the creditors, and the party may be imprisoned for an indefinite time, possibly for his whole life, without any moral delinquency; it is therefore proposed to enact,—

That in case any person who now is or may hereafter duly be declared a bankrupt, or the wife of any such bankrupt, shall, when attending such commissioners at their meeting, state that he or she cannot conscientiously take an oath, but is willing to make solemn affirmation to the truth of his or her answers to any questions that shall be put to him or her by such commissioners, and to sign and subscribe his or her examination when reduced to writing, it shall be lawful for such commissioner to receive of such person his solemn affirmation in the form set forth in the schedule hereto annexed, and then to examine and to deal with such bankrupt in the same manner in all respects as he is now authorized to do in case he or she had been examined upon oath; provided that nothing herein shall in any wise affect the right of commissioners of bankrupt to judge how far the answers to be made are satisfactory, or to commit to prison in case they shall hold such answers to be unsatisfactory, nor the right of any creditor to withhold his signature from the certificate of conformity.

SCHEDULE.

I A B, the bankrupt [or C D, the wife of A B, the bankrupt] under a fiat of bankruptcy issued against him on the day of believing in my conscience that it is unlawful to take an oath, but being desirous of disclosing all that I know respecting the affairs of [me] the said A B, do solemnly and sincerely promise to make true answer to all such questions as shall be demanded of me by the commissioners under such fiat, touching all matters relating to the same.

THE MAGISTRATE.

POOR LAW CIRCULAR.

POOR-RATE.

COSTS OF ENFORCING THE PAYMENT OF THE POOR-RATE, BY WHOM TO BE PAID.

June 11, 1844.

Clerk of Westbury-on-Severn Union—Inquired whether in the case of parties summoned for the non-payment of the poor-rate, the expenses of the applications as well as the rate were recoverable against the defaulters; or whether such expenses must be borne by the overseers.

Ans.—The cost of a summons for non-payment of poor-rate is, in the first place, demandable of the person at whose instance or on whose application such summons is obtained, and it is recoverable or not against the party summoned, according to the nature of the case and the discretion of the justices. Where the justices, upon the hearing of the case, may not see fit to order payment of the costs of the summons by the party in arrear, the overseers will be answerable for it.

RATING.—1. COAL-MINES.

June 15, 1844.

Assistant Overseer, Kirkburton—Inquired as to which township a coal-mine should be rated, the pit being sunk and the coals wound up in Kirkburton, though the coals were obtained in the adjoining township, fifty yards being the distance of the mouth of the pit from the boundary line of the two townships.

Ans.—The Commissioners direct your attention to the case of R. v. Foleshill (2 Adol. & Ellis, 593), in which a coal-mine extended under the surface into the parishes of Exhall and Foleshill, but the pits, engines, and fixed machinery for working the mine were all situated in Foleshill alone; and it was held the proprietor of the mine could not be rated in Foleshill for that part of the mine which lay in Exhall. Lord Denman observes—"It is too great a refinement to say that there was no mine there (i.e. in Exhall), because all the works for raising the coal were not within that parish. According to that argument, if a coal-mine extended into twenty parishes, and all the coal was brought to the surface in one, the proprietor must be rated in that only. The difficulty of ascertaining what is raised in each parish may be great, but here the sessions have ascertained it." According to this decision, the Commissioners apprehend that the proprietor of the coal-mine to which you allude is rateable in Kirkburton for so much of the property, whether mine or works, as is situated in that parish, and that he is rateable in Stockton for so much of the property as lies therein. The distribution of the property between the two parishes is a question of fact, to be ascertained according to the circumstances of the individual case.

2. COURSE TO BE PURSUED IN LEVYING A RATE WHERE THE EXISTING ASSESSMENT IS UNFAIR.

June 17, 1844.

Overseer of Kingswalden, Hitchin Union—Stated that a rate, made in February last, was quashed by the justices on appeal, for unfairness in the assessment; in consequence of which there was a balance due to the preceding overseer, and the calls of the guardians for contributions to the union funds could not be met: the parish officers could not make a rate to the best of their judgment and ability, as the two churchwardens were opposed to the two overseers. Requested to have Commissioners' instructions how to proceed under the circumstances; and also inquired whether the money which had been collected under the rate that had been quashed, should be considered as payments on account.

Ans.—If the overseers of Kingswalden are in want of funds for the purposes of their office, it is their duty to levy a rate upon as fair and equal an assessment of the rateable property in the parish as they can make, according to the best of their judgment. If the churchwardens and overseers cannot agree amongst themselves with regard to such an assessment, they must abide the consequences, for the guardians of Hitchin Union must not be kept out of the requisite funds for the relief of the poor, by such disagreements. The Commissioners desire to point out that, under the 1st section of the 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, the sums paid under the rate, which you describe as having been quashed on appeal, are to be taken as payments on account of the next effective rate.

REGISTRATION.

EXPENSES OF REGISTRATION OF PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS.

April 3, 1844.

Auditor of Malmesbury Union, &c.—Stated, that by virtue of the Acts, 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 34 and 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 21, persons whose rights were reserved to vote for members of Parliament for the borough of Cricklade, in respect of freeholds situated in the parishes of Malmesbury, St. Paul, the Abbey, and St. Mary Westport, within the new borough of Malmesbury, were registered at Norton, the next adjoining parish in the borough of Cricklade. By the first-mentioned statute, sec. 56, each borough elector had to pay 1s. annually for registering his vote, and the overseers of Norton collected the shillings from the electors, claiming in respect of freeholds in the other three parishes above mentioned; but by the latter statute, sec. 58, the annual payment of 1s. by each elector was abolished, and the parish of Norton deprived of its former claim on the individual electors for contributions towards the expenses of registration. By the same statute, sec. 55, the expenses incurred by the town clerk, or returning officer, of any city or borough, in carrying into effect the provisions of the Act, were to be defrayed out of the moneys to be collected for the relief of the poor in the several parishes and townships within the same city or borough; and he, the auditor, could not discover any provision in the Act to enable the overseers of Norton to compel contributions from the overseers of the other parishes above named towards the expenses of the register. Requested the opinion of the Commissioners for his guidance.

Ans.—As the recent statute, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, provides (sec. 57) that the expenses incurred in this matter by the overseers of every parish or township shall be paid from the poor-rates of the same parish or township, and (sec. 55) that the expenses incurred by the town-clerk of any city or borough shall be paid according to a certain rule of proportion from the poor-rates of the several parishes and townships within the same city or borough, the Commissioners apprehend that the expenses incurred, whether by the overseers or by the town-clerk, in respect of the registration of voters for the parish of Norton, in the borough of Cricklade, whether such voters derive their qualification within that borough or from freeholds situate in the borough of Malmesbury, must be paid from the poor-rates of the said parish, and cannot be levied or recovered from any parish within the last-named borough. With regard to the propriety of this state of the law, it is beyond the province of the Commissioners to express any opinion.

RELATIVES.

NON-LIABILITY OF A WIFE TO MAINTAIN HUSBAND AND CHILD.

June 20, 1844.

Clerk of the Cuckfield Union—Stated, that a man and his wife and child had been removed, under an order, to a parish in the union; they were inmates of the workhouse for a time, when the wife escaped, leaving her husband and child behind; the husband was partially a lunatic, and wholly unable to support himself and family, whilst the wife was capable of maintaining herself and child, and offered to do so if she had been permitted to leave the house with her child. Inquired whether the wife was liable to a conviction under the Vagrant Act for deserting her husband and child.

Ans.—A wife is not liable to be proceeded against under the Vagrant Act for refusing or neglecting to maintain her husband, inasmuch as she is not under any legal obligation to support him. So also as regards the child, the legal obligation to maintain it attaches to the husband as the head of the family, and the wife cannot therefore be proceeded against for the desertion.

REMOVAL.

1. COSTS OF APPEAL AGAINST AN ORDER OF.

March 29, 1844.

The Overseers of St. James, Dover—Stated, that John Betts and his wife became chargeable to the parish of St. Sepulchre, in the city of London; an examination of the pauper was taken, wherein he stated he had been a yearly servant to Mr. Richard Marsh, of Farthingoe, in the parish of St. James, Dover, and an order was made for his removal to that parish. Farthingloe, however, is in the parish of Hougham, and the parish of St. James therefore appealed against the order, and although information was given to St. Sepulchre of the above fact, they had the appeal tried at the City of London Quarter Sessions, on the 30th of June last, and of course were defeated. A bill of charges in the matter had been delivered to the overseers by the vestry-clerk, the Lord Mayor and Recorder of the city of London having, as it was alleged, refused to allow any expenses to the parish of St. James. Inquired whether there was any appeal from the decision of the Lord Mayor and Recorder.

Ans.—The ordering of costs in cases of appeals against orders of removal appears to be a matter within the discretion of the justices. In a case which occurred apparently under the 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 30, s. 3, a writ of mandamus requiring the justices of Nottingham to allow costs, was quashed upon the ground that the Court held it reasonable for the justices to have the power of judging whether costs should be allowed or not. (R. v. Justices of Nottingham, 2 Bott.) The terms of the eighty-second section of the Poor Law Amendment Act are more extended even than those of the third section of the above-named statute,—it provides that the justices "shall award and order the party for whom, and in whose behalf such appeal shall be determined, such costs and charges in the law as by the said justices in their discretion shall be thought most reasonable and just;" the former enacts, that the justices shall and may, if they think fit, order and direct," &c. The Commissioners therefore think that, as the magistrates in the present case have refused to award costs, the parish of St. James has no remedy in the matter as against the parish of St. Sepulchre.

2. COST OF SERVING NOTICE OF A SUSPENDED ORDER OF REMOVAL, BY WHOM TO BE PAID.

June 8, 1844.

Clerk of the Stow-on-the-Wold Union—Stated, that the guardians of the Stow-on-the-Wold Union had received from the parish officers of St. Margaret Leicester, a demand for 10*l.* 9s. 10d. the cost of "relief given to John Johns, of Stow parish, under orders of removal suspended from October last;" and for 2*l.* 11s. 6d. the cost of "serving notice of the same." The guardians admitted the pauper's settlement, and did not object to repay the cost of the relief; but they considered that they were not legally bound to pay the cost of serving the notice, and requested the Commissioners' opinion on the point.

Ans.—The expense attendant on a personal service of a suspended order of removal, is recoverable under the 2nd section of the 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, as one of the charges incurred in consequence of the suspension of the order. The 84th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act requires the notice of a suspended order to be "given" to the overseers; whereas, the 79th section expressly allows a common order to be "sent by post." This difference in the phraseology of the two sections renders it advisable that notice of a suspended order should be served personally; and the expenses incurred therein appear to the Commissioners to be recoverable accordingly. But the Commissioners do not consider the expense of removing the pauper to be recoverable from the receiving parish. It is clear, that the removal does not take place in consequence of the suspension of the order, and that therefore the expense of the removal is not a charge incurred by reason of the suspension.

3. BY WHOM THE REMOVAL OF PAUPERS TO THEIR PLACES OF SETTLEMENT IS TO BE UNDERTAKEN. June 14, 1844.

Clerk of the Guardians of St. Mary, Rotherhithe—Inquired, whether the guardians could authorize any other persons than their paid officers to take the charge of the removal of paupers to their place of settlement; lately the assistant relieving officer had done this duty, but much inconvenience had arisen by his absence whilst so engaged. A pauper was about to be removed to Berwick-upon-Tweed, which would take four or five days to effect: the master of the vessel might be induced to take the charge and delivery of the pauper to the overseers at Berwick, provided the guardians could sanction such a proceeding of the legality of which they were doubtful.

Ans.—The removal of paupers is a matter within the province of the overseers, and one in which the law does not impose any duty upon the guardians. The overseers, however, may, under the 10th section of the 54 Geo. 3, c. 170, employ any proper person or persons whomsoever to carry, remove, and deliver any pauper or paupers ordered to be removed by any justices; and the removal of the pauper by such person or persons shall be as effectual as if made by the overseers themselves.

4. WHETHER ONE MEMBER OF A FAMILY, WHO HAS BECOME CHARGEABLE, CAN BE REMOVED WITHOUT THE HEAD OF THE FAMILY. June 21, 1844.

Clerk of the Cirencester Union—Stated, that an order had been obtained for the removal of H. his wife, and five children, and that the order had been suspended on account of the sickness of the eldest daughter, aged twenty years. The removal was to take place in consequence of relief to this daughter, as neither the father nor any other part of his family had received or required relief. Inquired whether by reason of her age the daughter is not emancipated, and whether the order of removal should not be confined to her alone; and if there are good grounds of appeal against the order.

Ans.—If the daughter in question is unmarried, and has resided with her father from infancy, and has not acquired any settlement in her own right, she is not emancipated by reason of her age. The Commissioners are not aware of any judicial determination of the question, whether the relief of an unemancipated child, above the age of sixteen years, renders the father liable to be removed. The decisions with regard to certificated persons seem, however, to involve the principle upon which such a question must be decided. In the case of R. v. Framlingham (Burr. T. C. 748) Ashton, J. gave it as his opinion, "That if several persons resided in a parish under the same certificate, the asking relief by a single one of them would not render the rest removeable." This conclusion would no longer be tenable with respect to children under sixteen years of age, since the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act (see section 56); but it appears to be still applicable to all children above that age receiving relief without their parents. The Commissioners, therefore, think it probable that the young woman you refer to might be legally separated from her father, and removed alone. The Commissioners will add, that this question was suggested in the case of R. v. Mile End Old Town (5 Nev. & Man. 581), though no decision was given upon it. In that case the immediate question at issue was of a similar character, but it was raised with reference to the removal of a pauper to Ireland, under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 40. In delivering judgment, Patteson, J. observed—"We are of opinion that the provision in the 55th section of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, as to the age up to which the parent is to be deemed answerable for relief given to a child, viz. sixteen (whatever might have been its effect upon relief given to a child above that age, as to the chargeability of the parent, if the parties had been English, on which we give no opinion), does not apply to the present case, depending, as it has already been stated it does, on the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 40, s. 2."

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION IN FRANCE.

The Moniteur publishes a report on the administration of criminal justice in France in 1843, addressed to the King by the Minister of Justice. It results from this document that the number of cases tried by the Courts of Assize amounted to 5,394, comprising 7,226 individuals, 2,233 of whom were charged with crimes against persons, and 4,993 with crimes against property. As compared with the returns of 1842, there was an increase in the number of the latter of 276, and a diminution of 3 in that of the accused of crimes against persons. The proportion of the accused to the population was 1 to 4,737 inhabitants. Of the 7,226 tried in 1843, 6,022 were males, and 1,204 females. 66 were under 16 years of age; 1,170 between 16 and 21; 1,122 between 21 and 25; 1,171 between 25 and 30; 1,048 between 30 and 35; 819 between 35 and 40; 1,165 between 40 and 50; 433 between 50 and 60; 186 between 60 and 70; 44 were upwards of 70; and 2 were octogenarians. 4,049 were unmarried; 1,5[illegible] were married; and 364 widowers; 4-6ths of the accused who were married had children. The number of foreigners tried in [illegible] was 337. Upwards of 5-6ths of the accused, or 6,102, exercised professions or trades, or lived on their incomes, and 1,124 led an idle life, without any means of existence. Of the 6,957 who had a domicile, 4,201 inhabited rural districts, and 2,756 the towns. 3,719 were completely illiterate; 2,316 could read and write imperfectly; 955 had received some instruction, and 236 had been educated in the universities. Of the 5,394 cases submitted to juries in 1843, 2,811 were fully admitted; 1,173 partly, and 1,410 were rejected. 2,224 accused were acquitted, and 4,858 convicted and sentenced; 50 to the penalty of death, 196 to hard labour for life, 929 to hard labour for a certain period, 3,682 to imprisonment; 1 to civil degradation, and 20 children under 16 years of age to correctional imprisonment. 33 of the 50 capitally convicted were executed; 1 committed suicide, and the penalty of the 16 others was commuted. The juries returned verdicts with extenuating circumstances in favour of 2,865 of the 4,120 found guilty. The Courts of Assize likewise pronounced on the cases of 805 contumacious persons, of whom 50 were women; 3 only were acquitted, 43 were condemned to death, 30 to hard labour for life, 261 for different periods, and 166 to imprisonment. The number of crimes varied according to the seasons; the winter and autumn months presented a greater proportion of crimes against property than those of spring and summer, and, during the latter seasons, more crimes against persons were committed than during autumn and winter. The prosecutions for political offences did not exceed 29, and were directed against 46 persons, 36 of whom were acquitted, and 10 condemned—namely, 1 to fine; 1 to one year's imprisonment, and 8 to less than one year. The tribunals of Correctional Police decided, in 1843, in 152,029 cases, including 199,216 individuals, shewing an increase, as compared with 1842, of 6,141 cases and 6,687 individuals. 157,438 of the accused tried before those courts were males, and 41,778 females; 22,267 were acquitted, and 175,151 convicted and condemned, 7,312 to more than one year's imprisonment, 44,768 to less than one year, 23,071 merely to a fine; and 1,798 children, under 16 years of age, were acquitted as having acted without discernment; 1,012 of the latter, however, were ordered to be detained in penitentiaries, and 786 were given up to their families or friends. The Royal courts and tribunals of appeal pronounced, in 1843, on 7,443 appeals in correctional matters; they confirmed 3-5ths of the judgments and annulled the two other. [illegible],814 of the accused tried in that year by the Courts of Assize had already been condemned; 1,015 had undergone 1 condemnation; 408, 2; 185, 3; 97, 4; 42, 5; and 67, from 6 to 10. Among them were only 138 women. The culprits of the same class tried by the Courts of Correctional Police amounted to 15,471, of whom 2,466 were females. The tribunals of simple police delivered 192,282 judgments in the course of the same year. The number of the justices of the peace in France, in 1843, was 2,846; of mayors, 37,040; of commissaries of police, 993; of police agents, 2,359; of gendarmes; 14,082, divided into [illegible],099 brigades; and of gardes champêtres, 33,926. Proceedings were instituted in 1843 against 94 functionaries or agents of the Government for offences committed in the discharge of their duties; namely, 1 prefect, 3 engineers, 33 mayors, and 2 deputy-mayors, [illegible] tax-collector, 3 postmen, 28 forest-keepers, 22 custom-house-officers, and 1 maritime syndic. The Council of State authorized the prosecution of 39, and refused it for 55. Of the 39 tried, 21 were acquitted, and 18 condemned, 8 to more than one year's imprisonment, 5 to less than one year, and 5 to fines. There were 722 appeals against the 5,423 judgments of the Courts of Assize submitted to the Court of Cassation, which only admitted 71. The suicides in [illegible]843 amounted to 3,020, or 154 more than in 1842, [illegible] 5th of which, 551, took place in the department of the Seine. Women figured in the number for 729, or [illegible]4 per cent. 15 children under 16 years of age, 20 octogenarians, 170 septuagenarians, and 384 sexagenarians, had put an end to their existence. The suicides, less numerous in winter and in autumn, were particularly frequent in May, June, and July. [illegible],096 had recourse to drowning; 954 hung themselves; [illegible]50 used firearms; and 206 asphyxied themselves by the fumes of charcoal. 151 employed this last mode of destruction in the department of the Seine alone; [illegible]-4th of the individuals who committed suicide in 1843 were not in the enjoyment of their faculties. The number of culprits pardoned by the King, or whose penalties were commuted, in 1843, was 668, or 143 more than in 1842.

THE LAWYER.

ON THE GENERAL ISSUE.

DECLARATIONS for defamation are founded upon malicious publication of defamatory matter. Malice is here a matter of fact, but it is presumed when the publication appears in evidence to have been intentional and upon no lawful occasion. (Bromage v. Prosser, 4 B. & C. 247; Haire v. Wilson, 9 B. & C. 643.) That inference fails if such an occasion be shown, and it is on this ground that those defences which are usually classed under the head of "privileged statements" are admissible under not guilty. (Fairman v. Ives, 5 B. & A. 642; Lilly v. Price, 5 A. & E. 645.) It is said in books of authority that the facts may be specially pleaded. (Cromwell's case, 4 Rep. 12 b; 1 Saund. 130 n. 1; see Delegal v. Highley, 3 N. C. 950.) But the truth of the defamatory matter has never been admitted under not guilty either in bar of the action or in mitigation of damages; for that defence does not deny the malice, but shews that the plaintiff is not entitled to complain of it, on the ground that the law will not permit a man to profit by his own bad conduct. (Smith v. Richardson, Willes, 20; Fairman v. Ives, 5 B. & A. 642.)

There is a class of actions for defamation in which actual injury to the plaintiff, or special damage as it is called, is a constituent of his right of action. It is perhaps unfortunate that the same term is also used to denote particular injuries consequent upon a legal wrong. The difference is in all respects important; it is even possible that the law of connection between the act and its consequences may not be precisely the same for both cases. (See Duffield v. Scott, 3 T. R. 374; and Tindall v. Bell, 11 M. & W. 228.) Damage in the latter sense, whether general or special, is no part of the cause of action, but merely the measure of compensation (Fetter v. Beale, 1 Salk. 11), and therefore it cannot be separately pleaded to (Smith v. Thomas, 2 N. C. 372), and is not, strictly speaking, an issue under not guilty. If the plaintiff prove a legal wrong, he is universally entitled to some compensation (Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415; Blofield v. Payne, 4 B. & Ad. 410); though to obtain more than a nominal amount he must in some cases allege and prove a special injury resulting from the defendant's act. It is therefore easy to distinguish between such damage, and a constitution of the legal wrong itself. Take, for instance, a declaration of slander for calling the plaintiff a thief, alleging particular injury as resulting; the words are the legal wrong and the consequences the measure of compensation. But substitute the word villain, which is not actionable per se, and the same consequences are then a part of the legal wrong, and at the same time the measure of compensation. The latter case is similar to a large class of actions on the case, founded upon acts which, though not innocent, are actionable only in respect of their results; as negligent driving, &c., keeping dangerous animals, public nuisances, escape on mesne process, and false returns to process, and some other dereliction of duty by the sheriff. All such actions fail altogether, if it appear that the plaintiff has suffered no actual injury; and it would seem that the mode of putting that in issue must be common to all. Taking as an example the action of slander in the case of words not per se actionable, it is submitted that not guilty denies the act, and the consequences which alone make it wrongful for the purposes of an action. We have already seen that upon the same principle it denies the qualities of an act when they are material. In Norton v. Scholefield (9 M. & W. 665) the declaration alleged that the plaintiff and his tenants were entitled to the use of a well and pump, and that the defendant had constructed a cess-pool so near that the water was contaminated. The defendant applied to the Court, after refusal by a judge, for leave to plead, together with the general issue, a special plea denying that the water had been contaminated by reason of the erection of the cess-pool, and the application was rejected, Parke, B. saying, "Not guilty puts in issue both the act complained of and its consequences; in actions for negligence a defendant is never allowed to plead that the injury was caused by the plaintiff's own negligence. The very plea alluded to by the learned judge appears by the case of Bridge v. the Grand Junction Railway Company (3 M. & W. 244) to amount to the general issue. That was an action for negligently driving the defendant's train against that in which the plaintiff was riding. It will be remembered that such actions are supported on the ground that the injury, though direct, may be considered as consequent upon an abstract act of negligence. (Williams v. Holland, 10 Bing. 112.) Brown v. Jarvis (1 M. & W. 704) was an action against a sheriff for neglecting to arrest upon mesne process, and the Court of Exchequer, erroneously assuming that not guilty had been pleaded, entered into the discussion of the question whether actual damage was essential to the plaintiff's right of action. In the subsequent case of Williams v. Mostyn (4 M. & W. 145), the same Court decided that a sheriff might defend himself under the general issue in an action for a voluntary escape upon a mesne process, by shewing that it had caused no injury to the plaintiff. These decisions are authorities for including in the issue taken by not guilty both "the act complained of and its consequences," whether it be wholly innocent per se, as in the case of the cess-pool, or wrong in some points of view, as in the others. But there is a recent case in the Queen's Bench (Wylie v. Birch, 4 Q. B. 566), which may be thought to lead to the contrary conclusion. The declaration there, after stating in substance a judgment recovered against one Pearson, and a writ of fi. fa. issued thereupon, and delivered to the defendant as sheriff, averred that he seized and sold goods of Pearson by virtue of the writ, but disregarding his duty, had not the proceeds ready to be rendered to the plaintiff, and had not paid them over to him, and afterwards falsely returned that the goods seized remained in his hands for want of buyers; by means of which premises the plaintiff had been injured, and deprived of the means of obtaining the money directed to be levied, and was likely to lose the same. The defendant pleaded three pleas, stating that a fiat in bankruptcy against Pearson issued before the sale, and shewing a title by relation in the assignees to the goods. The pleas were specially demurred to as amounting to the general issue, but it was not assigned as a ground of demurrer that they amounted to an argumentative traverse of the allegation that the defendant had sold the goods of Pearson. Judgment for the defendant. The decision may, it would seem, be rested upon the ground that, no particular injury being attached to the false return taken per se, the gist of the action was the not passing over the money, and that therefore the pleas were good on general demurrer as amounting to a traverse of one of the facts entitling the plaintiff to it, viz. Pearson's property at the time of the sale, which, as may be proved from Wright v. Gainson (2 M. & W. 739) and Rowe v. Ames (6 M. & W. 747) would not have been in issue under not guilty. And such, it is apprehended, is the real meaning of the judgment. The Court, after noticing that none of the examples subjoined to the rule illustrate its effect upon the allegation of consequential injury, say, "We think that the declaration is perfect in stating such damages as primâ facie must be taken to arise from the default, and that the defendant in his plea (one of the three substantially similar) "correctly negatives that presumption by alleging the contrary fact" (i. e. by traversing the inducement "which constitutes his defence." The case of Perring v. Harris (2 Moo. & Rob. 5) is also sometimes cited as bearing upon this subject; but it may easily be disposed of by observing that there the general issue was not pleaded, the only plea being a traverse of the plaintiff's title. In Rose v. Groves (5 M. & Gr. 613) the declaration stated the plaintiff kept an inn abutting on a navigable river, to wit, the Thames, and of right accessible from that river to persons navigating thereon in boats and other craft; yet the defendants maliciously placed in the said river, near the plaintiff's house, beams and spars in order that they might, and the same did, at certain states of the tide, drift opposite to the plaintiff's house, and thereby obstructed the way from the river thereto, and divers persons were prevented from coming and taking refreshment at plaintiff's house. Plea, not guilty. At the trial it was shewn that the plaintiff's business had fallen off since the alleged obstruction. The question submitted to the jury was, whether the access to the plaintiff's house was obstructed in fact, and, if so, whether the obstruction had been caused by the accidental floating of the timber across the plaintiff's landing-place, in which case they were directed to find a verdict for the defendants, the plaintiff's counsel having disclaimed damages if the jury should think that the obstruction was accidental. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 20*l*. A motion was made for a new trial or in arrest of judgment; the former on the ground of misdirection, in that the question whether the plaintiff had sustained any special damage had not been left to the jury, the latter because no special damage was alleged in the declaration. It was doubted whether this was an action for a public nuisance; and it may be noticed that the declaration did not distinctly shew that the river obstructed was public. On the assumption that a common nuisance was charged, it would have been an easy answer to the motion as to the new trial, that the allegation of damage was not in issue under not guilty. And accordingly, Maule, J. says, "the defendants, by pleading not guilty, have merely denied that they stopped the way in question." But that learned judge thought that no public injury was alleged; and the effect of the plea was never distinctly presented to the Court. Actual damage peculiar to the plaintiff had been proved.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

QUESTIONS AT THE EXAMINATION.

Easter Term, 1845.

I.—PRELIMINARY.

1. Where, and with whom, did you serve your clerkship?

2. State the particular branch or branches of the law to which you have principally applied yourself during your clerkship.

3. Mention some of the principal law books which you have read and studied.

4. Have you attended any and what law lectures?

II.—COMMON AND STATUTE LAW, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

5. In what cases may the judge certify to deprive the plaintiff of costs, and when and how must his certificate be obtained?

6. If one of several defendants who defended jointly be acquitted, what costs will he be entitled to?

7. Can a person interested in the result of an action be examined as a witness, and how can either of the parties obtain the admission of his testimony?

8. If some issues are found for the plaintiff, and others for the defendant, how does it affect the costs, and how does the affidavit of increase differ to get the expense of witnesses allowed to the respective parties?

9. What explanations would you give, and what would you require, if you were called upon under the statute to attest the execution of a warrant of attorney or cognovit.

10. Against a wilful trespasser, where the damages are under 5*l*. how should a person proceed?

11. Is it necessary to serve a subpœna ad test. personally, or will leaving it at the dwelling-house be sufficient? and what are the consequences of non-attendance?

12. When a tenant cannot be met with, what will be good service of an ejectment, and how and where?

13. Must a notice to quit be in all cases in writing? and at what period should it be given and expire?

14. How must you proceed when a feme sole obtains judgment, and marries before execution?

15. If a tenant hold over after notice to quit, what liability does he incur?

16. What steps must an attorney take before he can bring an action for his bill?

17. How is a contract by matter of record to be enforced? and by what evidence must you support it?

18. In what cases is a husband liable to debts contracted by his wife, and in what not?

19. If you have written documents to produce in evidence in a cause, what must you do to be entitled to costs of proof?

III.—CONVEYANCING.

20. A in writing agrees to let land to B for a term of years at a certain rent; B enters into possession and pays the rent to A; what is B's tenancy, and what right has he against A?

21. A is mortgagee in fee and dies without devising the security, and the mortgage debt is applicable by his executor to the payment of the testator's debts; suppose the heir-at-law of the mortgagee to be unwilling or incapable to re-convey the premises, to whom is the mortgagor to pay the principal money and interest, and how is he to obtain an effectual re-conveyance of those premises?

22. A and B (not partners) are to give their bond to C for the payment of a certain sum of money: how is the obligation to be made, so that in case B should die and leave A surviving, C may have a legal claim upon B's personal representative?

23. Suppose there are two partners, and they give their joint bond for payment of money, and one of such partners dies, what extent of remedy has the obligee against the surviving partner, and against the representative of the deceased partner?

24. State the general outline of a lease of a house, as to such covenants and conditions as would be proper between landlord and tenant in respect to repairs, and payment of rent in case of the premises being destroyed by fire.

25. In examining an abstract of title with the title-deeds, what should be carefully attended to?

26. The title-deeds required to be examined with the abstract are found not to be in the possession of the vendor, but in the hands of a third person in the country: what is the course to be pursued for the examination of the deeds, and at whose expense?

27. In the absence of conditions of sale to the contrary, how is a purchaser to obtain copies of abstracted deeds, or instruments on record, at the vendor's expense?

28. What should be done to postpone searches for incumbrances until immediately before the completion of the purchase?

29. As judgments do not bind leasehold estates until writs of execution are taken out, when and where should searches be made as to incumbrances on behalf of a purchaser of such estates?

30. What covenants are to be given to a purchaser of a freehold estate by the vendor who is seised in fee?

31. Suppose a purchaser cannot be required to take his conveyance executed by the attorney duly appointed by the vendor; and yet such purchaser should agree to take the conveyance so executed, and seeing that the vendor may be dead at the time the power is exercised;—what would be the consequence if he were so? and what should be required on behalf of the purchaser at the time of taking the conveyance?

32. State when deeds relating to estates in a register county should be registered; and what may be the consequence from delay in doing so?

33. Where terms of years are created by settlements, what are the events usually expressed in the proviso for cessor of such terms?

34. A term of years appears upon the abstract of title to be outstanding, and not to have been assigned to attend the inheritance: what should be required on the part of a purchaser? and at whose expense?

IV. EQUITY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

35. Can a foreigner resident abroad file a bill for relief in the Court of Chancery here? If so, what protection has the defendant in such case against the plaintiff for costs?

36. What is the mode of proceeding to enforce the appearance of a peer of the realm to a bill?

37. What effect has the filing of a replication on the answer of a defendant?

38. Can the answer of one defendant be read against a co-defendant? If so, state in what case?

39. In what case is a plaintiff or a defendant in a suit entitled to an order to examine witnesses de bene esse?

40. What is the nature of a writ of assistance, and in what case is it issued?

41. If a party having the conduct of a suit does not proceed with due diligence in the prosecution of a decree or order before the Master, what remedy has any other party interested to prevent further delay?

42. Where a person is entitled in expectancy or otherwise to a share of funds in court, and assigns his interest therein, what remedy has the assignee to protect himself against the transfer or payment out of court to the assignor of the share so assigned by him?

43. A party being dissatisfied with the Master's report, and desirous of taking the opinion of the Court thereon; what is the course of proceeding under such circumstances?

44. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement, is the plaintiff bound by the title as shewn by him at the time of filing his bill? If not, state the reason why.

45. In the case of a legacy, where no time of payment is mentioned in the will, from what time does it carry interest, and at what rate?

46. In the administration of assets, what creditors rank the highest in priority, and become entitled to be paid their debts in preference to other creditors?

47. Where a mortgagee is in possession, what is the time limited within which a mortgagor may file a bill to redeem?

48. Where a deposit is paid to an auctioneer at a sale, and there should arise a dispute between the vendor and purchaser, and an action is threatened or commenced against him by either for the deposit: what is the course to be pursued by the auctioneer to protect himself against their adverse claims?

49. In the distribution of assets, where there is not sufficient for the payment of all the legacies and annuities, how is an annuity in this respect treated?

V.—BANKRUPTCY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

50. What description of persons are subject to the bankrupt laws?

51. Describe the mode of proceeding to procure a fiat in bankruptcy?

52. What are the limits of the jurisdiction of the London commissioners?

53. In what manner, and at what period, and by whom, are the creditors' assignees, and the official assignees respectively appointed under a fiat in bankruptcy?

54. What is the duty of the creditors' assignees, and what is the duty of the official assignee?

55. In whom is the power of granting or withholding a bankrupt's certificate vested?

56. What are the advantages to a bankrupt in obtaining his certificate, and what are the disadvantages to his not obtaining it?

57. What courts have jurisdiction in matters in bankruptcy, and what is the court of final appeal?

58. Is the wife of a bankrupt entitled to dower out of an estate of which he was seised in fee at the time of his bankruptcy?

59. What is the proper course of proceeding for a mortgagee of a bankrupt's property to take after a fiat has been issued?

60. Does the property of a bankrupt situated in the British colonies pass to the assignees under a fiat issued in England?

61. If a bankrupt has granted an annuity for his own life to another person for a valuable consideration, how are the rights of the annuity creditor affected by the issuing of the fiat with reference to the future payments of the annuity?

62. If a bankrupt holds a lease on terms disadvantageous to the lessee, are the assignees obliged to continue to hold it for the remainder of the term or not?

63. If a bankrupt carrying on business alone has trade debts and trade assets, and private debts and private assets, are separate accounts to be kept, and separate dividends paid to each class of creditors, or is no distinction to be observed?

64. At what period was the last statute passed making any material alteration in the laws relating to bankrupts?

VI.—CRIMINAL LAW, AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

65. If a prisoner indicted for a felony or misdemeanor, refuse to plead, what course is to be pursued?

66. What ownership is requisite to be proved in the thing stolen?

67. What amounts to a taking, to constitute the act of larceny?

68. Can a prisoner be indicted a second time, under any, and what, circumstances for the same offence?

69. If money is lodged with an attorney for a special purpose, and he converts the same to his own use, is it a misdemeanor, or only actionable?

70. If a factor or agent intrusted with goods or merchandize for sale, deposit or pledge the same for his own benefit, is it a misdemeanor, or only actionable?

71. When can, and when cannot, a new trial be granted in criminal cases?

72. On a motion for a new trial, are affidavits of new facts admissible under any, and what, circumstances?

73. Are any, and what, costs allowed to a prosecutor in felonies and misdemeanors?

74. What is the rule as to payment of costs in a motion for a new trial in criminal cases?

75. Are persons stealing dogs, or in the possession of dogs, knowing the same to have been stolen, liable to any, and what, penalty or punishment?

76. Under what circumstances may persons playing musical instruments in the streets be required to desist? and if they refuse to do so, what is the mode of proceeding to compel them?

77. Is the evidence of the mother of an illegitimate child of itself sufficient to obtain an order of filiation on the putative father, or is any other, and what evidence necessary?

78. In what manner is the validity of an order of removal of a pauper tried? and can the legality of the decision be appealed before any other, and what, tribunal, and in what manner?

79. Magistrates having dismissed a complaint for an assault, can the accused in any, and what, way avail himself of such decision in an action against him for the same assault?

COUNSEL AND ATTORNEYS.—According to the lists lately printed and made up from the Stamp-office returns, it appears there are nearly 13,000 barristers and certificated conveyancers and attorneys practising in England and Wales; the number of barristers being 2,625, of whom 76 are Queen's counsel, 27 serjeants-at-law, the remaining 2,522 being junior barristers or gentlemen behind the bar, practising in the various common law and equity courts, and attending the several sessions throughout the country; there are also 136 certificated special pleaders and conveyancers not at the bar. The number of certificated attorneys residing in London and Westminster, and borough of Southwark, amounts to 2,960, and the certificated attorneys and conveyancers residing in the cities, boroughs, market towns, and principal villages in England and Wales, to 6,821; these numbers are those who have actually taken out and paid the duty on their certificates within the prescribed time; there are many attorneys who have not done so, and yet are on the roll and practise, in addition to upwards of 400 admitted last Hilary and about to be admitted during the present Term.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A BAR AT SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your number of last week an invitation is thrown out to your readers to discuss the question of the propriety and expediency of barristers attending sessions at which the duties of advocacy have heretofore been performed by the attorneys of the neighbourhood, and it is unquestionably of great importance to the members of either branch of the Profession that their respective rights, privileges, and duties should be clearly ascertained and defined, and this inquiry should be entered upon in a spirit of mutual respect and forbearance, as it is essential to the comfort and well-being of both branches that a cordial understanding should prevail between their members. It would be mere pedantry to enter into an antiquarian discussion of the origin and history of these two branches of the legal Profession. For the purpose of the present inquiry it is sufficient that for upwards of six centuries they have existed as two distinct and separate bodies in this country, there are very few instances in which any doubt or dispute has arisen as to their respective functions. I has happened, however, that owing either to the small amount of business, to the distance from London of the places at which the sessions are held, or to the smallness of the number of barristers belonging to the Welch Circuits, or to a combination of all these causes, that up to the present time no barristers have practised at the Quarter Sessions for any of the counties of North Wales, and the business in court has, consequently, of necessity been transacted by the attorneys. At the last Quarter Sessions for Flintshire, five gentlemen belonging to the North Wales and Chester Circuit appeared in court and applied to the bench of magistrates for the privilege of exclusive audience, and after some discussion, in the course of which it appeared that the majority of the magistrates present were disposed to accede to the application, the final determination of it was postponed in order to give an opportunity for the attendance of a greater number of the magistracy. A similar application has been made to the bench of magistrates for the adjoining county of Denbigh, and will, it is presumed, be shortly taken into consideration by them. In the meantime this movement of the barristers has occasioned considerable excitement amongst some of the attorneys who have been in the habit of practising as advocates at those sessions, and a meeting has been held for the purpose of taking measures for the protection of their interests in this matter.

It would appear that the principal ground upon which the attorneys resist the application of the barristers for exclusive audience is, that it would be a hardship to deprive men of a privilege which they have long exercised, and they do not dispute that barristers have a right to practise their profession in any court of quarter sessions in the kingdom, but deny their right to oust those who were before in possession of the practice. It is true also that something was said about the superior experience of men who had for years conducted the business at the sessions as compared with that of barristers of short standing at the bar; but this is a topic upon which I shall decline to enter, and I have only to hope that it was introduced during the heat of discussion, and that upon reflection every one would at once feel that comparisons of this description are injudicious, and the institution of them unseemly and indecorous in a question of this nature. Assuming that the determination of this disputed right properly belongs to the bench of magistrates, it behoves them neither to consider the interests of the barristers nor of the attorneys, but those of the suitors of the court and of the public generally, in arriving at their conclusion; and after having given the case a candid and mature consideration, it appears to me, first, that it is most desirable for the due administration of justice that in every court where trials take place, there should exist, distinct and separate from those whose peculiar business it is to prepare a case for trial, and to ascertain and marshal the evidence by which it is to be supported, a body of men whose peculiar province it is to conduct that case when it comes on to be tried; and I cannot help thinking that the very fact of attorneys communicating with the parties, examining the witnesses beforehand, and preparing the proofs, renders it extremely inexpedient that they should examine those witnesses upon their oath in court, and state the facts by which the questions in dispute are to be determined. It is well known to be a rule most rigidly adhered to by members of the bar that no witnesses in a cause are allowed to be present at a consultation except those whose evidence is of a purely scientific character; and the reason for their exclusion is, that if they were allowed to be present they would hear suggestions of facts and circumstances which it would be necessary or expedient to prove in the cause, and might thus be led by the partisan feeling, from which very few persons when embarked, even as witnesses, in a cause are entirely exempt, and without any intention of tampering with their oaths, to adopt the spirit of those suggestions, and to allow their testimony to be coloured, if not perverted, thereby. How much more strongly does the principle of this objection apply to the instance of an attorney who, before a case comes on to be tried in court, must communicate with the witnesses, make inquiries of them into the circumstances of the case, and in making those inquiries necessarily, in some measure, however guarded he may be, suggest the proof, which is required to support it. Then, how could the most cautious and scrupulous man, when he came to examine those witnesses on oath avoid, even by look, gesture, or tone of voice, repeating the suggestions so made in the preliminary investigation by him of the facts; or how, in addressing the Court or jury, could he avoid mixing up that which his hopes or wishes suggest, and confounding it with the matter established by strict proof?

Secondly. It ought to be borne in mind that the attorneys practising in the rural districts are the neighbours, legal advisers, personal friends, or, it may be, enemies of those who serve upon the juries, and even of the magistrates upon the bench; and no one at all, sensible of the infirmities of human nature, would deny that the advocacy of men between whom and the Court and jury such intimacy or hostility existed, would be much more likely unduly to influence, either favourably or adversely, the verdicts of the juries; and even, perhaps, in some instances the judgment of the Court, than that of men who, residing at a distance, and only visiting the county at certain periods, would be, in these respects, upon a perfect equality with one another, and who would themselves be free from all the well-known animosities, predilections, and prejudices which prevail in a limited neighbourhood, and from the exhibition of which even the sacred precincts of a court of justice are not always exempt, and by whose presence the proper etiquette and decent ceremony of such a court would be more duly observed and maintained.

Thirdly. It surely must be of great advantage to the administration of justice at sessions, that the advocates whose duty it is, and whose disposition it ought to be, to give assistance to the bench in the performance of its arduous and important functions, should have an opportunity of imbibing legal principles at the fountain-head, and by their attendance at Westminster, and by constant communication with hundreds of their professional brethren, should be familiar with the judgment of the Courts, and, which is of little less importance, with the opinions of the more eminent members of the profession, on difficult points of law and practice, and should thus be able with facility to resolve difficulties and disentangle embarrassments which would otherwise appear insurmountable.

I have hitherto only considered this question as it affects the due administration of justice, and that in an incomplete and imperfect manner; but I find I am trespassing at too great length upon your space, and shall therefore, for the present, conclude my remarks upon this branch of the subject, however crude and unfinished they may appear. I think it would not be difficult to shew that it is for the interest of the attorneys themselves, that at sessions, as elsewhere, the duties of counsel and attorney should be kept separate and distinct. But this must be reserved for a future occasion.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

AN INDIFFERENT SPECTATOR.

SUPPRESSIO VERI OF "THE TIMES."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The publication of my note of the 25th ult. in your valuable journal, was the first public notice respecting Serjeant Talfourd and the Times. Although aware of many of the facts, I was, nevertheless, desirous that, instead of my stating them, you should use your own means of inquiry. The "press" will, I trust, universally stigmatize the unworthy conduct of the "leading journal." The strong, but just, language of indignation in your observations in Saturday's paper, will command the respect and admiration of your readers, and be responded to throughout the literary and professional world. Will the "Leviathan" condescend to answer? Will there be a denial of the facts, as far as regards what was done upon the Oxford Circuit? And will it be denied that the same course is being pursued in London?

Motives for the course pursued will be suggested if the Times do not explain or deny, or give some reason for their conduct. It is accordingly said that other facts exist in connection with that paper and the Oxford Circuit.

The treasurer of the Times was formerly a barrister belonging to the Oxford Circuit. His son is one of the editors of that newspaper. His intimate friend is a leader on the Oxford Circuit. Whilst the names of Serjeant Talfourd and other counsel are omitted, is that ever the case with him?

This gentleman is he who makes a "most able speech," a "most powerful address to the jury," and is reported to be the person most likely to be the next new judge,—according to the Times!! I refer to what has been continually seen in the columns of the Times. Surely it is unfortunate, to say the least, for that paper to have suppressed Serjeant Talfourd's name in the reports of cases from the Oxford Circuit, if the Times' especial friend be a leader upon the same circuit? I call it unfortunate, for there are persons who will suggest motives if these facts be true. Tl why not deny the statement? Will the Times do ?

But this system of favou reporting is carried on extensively elsewhere than pon the Oxford Circuit. With a little more leisure at my command, I may possibly communicate some curious facts, which are already known in Westminster Hall, and are exposing both silk and stuff gownsmen to severe animadversion.

It is said, the Times boasts that it made Baron Platt a judge! Was it because his father, as well as himself, was a shareholder in that paper?

Your obedient servant,

A Subscriber.

"To Mr. Harrison, Handley."

To this I sent the following:—

No. 2. (Copy.)

"Chesterfield, April 23, 1845.

"Gentlemen,—Your letter to Mr. Harrison, demanding payment of the sum of 1*l*. 15s. has been handed to me. I have looked carefully through the 'Law List,' but do not find your names therein. This being the case, I should much like to know by what authority you make this demand.

"Should I not be correct in my surmise—namely, that you are not members of the legal profession—a note from you to that effect will prevent my forwarding a copy of your communication to the editor of the Law Times for insertion next week.

"I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant,

"Edward L. Darwin.

"Messrs. Beckett and Sons, 16, Norfolk-row, Sheffield."

This morning brought the following:—

"16, Norfolk-row, Sheffield, April 24, 1845.

"Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 23rd, I beg to state that we were directed by Mr. Thomas Whittaker (trading assignee of James Seaton, an insolvent) to apply to Mr. Harrison.

"We are not solicitors, but agents, or collectors, and if our letters do not take effect, we then sue in the law courts. The reason for our writing is, to save the party owing the money to any estate (we have to collect for) unnecessary expense. We might have entered Mr. Harrison in the law court at Eckington at once, but thought it better to apply.

FLINTSHIRE SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In your paper of Saturday last, in an article headed "Flintshire Quarter Sessions," you say that "not uncalled for complaints were made of the letter of Mr. Denton to the Chairman of the Sessions in which some needless and very unjust aspersion were cast upon the attorneys." I beg, therefo , that you will, in fairness to myself and the Profession to which I have the honour to belong, insert that letter in your next paper. The part of my letter which I apprehend your comments are upon, was intended to apply, and appears on the face of the letter to be applicable, only to those attorneys who entertain feelings in common with those pub ly expressed by Mr. Horne, viz. that the attorneys would offer every annoyance in their power to the counsel, and that they would not bring cases into court, but would refer every thing. The latter part of the letter is as follows:—"In each of the counties of England, as they from time to time, in the progress of events, gave the preference to barristers in their courts, the major part of the attorneys, and those the most respectable, approved of the change, which was opposed by the minority, more particularly the very small number who had been usually employed as advocates by their brother attorneys; so that the majority of their own branch of the Profession even, were not satisfied with their mode of transacting the business. This also will probably be found to be the case in the county of Denbigh." The part of my letter complained of is therefore plainly not applicable to the majority of the attorneys, and those the most respectable.

I am, Sir, &c.

LITHOGRAPHING FORMS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In the Law Times of the 3rd instant you ote a case, Ex parte Ivimey, and say thereunder, "Orders of the Lord Chancellor may be lithographed."

This is not a correct report I had presented a lithographed memorial of a deed to be registered at the Middlesex Register Office for Deeds, &c. The registrar refused to receive it, on the ground that the ...morial, by 7 Anne, c. 20, should be in writing. I applied for a mandamus, and the opinion of the Court was, that the registrar ought to have received it.

As the decision may be of importance to practitioners, I have thought it right to state it plainly.

I am, &c.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"J. R." (Bideford) thus writes on the Transfer of Property Act.

The Transfer of Property Act having put an end to the practice of taking agreements for the occupation of land operating as actual demises on unstamped paper, by declaring them to be agreements for leases only, without providing a substitute, by reducing the stamps on leases in small cases, considerable inconvenience is felt in those cases for want of the power of distress. To remedy this it has been suggested that agreements for leases only may be taken on 2s. 6d. stamps, under which the tenant may be permitted to enter, and that a special power may be given to distrain for the rent. The opinion of your readers is requested on the point, and an approved form of such an agreement.

Another plan, which is applicable to terms of three years only, is to reduce the terms of the holding into writing, and to read them over to the tenant in the presence of a competent witness, who should subscribe a memorandum of the fact and of the tenant's expression of his satisfaction, as in the case of a recognizance; and a memorandum may be given him of what he has agreed to. This, of course, would be a parol demise, the terms being proved by the witness using the memorandum to refresh his memory, or as containing a record of what the tenant had verbally assented to.

After all, the best plan would be to insert a clause in the amended Transfer of Property Act which Lord Lyndhurst promised, reducing the stamp duty on leases under 20*l*. a year to 2s. 6d. In the new Stamp Duties Bill, brought in by Spring Rice when Chancellor of the Exchequer, this, if I remember rightly, was the amount there fixed. Will you, Mr. Editor, attend to this?

TAWELL'S CASE.

SOME REMARKS ON THE SOURCES OF ERROR IN THE MEDICAL EVIDENCE AT THE LATE TRIAL.

By H. LETHEBY, M.B.

Lecturer on Chemistry at the London Hospital.

(For the Law Times.)

It happens too frequently, when medical men are called upon to give evidence in criminal cases, that they place the most implicit reliance upon the reports and opinions which are contained in our works on legal medicine, never considering that it is their duty to confine themselves entirely to such facts as may have come within their own experience; or that if it is necessary to seek for any further information, that they should always refer to original authorities. This system of things, to say nothing of its irregularity, is open to every source of error; for, in the first place, there is scarcely any medical witness who does not from the very beginning form his own opinion of the case—he is anxious to maintain this opinion; and if he is permitted to ransack every second-hand author who may happen to come in his way, he will maintain this opinion, for he will take care to collect every little point which tells upon his side, while he becomes regardless of a whole volume of evidence that may be considered against him. And again, every one who is accustomed to glean from documentary testimony knows the facility with which a fact may be distorted. In the next place, the very authors whom they have consulted, and upon whom they place so much reliance, might have been partisans on the side of some particular theory, in support of which they have not hesitated to modify the facts of the case; or the reports themselves might have been wrongly quoted or they might be put together in such a slovenly manner that any meaning could be attached to them. And these are not imaginary difficulties; some of our medico-legal works are full of them, while they contain reports derived from reports, in which the originals have never been consulted or perhaps even seen; errors, therefore, have been multiplied upon errors, until the confusion has become endless. Add to this the quibbles which they give rise to, the loopholes for villany, the botheration of judge and jury, the perversion of justice, and the disgrace which the medical witnesses bring upon themselves and their profession; and then, let me ask, is any criticism too severe upon the system, or upon the authors who have given rise to it? I question if there was ever a case upon record in which these difficulties have been more completely illustrated than in the recent one of Tawell. Here were three medical witnesses, who undertook to swear that the woman Hart died from the effects of prussic acid; and yet, when they were cross-examined, they declared that, as far as their experience went, they were totally ignorant of the action of this poison; and, when questioned as to the source of their knowledge, they admitted that it was derived entirely from the reports of certain cases which they had read in Christison and Taylor—nay, more, that they had founded their opinions upon two of these cases, and there would be no difficulty in shewing why they had chosen these. Could any thing, therefore, be more justifiable than a search into the accuracy of these two cases, knowing that not only the witnesses, but the judge and advocates, and probably the jury also, would be guided by them? Now the result of that inquiry is very well known, for it was the occasion of a most severe, but at the same time deserved, criticism on the part of the defence. Mr. Taylor, however, does not entertain the same opinion of its fairness, and he has written in the Guy's Hospital Reports, as well as in the Law Times for March 29, some subtle remarks for the purpose of shewing that his quotations were correct; and, in order to give them a colouring of truth, and, perhaps, importance, he has favoured us with some little bits of German, snatched from the middle of sentences, and cunningly and carefully preserved from all context. He should know that this is neither fair nor creditable, and, in reference to a subject of so much importance, upon which a question of life or death may hereafter turn, it is also most dishonest; it would have been much wiser to correct the errors in his Manual himself than to leave the business open to another, who may, perhaps, undertake it with a little asperity. To shew, however, that Mr. Taylor has no reason to complain of Mr. Kelly's criticism, I will refer to the questions as t appeared at the trial.

Two questi ns of very great importance arose. The first was with regard to the odour of prussic acid, and whether it was not by far the most delicate test of its presence. This the medical witnesses denied, contrary to the opinion of Orfila and other great toxicologists, contrary to a host of other cases reported in their own authors, and shewing that the odour was present in bodies some time after death. These three medical witnesses pick out two cases from Taylor and Christison, and without seeing that their authorities contradict themselves, they come to the opinion that the odour is not a delicate test, and that it may be altogether wanting. Here, however, are the reports and the originals:—

"Neither was there any odour in the blood in Mertzdorff's case, although it was strong in the stomach."—Christison, 4th ed. p. 773.

With reference to the same case Mr. Taylor says:—

"The odour was not perceptible in the body of a youth who had been killed by three and a half drachms of the acid, and whose body was inspected thirty hours after death."—Manual, p. 252.

While in the original of Mertzdorff it runs thus:—

"Im Magen und dem oberen Theile des Dünndarmes war ein grau gefärbter, säuerliche riechender und den, eigenthümlichen stechenden Geruch der Ittnerschen Blausäure, nicht aber den dir bitteren Mandeln, verratheuder speisebrei von dickflussiger Consistenz zu finden."—Archiv für Medizinische Erfahrung, ii. 1823, p. 57.

Here are contradictions enough in all conscience, and yet Mr. Taylor remarks that his account is substantially correct, and that it is plain that Mr. Kelly was misled by trusting to a French or an English version. (Law Times, March 29, 503.) Now, how Mr. Taylor can perceive so much I am at a loss to imagine; for supposing that we had referred to a French version, we should have found this literal translation of the sentence:—"L'estomac et la partie supérieure de l'intestine contenaient une épaisse bouillie chymeuse, grise, acide, et qui répandait l'odeur de l'acide prussique d'Ittner, mais non celle des amandes amères" (Journal Complementaire, tom. xvii.

p. 369); and if Mr. Kelly had been referred to Christison, who is a much higher authority than Mr. Taylor, he would have had another report almost as near the truth; and I do think that the charge of misquotation comes with a very bad grace from one who, to judge from his book, had never seen the original at all before this criticism was passed upon him; and even now, after having journeyed to the College of Surgeons, and consulted the archive, he says that "he doubts whether the alleged odour in the stomach would have been perceived by one person out of twenty." This does not sound very much like the arguments of a medical jurist; he has no reason to doubt the matter at all. Mertzdorff says there was an odour of prussic acid, and Mr. Taylor should take this as the truth. I must explain here what Mertzdorff means by saying there was no odour of bitter almonds. He is reporting two cases of poisoning, one by bitter almonds (A), and a second (B) by prussic acid, and he is shewing the peculiarities of each; hence it is that he frequently draws a distinction between the effects of the one and the other, and I am surprised that Mr. Taylor should take advantage of this to aid his subtleties and mock reasoning upon the question.

With respect to the second case, that of the seven Parisian epileptics, to which the medical witness alluded, Christison says, in speaking of the odour, that it was not present "in the blood or any other part of the body in the Parisian epileptics" (p. 773); and again: "the contents of the stomach have, in every instance, had a strong hydrocyanic odour, except in the cases of the Parisian epileptics" (p. 774). Orfila, however, who was one of the physicians appointed by government to inquire into this case, says: "Nulle partie n'exhalait l'odeur d'amandes amères et n'offrait des signes de putréfaction, et dans tous les cadavres existait une roideur cadavérique prononcée." And to this he adds a note: "Nous constatâmes pourtant cette odeur huit jours après la mort, M. Gay Lussac et moi, dans les liquides trouvés dans l'estomac." Traité de Toxicologie, p. 285.) This is confirmed by Devergie, who says, "Aucun organe ne développa l'odeur d'amandes amères: cette odeur ne fut pas sensible pour MM. Adelon, Marc, et Marjolin, dans les matières contenues dans l'estomac. Cependant MM. Gay Lussac et Orfila l'ont constatée dans ces substances huit jours après l'ouverture du corps; ce qui prouve que, dans un grand nombre de circonstances, il faut une très grande habitude pour l'apprécier." And that this may be regarded as authentic, he just before says, "Ces faits sont extraits d'une note manuscrite donnée à M. Adelon, l'un des médecins experts dans cette affaire, par l'élève qui a soigné ces malades au moment des accidents. M. Adelon a bien voulu me la communiquer." (Devergie, Médecine Légale, iii. p. 686.) Mr. Taylor, however, was not alluded to in the trial upon this point, for he had wisely omitted all mention of it in his book; but since then he has committed himself by saying, "Most medical jurists agree with the statement made by Dr. Christison and myself, that there was no odour of prussic acid in the contents of the stomach." He is referring to the Parisian epileptics (Guy's Hospital Reports, No. 5, p. 73); so that it becomes evident he had somewhere stated that there was no odour.

And now, with reference to the second question which arose at the trial, namely, what was the smallest quantity of the poison which would kill? Going upon one of these cases, the medical witnesses declared, "that ·7 of a grain was sufficient to destroy life, for it killed the seven epileptics;" so, indeed, Christison and Taylor led them to believe, and yet, when the originals were referred to, it turns out to be more than one grain, at the very lowest computation, and the probability is that it was more even than this, for Orfila says, in speaking of the dose, that it was "exorbitante et que l'homme le plus robuste ne saurait supporter sans périr presque immédiatement" (p. 285); so that here again they were in error, and who would imagine from Taylor's report of Mertzdorff's case, when he says that he took three and a half drachms of acid, that it was really a quantity exceeding two ounces of our pharmacopœial prussic acid? These are, however, the errors of only two of Mr. Taylor's cases; what they would amount to in the whole book God only knows; and I am sorry that it should have fallen to my lot to have pointed even these errors out; but the credit of our profession, as well as the confidence of the law, demands that they should be corrected, and I hope that, without further quibble or discussion, Mr. Taylor will undertake the task, or I shall consider it my duty to wade through his book, and point out all the errors myself. At the present time it is not worthy of the confidence of the law, and with respect to the good or harm it may do our own profession, I will but quote the editorial remarks upon this very case, which appeared in the Lancet, for April 5. "A more perfect demonstration cannot be desired of the evil of trusting for information to compilations and manuals, those short and easy roads to knowledge, which is at present, we fear, greatly prevalent amongst practitioners, and we trust it will excite many to a more extensive course of reading, and the addition to their bookshelves of higher and better authorities."

THE LAWS OF FRANCE.

No. VII.

CIVIL DISTRICT COURTS.

1. These courts form a jurisdiction established in each district, to take cognizance of all civil cases, with the exception of those which, according to special laws, come under the jurisdiction of other courts, as, for instance, those reserved for the Juges de Paix, of which we have already spoken, and others of which we shall treat hereafter.

All kinds of contests are submitted to these courts, —they take cognizance of all personal suits, moveable or immoveable, with appeal, whatever may be the amount of the litigation.

But they pronounce without appeal only up to the sum of 1,500f. in a moveable personal case, or up to 60f. of rent, or amount of lease, in immoveable suits. And this competency has only existed for a few years;(a) formerly it was only up to 1,000f. and 50f. of rent;(b) it has been augmented in consequence of the increase of value in all things.

All these cases are judged summarily, and with little cost; but it is impossible to enumerate all the suits which have been or may be submitted to this jurisdiction, for one must include all causes arising from men's passions or interests, from the questions of family paternity and inheritance to the most humble demands, provided they are beyond the jurisdiction of the justices of peace.

These courts, as we have already observed in the commencement of this series, take cognizance of the appeals of the justices of peace; also of commercial affairs, in places where there are no special courts of commerce, of which we shall speak presently; and we may add, that when a reciprocated claim(c) or a compensatory demand, is made within the limits of the jurisdiction of these courts without appeal, the whole case is judged without appeal; but if one of the claims exceeds the above-mentioned limits, the Court pronounces on all with appeal.

Finally, litigants cannot take proceedings before these courts without the agency of attorneys.

Such is the jurisdiction of the civil district courts, —their formation is as follows:—

The legal constitution of these courts requires the presence of a recorder and a member of the public ministry. The number of judges varies from three to twelve, divided into several sections or chambers, according to the number of cases. Certain courts only have one chamber, others three, and the Court of Paris reckons ten.

The judgments of all Courts of First Instance cannot be given by less than three judges, under penalty of being annulled;(d) but they can be given by more. There are, moreover, a certain number of supplementary judges (juges suppléans), selected from the bar and named by the King, who supply the place of the official judges when these are absent. When a court cannot be formed either with official or supplementary judges, as in cases of rejection, the law allows the president of the Court to appoint assistant-judges from the bar, beginning with the senior barrister, until one accepts the office. As soon as a sentence is given, and it must be rendered publicly, the judges are immediately disseized of the affair, and even in case of error they are unable to rectify it. It then comes under the jurisdiction of the judges of appeal, and in case the judgment has been given without appeal, a special proceeding, indicated in the Code of Civil Proceedings, must be pursued. This code contains the formalities to be fulfilled in all sorts of cases, the observance of delays, &c.; and if it is too complicated, at least it is complete.

Secondly.—Similar to the Civil District Courts are the Tribunals of Commerce, which are also courts of first instance; they form a special jurisdiction for tradespeople only, that is to say, for those who have commercial dealings.

The principal rules of their jurisdiction, to be found in our Commercial Code, are as follow:—

Art. 631. The Tribunals of Commerce take cognizance of:

All contests relating to engagements and transactions between merchants, tradespeople, and bankers.

Of all contests relating to commercial deeds between all persons.

The law considers as commercial dealings:

All purchases of goods and merchandize to be sold again either as they were bought or manufactured and worked, or even to let them out for use.

All undertakings of manufactories, of commission, or of conveyance by land or by water.

All undertakings of contracts, agencies, offices, public sale-rooms, and public theatres.

All transactions of exchange, bank and brokerage.

All transactions of public banks.

All obligations between merchants, tradespeople, and bankers.

And all bills and remittances sent from place to place between all persons.

The law considers also as commercial dealings:

All contracts for building, and all purchases, sales, and resales of vessels for inland or outward navigation.

All naval expeditions.

All purchase or sale of rigging, appurtenances, and stores.

All freightage or hire; all loans; all assurances and other contracts concerning maritime commerce.

All treaties and agreements for the wages or hire of crews.

All engagements with seafaring men for the use of trading vessels.

The Tribunals of Commerce shall also take cognizance of:

Suits against factors, merchants' clerks, or their attendants in cases only concerning the trade of the merchant to whom they are attached.

Of bills made by receivers, pay-masters, tax-gatherers, and other functionaries accountable for the public funds.

Finally, they shall take cognizance of:

Every thing concerning failures, &c.

They judge without appeal to the amount of 1,500f. like the Civil District Courts.

For judgments, the litigation of which exceeds this amount, the appeal is lodged before the Cour Royale belonging to the jurisdiction in which the court is situated.

The appeal must be lodged within three months after the judgment has been signified.

The intention of the legislature in instituting the Courts of Commerce was to create a jurisdiction to be promptly, one may say, paternally administered, judging in equity as much as in right, and accordingly the simplest forms of procedure are prescribed.

The ministry of attorneys is not required before these Courts; the parties appear themselves, or by delegate. Foreigners are not subjected to bail, judicatum solvi, as before the District Courts.

In cases which may require speed, the president of the Court can authorize an adjournment from one day to another, or from one hour to the other, and a seizure of moveable goods; he can, according to the urgency of the case, subject the plaintiff to find bail or to prove a sufficient solvency.

The ordinances of the president shall be executory, independent of opposition or appeal.

In naval affairs, where the parties are non-domiciled, and in cases relating to rigging, victualling crews, and refitting of vessels ready to sail, and in all other matters which are urgent and temporary, the appointment of a day or of an hour may be given without a warrant, and the default may be judged immediately.

All summonses given on board to the person assigned are valid.

The plaintiff can summon, at his option—

Before the Court belonging to the domicile of the defendant;

Before that in the district of which the promise was made and the merchandize delivered;

Before that in the district of which the payment was to have been effectuated; whereas, in all other than commercial cases, it is always before the Court belonging to the domicile of the defendant, or to the spot on which is situated the property, if it is a case of immoveables, that the parties are summoned.

The Courts of Commerce can decree the provisional execution of their judgments, independent of the appeal, and without bail, where the right is not attacked, or a previous condemnation not appealed against; in other cases, the provisional execution shall only be performed after the plaintiff has been subjected to find bail or prove a sufficient solvency.

The Courts of Commerce do not take cognizance of the execution of their judgments; immediately their decision is pronounced, they are disseized of the case; and if any difficulty arises in the execution of the judgment—as, for instance, in the seizure of furniture, or in an imprisonment—it comes under the jurisprudence of the Civil Court, for it is no longer an act of commerce.

Such are the principal tenets of our laws on commercial procedure.

The judges of the Courts of Commerce are merchants, elected from amongst the most eminent tradespeople, a list of whom is annually made out by government agents, and composed of the heads of the longest established and most respectable houses domiciled in the district to which the court belongs.

The number and situation of these courts are not determined by the law. The appointment of them belongs to the king, who, according to the situation of each town, and to the extent and importance of its commerce, decides upon the establishment of a court. In towns where there are no courts of commerce, their office is fulfilled by the Civil District Court, which exactly follows the forms of the commercial procedure.

The district of each Tribunal of Commerce is the same as that of the Civil Court in the jurisdiction of which it is placed; and if there are several tribunals of commerce in the jurisdiction of a single civil court, a special district is assigned to each.

Each Tribunal of Commerce is composed of a president, judges, and supplementary judges; the number of judges cannot be under two, or above fourteen, not including the president. The number of supernumeraries is proportioned to the functions of the office.

A regulation from the public administration fixes for each court the number of judges and supernumeraries.

Any merchant can be named judge or supplementary judge, if he is thirty years of age, and has been in trade and honourably fulfilled his calling for five years. The president must be forty years of age, and can only be selected from amongst retired judges, including those who have belonged to the existing courts, and even the consular judges(e) of tradespeople.

The election is made by individual ballot, (f) by the absolute majority of votes; and at the election of the president, the person is announced before going to the scrutiny.

The president is renewed every two years, also the Court by moiety.

The office of commercial judges is merely honorary, and before entering upon their functions, they take the oath before the Cour Royale.

The Courts of Commerce come under the authority and inspection of the Minister of Justice.

Thirdly and lastly, Independent of all courts and judges, litigants have the right of referring their contests to one or several umpires, as they may choose; the sentence rendered executory by a decree from the President of the Court of Commerce, if it is a commercial affair; or from the President of the Civil Court, if it is not a commercial affair, has the same force as a judgment issued in the usual course of justice. But there is a species of contests necessarily submitted to arbitrators, and these are disagreements in commercial partnerships. This is called a forced arbitration. The legislature considered that the nature of contests between partners was such as to dread the publicity of courts, and that the verification of books and papers relating to trade required a special tribunal.

The arbitrators are named by the parties, and if they cannot agree, they are appointed by the Tribunal of Commerce. They meet at the house of one of them, draw up the action, in which they are compelled to describe the articles in litigation, under penalty of invalidity; they take note of the sayings and of the writings produced by the parties, and then give their judgment. The sentence can only be executed after having been invested with the authority d'exsequatur of the President of the Court of Commerce, and then becomes a positive judgment, and liable to appeal as all other judgments.

The office of arbitrators only lasts three months, unless the parties consent to prolong it. The arbitration is also broken up by the death of one of the umpires, or an impediment to his attendance, or by a difference of opinion where they are not empowered to take a third arbitrator.

Once having undertaken and commenced the case, the umpires cannot retire or be rejected; they are compelled, under penalty of damages, to fulfil their mission. Voluntatis est enim suscipere mandatum, necessitatis consumere.

(e) Juges-consuls. (f) Scrutin individuel.

In case of a divided opinion, each of the arbitrators draws up his sentence, and the third arbitrator is obliged to adopt one or other of the opinions.

Arbitrators judge according to the rules of strict right, unless the parties have given them the power to judge as friendly compromisers (amiables compositeurs), when they decide in equity.

Contests between partners are so frequent, that arbitrations are very numerous, and umpires are chosen from all classes of society, but especially among barristers.

It is admitted jurisprudence that arbitrators are entitled to fees, which they fix themselves, and in case of exaggerated demands the parties can refer to the Court of Commerce.

Our next article on French Judicature will treat of the Cours Royales.—I remain, Sir, &c.

No. VIII.

Mr. Beaumont, formerly a Member of Parliament, v. Miss Burgess, ex-Governess of his children. Forgery of 300,000f.—Drafts seized in court upon the demand of the public ministry.

Mr. Beaumont, formerly member of the House of Commons, is a man of large property even for England, and his immense wealth permits him to hold an elevated station in society.

He has often been exposed to impositions of all kinds; this case is an instance of the frauds that have frequently been practised upon him.

A Miss Burgess had obtained the situation of governess in his family; she was well-informed, but not being perfect in languages and music, she was left in Paris to study while Mr. Beaumont travelled in Italy with his family. Miss Burgess had no notion of living like a school-girl; her apartment, Rue Miromenil, was sumptuously furnished; her establishment was worthy of a dependant of Mr. Beaumont.

To keep up these splendid appearances, Mr. Beaumont was in the habit of sending her drafts worded thus: "Messrs. Glyn, Halifax, Mills, and Co. Please to pay to the bearer 500*l.* sterling.

"Beaumont."

With these bills payable at sight, Miss Burgess had only to present herself at any bankers, and as the signature of Mr. Beaumont was well known everywhere as being highly respectable, she discounted them at Messrs. Malachy Daly's, Kef de Rothschild, Charles Lafitte's, and others.

The temptation became too great, and Miss Burgess took it into her head to counterfeit a signature so well honoured everywhere.

She thought, said Mr. Beaumont's counsel, that she should never have a better opportunity of securing herself a dowry, and accordingly she realized 300,000f. by forged bills to that amount, which she negotiated upon different bankers in Paris.

Unfortunately for her, she proceeded too rapidly. Had she been content to follow the homœopathic system, and rob by small doses, she might have gone on for a length of time; it was well known that she was governess in Mr. Beaumont's family; it was impossible to suppose fraud; and as Mr. Beaumont's excessive generosity was also well known, no one would have been astonished at seeing a number of his checks.

But the facility with which she succeeded, and probably her covetous propensities, induced her to operate in the wholesale way, and this proceeding opened the eyes of the bankers and of Mr. Beaumont himself. He began by writing to all the Paris bankers, stating he did not intend they should be answerable, and with regard to Miss Burgess, he acted still more generously and nobly. He wrote thus to one of his friends:—

We have discovered several drafts on my bankers. Messrs. Glyn, Halifax, Mills, and Co. immediately sent to Mr. Daly, banker, Paris, and Mr. Daly recognized the drafts as coming from the governess. When he informed Miss Burgess that the bill was forged, she denied, at the same time she wrote to me acknowledging the fact, begging me not to punish her, but to say that I had made the mistake.

I conclude she may have forged to the amount of eight or ten thousand pounds; but I shall not punish, only let her confess, and say what she has done with the money. How infamous!

And in another letter:—

I had provided for her, and on that account I had considered it impossible for her to forge my name for money she could not want. But we now see the result of covetousness!

She has written to Daly a letter, of which she has sent me a copy, full of poetry, nonsense, threats of suicide, and praises of me.

The friends and admirers of Mr. Beaumont acted according to his wishes, and did not denounce the guilty one to the Procureur General.

But impunity increased her boldness, and notwithstanding her confession, which is in our hands, she has so far relied on Mr. Beaumont's unequalled generosity as to proceed against him in England for a breach of agreement.(a)

Mr. Beaumont was absent from London, his counsel simply stated that the immoral conduct of the plaintiff had authorized the breach.

Serjeant Talfourd replied that the immorality required to be defined, since, according to some, balls and theatres were immoral, the polka according to others. In short, Miss Burgess's demand was admitted, by reason of the immorality not being proved, and a jury will soon have to award damages to the plaintiff.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Beaumont's French advisers have urged him not to suffer Miss Burgess to triumph any longer over his generous forbearance. They have discovered that the sum of 2,799f. deposited by Miss Burgess, is still in the hands of M. Daly, banker.

They have made opposition to this sum, and have summoned M. Malachy Daly and Miss Burgess to surrender it into their hands.

"I regret," added Mr. Beaumont's advocate, "to justify our claim and enlighten foreign justice as to the morality of Miss Burgess, to be obliged to say that we require also to have possession of the forged drafts which are in the hands of Mr. Daly's counsel."

M. Malachy Daly's advocate said, "You see, gentlemen, Mr. Daly's situation. H[e w]ould have wished to return to Mr. Beaumont the funds in his possession. His objection does not arise from any denial on his part as to the right of his claim. Far from it, he knows his generous conduct and Miss Burgess's guilt. The latter had entreated forgiveness, she had endeavoured, by feigning repentance, to disarm Mr. Beaumont's just severity. Since which she has been audacious enough to sue him for breach of engagement. Evidently she would not have dared to take such proceeding, had she not hoped, from his past forbearance, that he would rather allow himself to be condemned than reveal her immoral conduct.

However this may be, we demand the acknowledgment of the Court of our offer, as our release, to remit to Mr. Beaumont the sum deposited by Miss Burgess.

"We are entirely of the opinion of the plaintiff," said the Procureur du Roi, "but another object induces us to say a few words. It results from the explanations from the different parties, that Miss Burgess has been guilty of several forgeries.

"Mr. Beaumont's forbearance must not influence the vigilance of the public ministry. We require the forged drafts to be deposited at the Register Office, and we hope Mr. Beaumont will act as he ought."

The Court admitted the demand, and ordered the deposit of the forged bills.

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS,

By PROFESSOR CAREY.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE III.

Simple contracts—Express and implied contracts—Considerations—Executed and executory contracts.

CONTRACTS of that class denominated simple contracts, may, in most cases, be created without writing. In some cases a writing is necessary; but whenever a contract is in writing, whether the writing be required by the Statute of Frauds, or not, the written instrument alone must be looked to in order to ascertain the agreement between the parties. What was said by Sir Edward Coke in the Countess of Rutland's case with respect to deeds, is thus applicable to all written agreements whatever. It would be inconvenient if matters of writing, made without previous consideration, should give rise to an agreement between parties, and should be controlled by the averment of parties, to be proved by uncertain testimony. (Gordon v. Lord Nugent, 5 B. & A. 64.) The point ultimately decided in that case was rather more remote from the general principle. By the general rules of the common law, if there be a contract which is reduced into writing, verbal evidence is not allowed to be given of what passed before the written instrument was made, and during the time it was in a state of preparation, so as to vitiate or subtract from, or in any manner vary or qualify the written contract. There are two cases in which verbal evidence may be given to explain the meaning of a written contract; first, in the case of mercantile contracts, where the evidence of mercantile men is admitted to inform the Court what, according to mercantile usage, is understood by the terms employed in the contract. Thus where the word hundred is used, as applied to certain goods, verbal evidence is admissible to shew that, by the usage of that trade, 120 was meant. Secondly, where there is a latent ambiguity; if the ambiguity be patent; if a doubt arises from the instrument itself, the Court must construe it as well as it can; but if it is latent, evidence may be given to clear it up. A latent ambiguity is one which the words themselves do not raise; it is raised by something else. If in any will a bequest is made to John So-and-so, and there are two persons of that name, that is a latent ambiguity; and evidence may be given to shew which of those two Johns was the one intended by the testator; but if the ambiguity be patent—if there is a doubt on the instrument respecting the construction of it, it is for the Court to take the instrument itself and to ascertain, in the best way it can, what is the construction in point of law to be put upon the instrument as it stands. It frequently happens that the assent of a party is not expressly given, either by words or signs, or written instruments; but the circumstances are such that his assent is implied. (3 Blackst. 162.) "A second class of implied contracts are such as do not arise from the express determination of any court, or the positive direction of any statute; but from natural reason and the just construction of law, which class extends to all presumptive undertakings or assumpsits; which, though never perhaps actually made, yet constantly arise from this general implication and intendment of the courts of judicature, that every man hath engaged to perform what his duty or justice requires."

To take the instances given by Blackstone; "If I employ a person to do any business for me, or to perform any work; or if I take out wares from a tradesman, without any agreement of price; in all these cases there is an implied promise on my part. In the last case, the tradesman is a person whose business it is to sell the goods. In the two former instances, it must be understood that the persons I employ are those who, under the circumstances, would not undertake the business or work without being paid for the employment. If I ask a friend to carry a parcel, there is no claim for remuneration. If I ask a porter or errand-boy to do it, the case is different. Again, it is clear, in going to a tradesman for his wares, I have no intention to request a favour of him, but to deal with him in the way of his business. It is thus that he understands me. If I go into a shop and order goods, I as much enter into a contract to pay, as if I had promised to do so in the most express terms." The reason given by Blackstone for this liability does not appear to me to be the real reason in this instance. It is not simply because the obligation is such as reason and justice would expect, but because it was the intention and understanding of both parties at the time of the transaction. It was the intention of both parties, so well understood by ordinary practice, that it did not require to be expressed. The deduction drawn by Blackstone is equally incorrect. The obligation I incur is not one which the law presumes; it is one which I have incurred by my own consent, and differs in no respect from the obligation I incur by any the most express form of contract. My liability is exactly the same, if I say to a tradesman, "Send that to my house;" as if I say, "How much does it cost?" and when he says "So much," I say, "I will pay it you." In the one case I pay a price fixed at the time; in the other case I pay the demand that is made on me, provided it is not unreasonable in its amount. The views that I have here explained are illustrated in Daires v. Davies (9 Car. & P. 87). A. and his wife lodged with his brother, and A. assisted the brother in his business. After a time, A. brought an action against the brother to obtain remuneration for the services rendered to him. The brother answers the claim by charging for board and lodging as a set-off. It was held that there could be no claim in respect of the services on the one hand, or for the board and lodging on the other, unless the parties originally came together on the terms that they should pay and be paid. The intention originally was, no doubt, there, that no charge should be made for the board and lodging on the one hand, and that the party receiving the accommodation should assist the other in his business; there being no intention to create a contract at the time, none was, in fact, created, and none could be implied from the circumstances.

In general, the difference between an express and an implied contract is in the mode of substantiating it. An express contract is proved by an actual agreement; an implied contract by circumstances only; as by the general course of dealing between the parties. But wherever a contract is once proved, the consequences resulting from the breach of it must be the same whether it be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. (Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & A. 423.) The distinction between the two species of contracts is as to the mode of proof. The one is proved by the express words used between the parties, the other by circumstances shewing that the parties intended to contract. When I take his goods from a tradesman, an undertaking on my part to pay the price is inferred from the circumstance itself. Where there has been a long course of dealing between me and another person, on certain terms, if I continue the dealing, my assent to the usual terms would be inferred. If by the custom of trade there is a particular usage, and I engage in these transactions, knowing the usage, it would be inferred that I had consented to be bound by it. In the time of Blackstone, when a sale or other contract was implicitly contracted, that is to say, without the price being specifically named, it was usual to sue on a quantum meruit, or a quantum valebat. Where, in consideration, &c. the party promised to pay, &c. it was usual to have two counts, one stating the promise to pay a certain price, the other stating the promise to pay as much as the subject-matter was worth. This second count is now thrown out of use by the rules of pleading, which forbid more counts than one for one cause of action. There is another class of cases where a contract is said to be inferred or implied in law. The effect of a contract is thus created; but not only was there no consent expressly given, but the circumstances were such that any consent could not be supposed to be given; the legal relation not being created by the mutual understanding of the parties, but simply by force of law. For instance, where one man has had and received money belonging to another without giving any valuable consideration for it; where the law construes this to be money had and received to the use of the owner only, it implies that the person so receiving it promised and undertook to account for it to the proprietor, and if he unjustly retains it, an action of assumpsit lies for the breach of such implied promise, and he would be made to repay it, in damages equivalent to what he has detained. This is a very extensive and beneficial remedy applicable to almost every case where one party receives money which, ex æquo et bono, he ought to refund to another. So, money obtained, whether by imposition, extortion, or oppression, I may consider as money obtained by another to my use; or where the consideration on which it was given has totally failed. I have given him money for a certain object; for instance, to make a certain purchase; if the purchase is not made, the money in his hands is money that he has received for my use; and I claim it in an action for money had and received to my use. Or where any undue advantage is taken of the situation of the person paying money. This form of action received great sanction from Lord Mansfield, and was adopted in imitation of an action existing in the Roman law, called indebiti condictio. A certain form of action was called condictio, to which this belonged. Indebiti, that which is not due; indebiti condictio, the seeking to recover that which has been paid without being due. "Competit ei qui indebitum solvit, vel cujus nomine solutum est, in eum qui sive sciens sive ignorans non debitam solutionem recepit." The principle on which this rests is one frequently brought forward in the Roman law—"ne is qui indebitum accepit:" the man who has received money not due to him; "alieno damno locupletur fiat." This was a great maxim of the Roman law, that one man should not derive advantage to the loss of another. It was an obligatio quasi ex contractu, or, as Henecius terms it, "ex consensu a legislatore ob æquitatem ficto."

The party who had received the money never entered into a contract to pay it, and probably never intended any thing of the sort; but the law imposed on him a liability similar to that which he would have incurred if he had so contracted. This is very distinguishable from that class of cases cited by Blackstone, for he goes on beyond what I have read,—"The third species of implied assumpsit is where one has had and received money belonging to another without any valuable consideration given on the receiver's part; for the law construes this to be money had and received for the use of the owner only, and implies that the person so receiving promised and undertook to account for it to the true proprietor; and, if he unjustly detains it, an action on the case lies against him for the breach of such implied promise and undertaking; and he will be made to repair the owner in damages, equivalent to what he has detained in violation of such implied promise." A man is not liable for money laid out for his use unless he has sanctioned it: unless, in the language of pleading, it was done at his request; that is to say, his liability is the result of a contract, in point of fact, whether express or implied. That is not so in the case of money had and received for the use of another.

A man says,—"I have paid to another fifty pounds for you; pay me back." My answer is—"I did not authorize you to do it; you have done it of your own wrong." Unless I have authorized him, or unless, after it has been done, I sanction it, from which an authority will be implied, I am not bound to repay him the fifty pounds. Suppose he has paid money of his own wrong, and was not authorized to pay it, he will have an action for money had and received against the person to whom it was paid, provided I disapprove the payment. The same observation applies to a contract arising from a statement of account between two persons: when a balance has been struck, it constitutes a debt, the result of the previous dealings.

There is a sense in which, in all contracts not expressly made, the undertaking or promise is said to be implied. Originally, when money became due under a contract, the proper form of action was debt. That form of action was attended with this inconvenience, that the defendant could defeat it by waging his law. The action on the case had gradually been applied to that branch of executory contracts wherein one party claimed damages of another for his fraud and misconduct in not keeping his promise. This was done by an action on the case in assumpsit. The action on the case (founded on a trespass or tort originally) was relieved from the inconvenience resulting from the wager of law; and after a time it was applied not to executory contracts only, but even when a debt was created. Instead of suing in an action of debt, the creditor was allowed to sue the debtor in an action on the case in assumpsit, for the breach of the promise; and even if no promise had been made, he was allowed to allege a promise; which allegation could not be disputed. (Slade's case, 4 Rep. 505.) In the language of pleading, every debt implies a promise, so as to enable the creditor, in an action of assumpsit, to sue as for a breach of promise. If a tradesman has sold and delivered goods to another, he may sue in debt or assumpsit. The declaration in debt sets forth the claim as it exists; that the defendant was indebted in twenty pounds for goods sold and delivered, and by reason of the non-payment, the action ensues. If he sues in assumpsit, a promise must be averred; and then the declaration states that the defendant was indebted in twenty pounds for the goods, and, being so indebted, he promised to pay on request, but disregarded the promise. It is from following the language of pleading, rather than the nature of the transactions themselves, and from giving a general application to expressions which in the proper sense are confined to fictitious averments in actions of assumpsit, that Blackstone has been led to class together liabilities so different in their origin and character. In these cases it is not correct to say that a contract is implied. There is a debt created by the act of the parties: from the debt there is a promise to pay inferred in law. The promise is a mere fiction of law, and is only necessary with reference to actions of assumpsit. The debt itself is created independently of that fiction, and an action of debt will lie upon it. When he says, "The second class of contracts are such as do not arise from the express determination of any court, or the positive direction of any statute; but from natural reason, and the just construction of law"—the law implies no such thing; because, if that was not the understanding on which they came together, it will not be the result. It is not so with respect to money had and received, because the debt is not created by the consent of the parties, but merely by the operation of law. There is another species of implied contracts, which Blackstone has created, probably from the same mode of reasoning (2 Blackstone, 443). "There is one species of implied contracts which runs through, and is annexed to, all other contracts, conditions, and covenants, viz. that if I fail in my part of the agreement, I shall pay the other party such damages as he has sustained by such neglect or refusal." That which is here termed an implied contract is a legal liability, resulting on the breach of the contract, which has no more right to be denominated an implied contract than is a legal liability incurred by committing a tort. The two kinds of liabilities are precisely of the same nature. I enter into an engagement to pay a given sum of money on a certain consideration; I fail to do it; I am liable to an action; th man to whom I made the promise sues me, and recovers damages for my breach of contract. Blackstone says there is an implied contract to pay him those damages. The law, in the case of a breach of contract, compels the payment of damages, not as a matter of contract, but as a legal consequence, which has no more right to be denominated an implied contract than is the legal liability I incur by committing a tort. Supposing I assault a man, I am bound by law to make him reparation. I can be compelled to do so. But there is no consent on my part, or any thing like a consent on my part, to pay him any thing. There is no necessity for the legal fiction. It is quite clear that it is nothing more than a fiction. We all know that when a man has assaulted another he has no intention to pay him damages; it is the last thing he thinks of, and the last thing he consents to. ... the one is a contract, so is the other ... If, however, ... and if so, we are brought back again to the voluntary and involuntary contracts in the Treatise on Equity, the συναλλαγματα εκουσα and ακουσα of Aristotle.

We now proceed to treat of the consideration. In every contract, says Sir Edward Coke, there must be a quid pro quo; some motive on the one hand, for the thing to be done or forborne on the other—some consideration for the promise. Thus, in an ordinary contract for sale, if you sell me a horse for fifty pounds, the horse which I am to receive is the consideration for the price I am to pay. If one party makes a promise to another, without any consideration whatever, the promise is not binding. "A bargain contracted without consideration," says Lord Loughborough, "is a contradiction in terms, and cannot be enforced." Where a promise is made without any consideration, it is called a nudum pactum, and the doctrine of our law is often represented as being the same as the Roman law; but this is far from being the case. According to the Roman law, a pactum was a general term, including every kind of agreement or convention, whether capable of being legally enforced or not. Pacts were divided into two classes; the one those on which an action could be brought, the other those on which an action could not be brought. The pacts on which an action could be brought were of two kinds, the first, which from frequent use had acquired a specific name, and which had a specific form of action belonging to them; such was emptio venditio, a contract of sale, to which belonged the two forms of action, actio empti, and actio venditi. The other kind of pacts comprehended all agreements in which, though they had not acquired any specific name, nor had any form of action appropriated to them, yet there was a liability intended on the one hand, in consequence of something actually done on the other; any pact or agreement on which, in accordance with these rules, an action might be brought, was denominated a contract. Pacts of the first kind were called contractus nominati, pacts of the latter contractus innominati; any pactum which did not fall within one or of these two descriptions (and on which con... ...y an action could not be brought), not being ...nded in the definition of a contract, was left a mere pact, an agreement on which no action could be brought—nudum pactum.

In classifying the different kind of considerations, Sir William Blackstone has referred to the Roman law:—

1. Do ut des.—As where I give money on goods, or a contract that I shall be paid money on goods.

2. Facio ut facias.—Where I perform work for another man, and he, on that consideration, promises to perform work for me.

3. Facio ut des.—Where I perform work for another man, and the consideration is that he shall give me something in return.

4. Do ut facias.—Where I give or pay something to another, with a consideration on his part to perform something in return.

Thus valuable considerations are divided into the four species that I have enumerated. These four formularies appeared to have been considered by Blackstone and others as a classification of contracts, comprising (to use the words of Kent) "all those engagements that relate to the interchange of commodities, money, or labour;" but this is not the sense in which these terms are used in the Roman law. Contracts, in the Roman law, are distributed into two classes; the first, the nominati, such as have a specific name, as sale, hiring; and the second class, termed innominati, comprehending all those which have no specific name. Innominate contracts were distributed under the above heads. In all innominate contracts that which we term the consideration, was, in the doctrine of the early Roman law, of singular importance. It was only upon the consideration being performed that the contract was created. If it was agreed between me and my neighbour that I should mow his field of hay in the summer, and that in return he should reap my field of corn in the autumn; on my mowing his field of hay, this agreement became binding, and then it became a contract called facio ut facias. Until I did that, it was a mere pact—nudum pactum—giving to my neighbour no right of action, in case of my not fulfilling my part of the agreement. "In contractibus innominatis is qui nondum dederat vel fecerat alterum ex nudo pacto obligatum habebat. (Heinec. Elemens. Pandect. Pars 3 et 47.) Duo autem necessario sunt in hujus modi conventionibus, alte... ...mud unde vis pendet innominati contractûs; ab uno jam esse datani obligationis causam præstitamque: nude dici quodam modo potest re cœpisse hujusmodi obligationes. (Mühecnbruck.) Conventiones quæ pariunt actiones—in suo nomine non stant sed transeunt in proprium nomen contractûs (ut Emptio Venditio)—sed etsi in alium contractum res non transeat, subsit tamen causa obligatio ex contractu est. Veluti si quis dedit ut alter daret vel faceret quod pacto convenit. Item si in stipulationem deducitur ex contractu obligatio esse incipit.—Sed cum nulla subest causa præter conventionem" (in the case of mutual promises), "constat non posse constitui obligationem: igitur nuda pactio obligationem non parit." (Warnkoenig, Institutiones.) An agreement which gives a right of action no longer retains the name of an agreement, but the name of a contract is appropriated to it (such as contract of sale). Yet, if there be a consideration to support it, there is created a liability ex contractu; but if there is no consideration beyond an executory promise, no liability can be created, and therefore a mere agreement creates no liability. An agreement of this nature, if concluded with the form of stipulatio, became a contract in law; if not, it was a mere pact, until the consideration was executed by one of the parties. These rules, which the ancient law of Rome created, were relaxed by the edicts of the prætors and the constitutions of the emperors, until the pact was put more and more on the footing of a contract. The language of the law of Rome, as far as innominate contracts are concerned, has been followed by our own writers, without being understood.

In our law, a consideration of some sort or other is absolutely necessary to the validity of a contract; and a mere agreement or promise, however expressly made, to do or pay any thing on one side, without any consideration on the other, is utterly without operation or effect: as, if one person promises to give another 100*l*. Here there is nothing contracted for on the one side, and therefore there is nothing binding on the other. In the Roman law this was binding; that is, in the Roman law as contained in the compilations of Justinian. By the common law of Rome it was a mere pact, nudum pactum. Thus, when a thing given was delivered to the donee, it became his property. If it was not delivered, he could not claim it at law from the donor; he had not an action to compel the delivery of it. But even then, if the forms of a stipulation were gone through, it became a legal contract. Subsequently, a promise to give became binding, and an action could be brought against the donor for the thing promised. "Perficiuntur autem (donationes inter vivis) cum donator suam voluntatem scriptio aut sine scriptione manifestaverit: et ad ex emptium Venditionis, nostra constituitur eas etiam in se habere necessitatem traditiones voluit, ut etiam si non tradantur habeant plenissimum robur et perfectum, et traditiones necessitas incumbat donatore."

A contract is either executed or executory. An executed contract is one in which the consideration has been performed, as where goods have been sold and delivered. As long as the order for the goods remained uncompleted, the contract was executory. In that case the seller was bound to deliver, and the purchaser was bound to accept; and if either failed in his part of the agreement, he was liable in damages to the other. When goods have been delivered, the agreement on the part of the seller is performed, it only remains for the purchaser to pay the price. In this instance, as in a great many others, the performance of the consideration on the one side has created a debt upon the other. Where a contract is executory, an action of assumpsit lies, or covenant, if under seal; but in the case of a parol contract, an action of assumpsit lies to recover damages for the breach of the contract. The difference between the two was alluded to in the case of Baxter v. The Earl of Portsmouth. The defence set up on behalf of Lord Portsmouth was, that a lunatic was incapable to contract, and the Court held that the things were suitable to the state and degree of the defendant; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. A distinction was drawn by Abbott, C. J. between this case and one in which it was attempted to force a contract not executed. Where a consideration has been actually performed on the one side, that is to say, where the goods have been supplied, it is but reasonable (if no fraud has taken place) that the promise should be enforced on the other; but where a contract remains altogether executory, where the plaintiff has no claim in respect of any thing done on his part, the only foundation of the demand is the agreement itself, the Court will inquire narrowly into the circumstances under which the agreement was made. In an executory contract, while it remains open, it may be considered to be an agreement on each side; each agreement the consideration of the other.—"I agree to supply you with certain goods a month hence,—you agree to pay me for them." There is an agreement on each side, and each agreement is the consideration of the other. These two agreements may be either concurrent or independent; or the one the condition precedent to the other. Where goods are ordered for a future time, and are to be paid for on delivery, there the contract is concurrent: the goods are to be delivered, and the payment is to take place. The two acts concur. In the case of a promise of marriage, the agreement, of course, is concurrent. It must be performed by both parties at the same time, or not at all:—or, the two agreements may be independent of one another: or, the one may be a condition precedent to the other.—"If you will do so and so to-day, I will do so and so to-morrow." For instance, where credit is given, the delivery of the goods is the condition precedent to the liability to pay for them. In concurrent agreements, or conditions precedent, where the one does, or tenders, or is ready to do his part, he may complain of the non-performance of the other. For instance, in the case of a sale of goods to be paid for on delivery, if the one party fails to deliver the goods, the other party may bring an action; but then he must aver that he was ready to pay for them. If the one party will not take the goods and pay for them, the other has a right of action against him for not taking them; but he must have been ready to deliver, and have tendered the delivery of them. So it is where the one is a condition precedent. If the thing to be done on one side is a condition precedent to the right of action, performance of the condition precedent must be averred. But there are several cases in which the liability on each side is independent: where, for instance, one party engages to do a certain act a year hence perhaps; and that is to be paid for by 500*l*. payable three months hence. There he may complain if the 500*l*.

is not paid, without having performed that in respect of which it was to be paid. The law on this subject is in Jones v. Barclay (1 Saunders, 319). (Kingston v. Preston, 2 Douglas, 69; Morton v. Launch, 7 T. R. 125; Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 203; Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway, 8 M. & W. (Easter Vac. 1841); Mattock v. Kinglake, 10 A. & E. 50.)

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

Lecture XII.

Corrosive sublimate—Mode of analysing the contents of the stomach—Red oxide of mercury—Persulphuret of mercury.

I yesterday described the method of detecting corrosive sublimate in the liquid or the solid state, and I purpose this morning to describe the method of analysing the contents of the stomach, or matters vomited, or the different articles of food, for the purpose of discovering corrosive sublimate where it has been supposed to have been swallowed. Corrosive sublimate, it is to be observed, is precipitated in an insoluble form by almost all organic substances; even the mucous membrane of the stomach will precipitate it, so that we do not find it dissolved in the liquid contents of the stomach, but it is incorporated with the substance. Corrosive sublimate is a heavy body, and subsides instantly, while the light organic particles are suspended in the water in which the contents of the stomach may be immersed for the purpose of analysis; we should, therefore, collect a little of the matter precipitated, and having put it on a piece of filtering-paper, let it dry spontaneously. The extraneous matters are evaporated, and the poison will subside and dry on the paper. It may happen that the corrosive sublimate will be dissolved in the liquid contents of the stomach, and in this state it may be deposited in copper by the action of galvanism, in the form of a bright silvery stain on the surface of the copper. Should, however, the quantity of corrosive sublimate be so small that no precipitation of mercury takes place by this process, you are not to infer, necessarily, that it is absent, because there are more delicate ways of testing it. There are two methods by which we detect corrosive sublimate, even in the smallest quantity. One is by common chemical affinity, and the other is by the action of galvanism. In the application of the test for detecting corrosive sublimate by chemical affinity, we take a small quantity of the suspected liquid, and having placed a slip of copper in it, we apply heat; in a short time the copper will become coated with a grey coat, which is a mixture of metallic mercury, corrosive sublimate, and organic matter. The organic matter may be washed off in water, and in order to get rid of the corrosive sublimate, we must wash the layer of copper in ether, which dissolves the corrosive sublimate, and removes it, leaving nothing but the metallic mercury behind. Then, by introducing the copper, coated as it is with mercury, into a glass tube, and holding it over the flame of a spirit-lamp, the mercury comes over and forms a brilliant metallic ring. If you fail in detecting the poison in a small quantity, you must take the whole of the contents of the stomach and submit them to analysis. Mercury is a very heavy metal, and in a large quantity of corrosive sublimate we may get but a very small quantity of the metal, so great is its specific gravity. The next method of detecting it is by galvanism. Take a piece of gold foil, and coil it round a plate of zinc, and place it in the liquid, and in a few minutes, owing to the powerful affinity which gold has for mercury, the gold will be covered over, and not a trace of its colour left. If you then wash it and place it in a reduction tube, and apply heat to it, you will get the globules of mercury. This is an unfailing method of doing it, and it will detect the 150th part of a grain of corrosive sublimate contained in a considerable quantity of water. It is true, when we compare the tests for arsenic with the tests for corrosive sublimate, we have no such delicate tests for the latter as for arsenic. We are yet in want of some delicate test for mercury; and this is, perhaps, the reason why in many cases it has not been discovered. Well, then, you observe that by these experiments we only get a small quantity of mercury; and the next question is, how are we to infer that corrosive sublimate is there present? In point of fact, we are not in a condition to say whether corrosive sublimate is there or not; all we can say is, that in this liquid some soluble form of mercury is present. We must here look for some marks of corrosion or inflammation about the mouth and the fauces, and the œsophagus; and if we find any such evidence here, any objection as to the contents of the stomach will go for nothing. There is another point to be considered. Barristers, in cross-examining medical witnesses, often say, Did you extract the whole of the mercury? Why, certainly not, because it is not necessary to extract the whole of the metal to be aware of its presence. If we only get the one hundred and fiftieth part of a grain, it is sufficient to say that the metal is present; and that is all that we require. Supposing we find none of the poison in the stomach, as happened in a case that proved fatal last year, then it will be necessary to cut up the substance of the stomach, and proceed with the mode adopted for detecting mercury in organic solids; that is, dry the solid, and digest it in nitro-muriatic acid, which will restore any corrosive sublimate that may have been decomposed by the organic principles. So that you see, if you have lost the poison by chemical change, you again bring it into a soluble form. Having digested the substance in the mode described, evaporate it to perfect dryness in a moderate temperature, and digest it in water. You may then operate on the liquid extracted by the galvanic test.

The last point to be noticed is with regard to the determination of the quantity of the poison. Supposing we are required to say how much of the poison is present in the liquid, we cannot go on extracting the whole of it, and, therefore, if we get from the contents of the stomach two drachms, and the whole contents of the stomach are five ounces, f we find two grains of mercury in two drachms, we may multiply that by twenty, and thus get the whole quantity of mercury in the contents of the stomach.

Calomel is a substance that has given rise to serious accidents occasionally, though it seldom has been known to cause death. We know that in some cases it has caused death, and in one instance a boy aged fourteen was killed by taking six grains, and an adult, by twenty grains of calomel. Large doses may be taken without producing mischief, but it is a fact that it has caused death. It is said hat calomel contains corrosive sublimate, and Dr. Christison says that he has detected in most of the specimens of calomel he has examined the 166th part of corrosive sublimate. This is a small proportion, but it is capable of doing mischief when it is given in a large quantity. You are aware that calomel is produced by subliming corrosive sublimate. There are various methods for detecting t, and perhaps the best mode is to boil the substance in water or alcohol; the corrosive sublimate is soluble in both, while calomel is insoluble. If you drop calomel slowly into iodide of potassium, there will be a greenish-grey deposit, almost black; and in proportion to the quantity we have a greenish-grey or a greenish-black colour. The best way is to boil the calomel in water and test it by gold and zinc. It has been said that calomel, when taken into the stomach, is converted into corrosive sublimate, because it there meets with common salt and muriatic acid. Of that there is no doubt, for when calomel is mixed with common salt, corrosive sublimate is formed. In fact, some corrosive sublimate is formed whenever calomel is taken, but it is in very minute quantity. If it even touches the tongue, the chloride of sodium contained in the saliva would form corrosive sublimate. Now calomel is characterized by its insolubility in water, alcohol, and ether; it is soluble at a high temperature, but not so much so as corrosive sublimate. It is precipitated black by caustic alkalies, while corrosive sublimate is differently affected; it is also turned black by a solution of hydro-sulphuret of ammonia, and, when heated with carbonate of soda, t gives metallic mercury and common salt. To distinguish calomel from corrosive sublimate, the best test is ammonia; with calomel, ammonia gives a deep black precipitate, while corrosive sublimate gives a white precipitate.

The red oxide of mercury is a poison, though not commonly taken. A case occurred in Guy's Hospital, in October 1833. A woman, aged 22, who had swallowed a quantity of red precipitate, was brought in labouring under the following symptoms. The surface was cold and clammy; there was stupor approaching to narcotism; frothy discharge from the mouth, and occasional vomiting, the vomited matter containing some red powder, which was proved to be red precipitate. There was considerable pain in the abdomen, increased by pressure; and there were cramps in the lower extremities. On the following day the fauces and mouth became painful, and the woman complained of a coppery taste.

Vermilion, which is a persulphuret of mercury, is characterized by its deep crimson-red colour, and its insolubility in water and muriatic acid. It gives the red colour of the wafers and sealing wax, and salivation has proceeded from it under the following circumstances:—The secretary of an insurance office was in the habit of putting wafers in his mouth, and he experienced in the course of a day or two after a violent salivation, which was supposed to have been produced by the wafers. It is possible that, under these circumstances, the poison may find its way into the body. Vermilion is known from all other bodies by one simple experiment. The hydro-sulphuret of ammonia is a good test; vermilion is not affected by it, while all other powders resembling it in colour are turned black. The reason of this is, that it is a sulphuret, and the others are oxides. There is one general rule with all the salts of mercury in the analysis, which is this: that all the volatile salts give metallic mercury in carbonate of soda. The subsulphate of the peroxide will give mercury by heating it.

Law Magazine. No. III. New Series. Saunders and Benning.

We have received the new numbers of these periodicals, which abound in interesting and instructive matter. Time will not admit a specific notice this week, but we present our readers with a foretaste of the treat prepared for them in the following, taken from the Law Review, which has no less than three biographies:—

A MEMOIR OF ALLAN LORD MEADOWBANK.

There have been few more eminent lawyers on the Bench of either country, perhaps of any country, than the late Lord Meadowbank; nor was his learning confined to the studies of his profession; he was a man of universal information; his reading was, during his whole life, extensive; his knowledge accurate; nor did his ardour in the pursuit of it terminate but with his life.

Allan Maconochie was the eldest son of a country gentleman, whose family had been driven from Argyleshire, their original habitation, during the Covenanting troubles of the seventeenth century, and settled in Mid-Lothian, where they acquired the estate of Meadowbank, near Kirk Newton. The great grandfather is mentioned in Baillie (Letters, iii. 365) as one of Argyle's friends, who had instigated his proceedings, and "was forfaulted," at the time of the murder of that chief, so beautifully described by Mr. Fox in his Historical Fragment, as having "expiated his virtues on the scaffold." The son, grandfather of the judge, received some indemnity at the Revolution, with which he purchased the estate of Mid-Lothian, with other property, which the possessor sold in 1709, under the alarm then prevalent, that Scotland was ruined by the union. The part of the purchase which was retained proved then to be unsaleable, in consequence of that unaccountable popular opinion.

Allan, the judge, was born 26th May, 1748, and his father being himself in the profession, took care that his education should be carefully attended to. With this view he obtained for him the assistance of Dr. Adam, afterwards so celebrated as a teacher, and as a writer upon the antiquities and geography of ancient Italy. The young man was the only pupil to whom this eminent and excellent person ever acted as private tutor; and the result of his care was, that the scholar obtained a familiar acquaintance with the ancient languages and the classical writers, very unusual in those days and in that country. Being destined for the bar, under the advice of his kinsman Principal Robertson, who was left one of his guardians upon his father's death, he studied for some time the civil and the Scottish law, at the University of Edinburgh; and, in order to complete his education, he entered himself apprentice at the age of fifteen with an eminent writer to the signet (conveyancer), Mr. Thomas Tod, and actually served out his time. But that his studies were never confined to the drudgery of the profession, appears very clearly, for he attended both the class of divinity and that of church history; and also the medical classes: nay, so well was he versed in this branch of science, that Dr. Gregory, his intimate friend, used to relate, that a part of his celebrated thesis on taking his degree was the work of

Mr. Maconochie. It may safely be asserted that so liberal an education has fallen to the lot of very few men, and of no other lawyer; but he was also improved by foreign travel; and was sent abroad, when he resided for some time in Paris. On his return, in 1769, he entered at Lincoln's Inn, and kept his terms with the intention of being called to our Bar. Lord Thurlow had taken a liking to him, which continued through life, and strongly urged him to this pursuit; but his subsequent marriage with Miss Wellwood, a lady of that well-known Scottish family, induced him to settle in Edinburgh. While he resided in London, however, he very diligently studied the English law, and was a regular attendant upon the court in which Lord Mansfield presided. The decisions, and the whole judicial conduct of that great magistrate, made a deep impression upon his mind, the rather, as the enlarged views and truly liberal spirit in which he administered our technical system of jurisprudence fell in with his own learned and enlightened views of the science.

He was now called to the bar, or, as it is said in Scotland, admitted a member of the Faculty of Advocates; but as practice to young men in the Scottish branch of the profession comes slowly, from there being none of the helps and introductions known among us, of Pleading below the Bar, Sessions, and Circuits, he again went abroad, before his marriage and fixing his residence in Edinburgh, and remained for between one and two years, diligently attending the proceedings of the Parliament of Paris; and he also spent a considerable time at Rheims, where, and in other provinces, he attended the parliaments or high courts of justice. The copious notes which he wrote both in these countries and during his studies in London, and during his attendance on Lord Mansfield's court, remain a monument of his extraordinary industry; and a proof that his own great legal learning had been obtained from every source.

On his return to Edinburgh, the first causes that brought him into notice were the great question of literary property in which he was engaged, and the celebrated case of the negro, Knight v. Wedderburn, which excited the greatest interest, and called forth all the abilities of the bar. No question could be more congenial to his feelings and his tastes, to his principles, above all, for these were eminently liberal and enlarged. He was, with his family, a steady friend of the rights and liberties of the people, as established at the Revolution; and only became, with Mr. Burke and Mr. Windham, averse to popular courses when these became in this country wedded to sedition, and in France to massacre and anarchy. He not only distinguished himself at the bar in those celebrated cases which we have mentioned, but on the bench in all the questions touching the rights of dissenters, as in the Craugdallie case and others, his ardent love of religious as well as civil liberty shone forth; and his able judgments received ultimately the sanction both of the Court of Session and the supreme tribunal, the House of Lords.

In 1779 he was appointed professor of Public Law; and finding that the duties of this chair had fallen into neglect, he resolved to revive its activity and usefulness. He set himself to prepare, elaborately, a course of lectures; and it must be confessed that few men ever attempted the difficult task with greater resources of learning for executing it satisfactorily, for of few men was the previous reading so extensive and so various, and none could be more possessed by the wholesome spirit of free inquiry, and the strong desire of investigating the truth. These lectures remain, written for the most part in his own hand, and it is exceedingly to be wished that they may, in whole or in part, be given to the world. For the plan upon which they are framed is most comprehensive they are written with an extraordinary knowledge of the subject; they abound in proofs of the most extensive reading; and they are throughout guided by a philosophic spirit.

They are arranged under two great divisions—the State of Nature, and the Political State. Under the first, by which is meant the earlier state, are treated, the savage state; the origin of the political union; the first structure of government; language, and the origin of its grammatical structure; the agricultural and pastoral state; the rise of religion and mythology; women and their domestic relations in uncultivated society. The other and principal branch begins with the gradual changes and transitions from the rude to the polished state. It then treats of the pastoral nations with moveable habitations; the Nomadic tribes; the origin and nature of the Tartar and Arabic governments; the Nomadic conquests, and the governments thus formed—those of the Israelites, of Persia, of Hindostan, of Turkey. He then treats of pastoral nations with fixed habitations. This leads to a consideration of the rise and progress of European society, the Celto-German governments, and the Gothic governments on the conquered provinces of the Roman empire. Then ... the progress of government, where the ancient confederacies of pastoral nations have been dissolved. Under this head we have the governments of Greece, especially of Lacedæmon and Athens, and of Italy. Next we have the progress of government where those pastoral confederacies have been consolidated. Those that have been consolidated by the neighbourhood of Nomadic tribes are, Egypt, Assyria, China, Russia, all of which are fully treated. Those which have been consolidated by other causes, as form of the country, superstition, wants of cultivated nations, are Macedon, the monarchies of Western Asia, Thibet, India. The head follows of nations not fully within any of the foregoing descriptions—and, first, nations that never have been pastoral, yet have made progress in civilization; Mexico, Peru, Japan, and all nations that have made no such progress, and yet have formed a political union; the African tribes, those nations which have acquired knowledge of property, with little or no political union; the Laplanders and Siberians. Next comes a general view of the revolutions in political society; and out of this arises a treatise on the principles of the different forms of government. We are thus, by slow degrees, but from a most comprehensive view of the world and its history, led to the origin, predominancy, and decline of the feudal institutions, and then comes the present state of the European governments.

It would not be easy to imagine a more comprehensive plan of this vast subject. We have had access to some of its more interesting portions; as the general disquisitions on the origin of society and of government, and the chapters on the governments of Greece and Rome. The learning of these is profound; the inquiries are conducted with judgment and with uniform acuteness; nor is it to be passed over in silence that the scepticism, or rather the disbelief in the previous opinions respecting the early history both of Greece and Rome, which has formed the creed of the present day ever since the researches of Niebuhr and his followers, appears to have been familiar to Professor Maconochie as far back as 1779; for we find him representing Romulus as standing in the same relation to the Romans, in which Medus did to the Medians, and Perseus to the Persians. Professor Stewart had read the chapters on China and Japan, and he described them as both learned and profound; abounding at once with curious information and original disquisition.

After having long been in the possession of extensive practice at the bar, the professor was raised to the bench in 1796, upon the death of Lord Abercromby; and the choice was amply justified by the result, for his judicial reputation stands among the very first in the Scottish courts. A profound lawyer; thoroughly versed in every branch of the Scotch law; an acute and discriminating observer of the authorities, whether of text-writers or of decided cases, and skilful to weigh their relative value, never for a moment losing sight of legal principles, in which he was deeply grounded; exhibiting in his judgments a rare union of speculative knowledge with practical experience and readiness; his mind, too, enlarged by an acquaintance with the legal systems of other countries, and a familiarity with the general principles of jurisprudence; possessing, indeed, such a knowledge of other subjects as hardly any lawyer but himself ever had—a knowledge which he oftentimes brought to bear both happily and usefully upon the legal matter in hand—such were the important qualities by which this great Judge was so admirably fitted for his high office. But he likewise shared, in an eminent degree, the other judicial virtues—of patient inquiry, wakeful attention, undeviating integrity, strict impartiality, confidence in his own opinion, without the obstinate adherence to his first impression, which would shut out further light, and preclude a correction of the sentiments originally entertained. The careful attention to every particular of the case before him, led to a practice of which he set the example, which has been since followed by all his successors, and which is pregnant with the greatest advantages to the due administration of justice—we allude to the delivering Notes of the grounds of his decisions with the judgments pronounced. To this we owe the invaluable lights shed on each case by the present Lords-Ordinary; the stores of legal learning, and of judicial reasoning, wherewithal our reports have been constantly enriched by the Moncrieffs, the Jeffreys, the Fullertons, and the Cuninghams of the day.

It is needless to add, that the weight of this eminent person's authority is very great in the law upon every question with which he had occasion to deal. In the House of Lords none stands higher; and we cite the following just eulogy pronounced upon him in that court of last resort, the rather because Lord Meadowbank's opinion was the ground upon which the Lords overruled a case often cited in the courts below; a case, however, which Lord Meadowbank, with the freedom and the discrimination in weighing authorities already alluded to, had not hesitated to declare bad law. In the important case of Inglis v. Mansfield, April 1835, Lord Brougham gave the judgment of the House connected with that case, and said, "We have the admitted sense of professional men, but above all, we have what is to me the highest authority, and of the greatest weight, that of the late Lord Meadowbank; he having been one of the very best of lawyers, one of the most acute of men, a man of a philosophical mind, a man of great reach of thought, of large general capacity, of great experience, and without exception the most diligent and attentive judge I ever remember in the practice of the Scotch law." His lordship then proceeds to state, his having introduced the most useful practice of appending notes to interlocutors, in one of which is found Lord Meadowbank's unhesitating opinion against the authority of Houston v. Stuart.

Lord Meadowbank never gave any work to the world, except his able and profound dissertation, in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, upon the Origin and Formation of the Feudal System; and a tract of great merit, and much practical use, upon the Application of Jury Trial to Scotch Civil Proceedings, in 1814. Of the latter work, Lord Eldon formed a very high opinion and expressed himself to this effect in a letter which is now before us. He particularly mentions "his surprise at the accurate knowledge of English jury proceedings." But he was probably not aware of the English law education which the author had received, as we have already stated. In 1815, he was appointed one of the judges of the new Jury Court, then established; and in this as in all other departments of his judicial duty he gave unbounded satisfaction both to his colleagues, to the profession, and to the suitors.

For many years of his life, Lord Meadowbank, always fond of mechanics and other experimental researches, had devoted much of his spare time to agricultural pursuits, in which he was knowing and skilful. His health was, generally speaking, good, and he passed on his farm, and among his books, all the hours which he could take from his professional occupations. But about the year 1814, it began to fail, and for the last few months of the two years that he still lived, he was confined to the house, and only could take an airing in the carriage. It is, however, singular, that not only his cheerful temper and lively disposition remained unaltered, but it was seen how eager and how active his mind continued to the last. His faculties were wholly unimpaired; and the ardent desire of knowledge and fondness for argument and discussion abode by him to the end. Within a few days of his decease, he desired strict inquiry to be made after two works which he had seen advertised in the newspapers; and aware how nearly he approached his end, he expressed some disappointment at finding that they were not yet published. One of the last incidents of his life, and which gave him extreme satisfaction, was the elevation of his eldest son, then Solicitor-General, to the head of his profession, as Lord Advocate. He died 14th June, 1816, in the 69th year of his age, leaving, with the Lord Advocate (since a judge by the same title with his father), Robert, in the East-India Company's service, both still living, and James, a Scotch barrister, and a man of much curious and accurate learning, who died early in the present year. Thomas, in the profession of the law, died in the year 1816.

It remains to add, that, in private life, no man could be more amiable in all respects. His strict and undeviating integrity, his high sense of honour, the kindness of his nature, and the strength of his attachments in all the relations of society, both towards his family and his friends, were without an exception or a blot. He delighted to assist the young and inexperienced with his counsels, and opened to them freely the stores of his great knowledge. He was fond of discussion, and though unyielding in argument, he was a fair and well-natured disputant. The difference which he had with his old and intimate friend, Dr. Gregory, lasted a few years, and was succeeded by a renewal of all their ancient intimacy: but it was only one of the many estrangements which were incident to the social intercourse of that eminent and gifted, though somewhat eccentric individual. Lord Meadowbank's kindness, however, was not, within the circle of his connections, confined to his disposition, his temper, or his advice. He was, to the extent of his means, and even beyond it, helpful to the relatives who stood in need of his assistance, as appears by the correspondence which remains, and as never was otherwise known.

We have deemed that we discharged a duty to the legal profession in bringing before our readers the studies and the axioms of this distinguished judge, the rather because they illustrate the position often lost sight of by busy men, and not comprehended by men of narrow minds, that all the liberal arts are mysteriously related, having what Tully calls "quoddam commune vinculum;" that no man can justly be regarded as an accomplished lawyer whose knowledge is closely confined to the lore of his own profession; and that the student, the practitioner, the administrator of the law, may most usefully enlarge their understanding, from branches of general learning, without any risk whatever of becoming less skilful in their own art, or less successful in its practice.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Nov. 18, 1843, and April 16, 1845.

BAMPTON v. BURCHALL.

Special and general demurrer—Pleading—Bill of revivor—Statute of Limitations.

Where, pending a demurrer to a bill for want of equity, the suit abates by the deaths of parties, the suit may be revived by means of bill of revivor and supplement, for the purpose of disposing of the demurrer, but it must not mix up with the matter of the original bill new supplemental matter.

If the bill filed to revive such a suit contains more than is required to dispose of the demurrer, it is open to a general demurrer, and the defendant is not obliged to demur specially to the new matter.

The original bill in this cause was filed in May 1832 by Blackburn, as the assignee, under the Insolvent Debtors Act, of Thos. Standish or Stanley, and by Stanley himself; and the case made by the bill was this: that Sir Frank Standish died in May 1812 seised of considerable real estates, intestate and without issue, leaving the plaintiff Stanley his heir-at-law. That the defendant in the suit, Frank Hall Standish, had entered into possession of the estates of Sir Frank Standish, and that the plaintiff had commenced an action of ejectment to recover possession, but there were outstanding terms which Frank Hall Standish intended to set up, and which would at law defeat the plaintiff's claim. The bill prayed that the defendant might be restrained from so doing, and that all impediments to the trial of the action at law might be removed. To that bill a general demurrer for want of equity was put in, but was never brought to a hearing or disposed of. In 1836 Thomas Stanley died, leaving James Stanley his son and heir-at-law. In 1840 Frank Hall Standish, the tenant in possession, died, having devised the estates to two of the defendants in the present suit. Blackburn, the assignee, died in 1841, and Bampton, the present plaintiff, was duly appointed assignee in his stead. The present plaintiff, who had all the interest of the plaintiff in the original suit, then filed the present bill, which was not merely to revive the suit but stated much other and supplemental matter. It stated, also, that a new action at law had been brought by the present plaintiff against the present defendants, who intended to set up terms. All the interest of the plaintiffs in the original bill had devolved upon the present plaintiff, and all the interest of Frank Hall Standish had devolved upon the defendant[illegible] To this bill the def[illegible] de[illegible] gen[illegible] the Rolls allowed the demurrer. In giving judgment his lordship, the Master of the Rolls, said, "This is a prop[er] state [o]f things for a bill of revivor and supplement; a revivor is necessary in consequence of the deaths of parties. The facts which shew a devolution of the title are proper to be stated by way of supplement; and I think the circumstance of a demurrer being pending does not of itself make any difference, as either party might have set down the demurrer to be argued; neither could, under the old rule of the court, complain of a delay in which he had acquiesced; and if the abatement took place while the demurrer was pending, there seems no reason why the plaintiff, by a bill of revivor and supplement, might not revive for the purpose of having the demurrer disposed of." That the new orders were not applicable to such a case as this. But his lordship said, "The present bill proceeds further than merely for the purpose of revivor. It alleges the existence of outstanding terms of years; that certain mortgages and leases are subsisting; that terms and mortgages were vested in Frank Hall Standish at the time of his death, and that an action against him by the original plaintiff had become abated; and it prays that the original suit may be revived, and for a declaration that the present plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the proceedings in the original suit, and in the supplemental suit against the defendants; and if necessary, that the demurrer may be set down to be argued; and it prays relief not inconsistent with the relief asked by the original bill, but of a more extended character, and founded upon supplemental matter. While the equity of the original bill is challenged by a demurrer not disposed of, a party claiming the same right as the original plaintiff, supposing him to be at liberty to file a bill of revivor and supplement alleging such supplemental matter only as may be necessary to shew by and against whom the order to revive may be properly obtained, is not at liberty to claim the same or additional relief, by adding supplemental matter corroborative of the original claim, and not required for the purpose of shewing by and against whom the order to revive may be properly obtained. This is what the present bill attempts to do, a[n]d on that ground I am of opinion that the demur[re]r must be allowed;" and the Master of the R[o]lls allowed the demurrer without giving leave to amend.

Wakefield and Bilto[n] [fo]r the appeal.

Turner and Elmsley, [co]ntrà, supported the decree of the Master of the Rolls. The title of Stanley accrued, if at all, in 1812; consequently this second action by the present plaintiff was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The bill shews an adverse possession for thirty years. The present was an attempt to connect the new with the original proceedings, so as to avoid the Statute of Limitations. The cases of Cholmondeley v. Clinton; Cuthbert v. Creas[y] (4 Bligh, Old Series); Mitford on Pleading, 3rd ed. 64, 68, 69; Underhill v. Devereux (2 Saunders).

Wakefield, in reply.—Hodson [v.] Ball. The bill charged that the defendants had "verbally and [in] writing admitted the plaintiff's title."

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a question whether the decision of the Master of the Rolls, allowing the demurrer, is right. The facts are these. Sir Frank Standish died in 1812, seised of certain estates which came into the possession of Frank Hall Standish. Thomas Stanley, who claimed to be heir-at-law of Sir Frank Standish had been discharged under the Insolvent Debtors Act, and Blackburn had been appointed the assignee of his estate. Blackburn commenced an action of ejectment against Frank Hall Standish to recover possession of the estates, and afterwards filed a bill in this court stating the action of ejectment, that there were terms and mortgages outstanding, and that Frank Hall Standish intended to set up the terms as a defence to the action. The bill also set out the pedigree of Thomas Stanley. To this bill the defendant put in a general demurrer for want of equity; but nothing was done upon it, and the suit remained suspended until the parties died. The demurrer was not set down; but remained suspended for eight years, and in the meantime the parties, plaintiff and defendant, died. Frank Hall Standish by his will devised the estates in question to the defendants in the present suit. Thomas Stanley left James Stanley his heir-at-law. Blackburn having died, the present plaintiff was appointed assignee by the Insolvent Debtors Court. Things subsisted thus in 1840. The demurrer was pending, but had not been heard, and nothing could be done but what was necessary to dispose of the demurrer. For that purpose a bill of revivor might have been filed. That [was] the state of things when the present bill was filed. That bill, however, was not a bill of revivor only. There were various allegations, of this description: that the action at law was abated (not abated in the sense used in this court, but absolutely abated at law)—the foundation of the suit in this court was therefore gone; that another action of ejectment had been commenced by the present plaintiff, and that the defendants intended to set up outstanding terms and leases, and it prayed that such impediments to a trial of the ejectment might be removed. But this is matter for an original bill: it was a new suit upon new matter, which was mixed up with the original matter of the previous bill. It is stated that there is no precedent for such a bill. On the other side it was said that the defendants should not have demurred generally to the bill, but should have picked out only such parts of it as were open to demurrer. But that is not necessary, and is contrary to the course of the court. The bill is vicious in its frame, and cannot be sustained. Try it thus: if the original bill only had failed, then the bill might have been sustained upon the new matter alone. I am of opinion that this is an improper bill, and that the demurrer must be allowed. The decision of the Master of the Rolls is right. The apparent object was to connect the two proceedings, so as to avoid the effect of the Statute of Limitations, but that cannot be done in this irregular way.

General demurrer allowed.

Re SHEIGHT, a Lunatic.

Carriage of commission—Date of the lunacy—Heir-at law's attendance—Practice in lunacy.

Walker supported a petition by two persons who would be co-heirs of the lunatic if he were now dead, praying for leave to attend the commission, and examine witnesses as to the time when he became a lunatic. The petitioners were about to apply for a commission when the wife of the lunatic sued out a commission. In her petition, she says that he has been a lunatic for two years, whereas he has notoriously been insane for six years and upwards. There might be an intention to set up some will.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What reason have you to suppose the wife means to confine her evidence of insanity to the period of two years? Is there any affidavit to that effect?

James Parker, for the [w]ife, complained that there had been sixteen affidavit[s] filed in support of this petition, not one of them going to the point of the time of the lunacy, nor was there any suggestion in any of the affidavits that any will had ever been made by the lunatic.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—A precedent of such an order has been handed up to me, made by Lord Eldon, in 1825, in Re Franks. All the facts which were the foundation of that matter were recited in the order. I am told by the secretary, that it is usual to make such an order; it is in furtherance of the commission.

Jas. Parker.—In Re Gordon, in 1838, the heir-at-law was allowed to attend the execution of the commission, but at his own expense.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I shall reserve the costs, and, if any improper use is made of the leave given, I shall deal with it accordingly. The order will be that the co-heirs shall have leave to attend by counsel at the inquiry, and tender witnesses as to the period of the lunatic's insanity; such witnesses to be examined by the party upon whose petition the commission has issued; and if such party shall not examine those witnesses, the present petitioners, the co-heirs, may do so. All these matters will be considered in the question of costs, when it shall appear in what way the inquiry has been conducted.

Re LORD WILLIAM PAULET.

Act for authorizing trust[ees] to lend money [o]n Irish securities,—4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 29.

James Parker moved for a reference to the Master to inquire whether it would not be beneficial for infants interested in a sum of 52,000*l.* under the will of the Duke of Bolton, that the money should be invested upon mortgages of estates in Ireland. The change of investment would increase the income. The Act (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 29) authorized trustees, who were empowered by the settlement or will under which they acted to lend trust funds on real securities in England and Wales, to lay out such funds upon real securities in Ireland. The Master of the Rolls, in Stuart v. Stuart (3 Beavan, 436), had refused to make such an order of reference where infants were concerned.

The LORD CHANCELLOR held that if money is laid out in Ireland at a larger interest than could be obtained in England, it might be not only for the benefit of the tenant for life, but the security might remain until the remainder fell in. That if there were no infants interested, the trustees had an absolute discretion to invest in Irish securities; but where infants or other incapacitated persons were interested, the Court would always grant a reference to inquire whether such an investment would be beneficial.

Practice—Supplemental suit—Transfer of causes.

Terrell asked that a supplemental suit in this cause, which was before the Master of the Rolls, might be transferred to the paper of Vice-Chancellor Wigram. The original suit had been heard by the Vice-Chancellor, and a decree made by him, and it afterwards became necessary to bring before the Court the representatives of some of the parties. Upon drawing up the final decree, it was found that the decree in the supplemental suit had been made by the Master of the Rolls; and it was proposed that both causes, original and supplemental, should be set down before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, and the formal decree taken in both.

It was suggested by the registrar that that would in effect be an appeal, in the supplemental suit, from the Master of the Rolls to the Vice-Chancellor, which would be irregular, and that the better mode would be to have both causes set down before the Lord Chancellor, and the decree made by the Vice-Chancellor formally adopted.

All parties consented.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Let it be so. There can be no difficulty in doing so by consent.

Re BAKER, a Lunatic.

Costs of opposition by heir-at-law—Practice in lunacy—Cross-petition.

Lloyd supported a petition by the committee of the lunatic, who had lately died, for the taxation of costs, and for the transfer of funds in court and confirmation of the Commissioner's report.

May, for the heir-at-law, objected that the report made no provision for the heir-at-law's costs.

Lloyd.—Great expense had been incurred by reason of the opposition to the commission made by the heir-at-law, although he admitted at the same time that the deceased was of unsound mind. The estate was in fact insolvent, and if the heir-at-law now obtained payment of his costs, it would be to the prejudice of creditors.

Jenkins, for the executors, also opposed the heir-at-law's claim to his costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot decide on this petition whether the heir-at-law is entitled to the costs claimed or not; that must be determined on a petition presented by the heir-at-law. The question would be whether the opposition made by the heir-at-law to the commission was reasonable; if made without reason, his costs will be disallowed. This petition may stand until the hearing of the heir-at-law's petition, that one order may be made on both petitions.

Re OTTE, a Lunatic.

Taxation of costs—Practice.

Petition by Mary Ann Golding, the committee of the person, that so much of the stock standing to the account of the lunacy may be sold as will raise 500*l.* for the purchase of furniture for the lunatic' use. It also asked that the costs should be taxed. By an order made in this matter in July 1844, upon the petition of Gray and others for a commission, it was ordered that a sum of 345*l.* should be paid to the solicitor of the petitioners on account of the costs and expenses of the commission. It was also ordered that such costs should be taxed. That has never been done, and the present petitioner cannot ascertain whether there is any balance in the hands of the solicitor. No balance was asked for by the petitioner.

Lloyd supported the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the co[illegible] are not carried in to be taxed in a reasonable time, [illegible] an application is made to me, I will order the solicitors to repay the sum of 345*l.* they have received.

Re STONE, a Lunatic.

Dispensing with [illegible]—Practice.

Roupell, for the new committee of the estate, prayed the confirmation of the Commissioner's report, and that a fund standing in the name of the late committee might be transferred into that of the petitioner. He also prayed that the committee should not be required to give security, as the whole property consisted of the fund in court. Th[illegible] debt due to the late committee.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The committee must give security to be approved by the Attorney-General. You may take an order for the payment of costs, if any, since the commission, which may be found due to the late committee Irish decree—Enrolling exemplification of order of Court in Ireland.

Blunt moved, under the provisions of the Act 41 Geo. 3, c. 90, to enrol an exemplification of an order of the Court of Chancery in Ireland for payment of money, that the party against whom such order was made might be proceeded against by an attachment. By that Act it was enacted that where an order or decree for payment of money shall have been made by the Court of Chancery in Ireland, that Court shall cause, upon application, a copy of the order or decree to be exemplified and certified to the Court of Chancery in England, under the great seal of Ireland, and that the Lord Chancellor of England shall forthwith cause such order or decree, when it shall be presented to h[illegible] so exemplified, to be enrolled in the Court of Chancery in England, and shall cause process of attachment and commitment to issue against the person of the party against whom the order or decree shall have been made, in order to enforce obedience [illegible] performance of the same as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if the same had been made in the Court of Chancery in England.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Wednesday, Feb. 26.

LOCKWOOD v. ABDY.

Practice—Misjoinder—Principal—Agent, and sub-agent—Account.

L. being in embarrassed circumstances, and obliged to leave the country, constituted A. his agent, by a power of attorney, to manage his estates for him during his absence. This power of attorney contained an express authority for A. to appoint a fit person to act as agent under him. A. retained G. B. A. as his solicitor in the business, and employed him to [illegible] L.'s rents, and in the general management of the estates. In G. B. A.'s books items were entered and charged as against L. The accounts between L. and A. had never been settled. A. was a gratuitous agent, and an account was opened with the bankers in the joint names of A. and G. B. A. into which L.'s rents were paid. A long correspondence afterwards took place between the solicitor of L. and G. B. A. wherein the latter stated that if there were errors in the accounts they must be corrected. This correspondence terminated in a bill filed by L. against both A. and G. B. A. containing various allegations of mismanagement, especially against G. B. A. and prayed an account against them both. Held, that as there was no case of fraud proved against A. and G. B. A. the bill could not hold against them both as agent and sub-agent, notwithstanding the latter had, during the before-mentioned correspondence, submitted to correct any errors in his accounts.

The plaintiff, Mr. Lockwood, was entitled to considerable estates in the county of Essex; but in the year 1833 his embarrassed circumstances compelled him to go abroad. The defendant Abdy, a clergyman, was an old and intimate friend of the plaintiff. The latter appointed his friend Abdy, by a power of attorney, to act as his agent, with full authority to manage his estates, receive the rents, make proper allowances to the tenants, and expressly empowering him to appoint proper persons to act as agents under him. Abdy retained one Mr. G. B. Andrews, a gentleman practising as an attorney [illegible] solicitor in Essex (the other defendant to the bill), whom he employed to receive the plaintiff's rents and to manage the estates. The bill was filed against Abdy and Andrews, and prayed that an account might be taken against both; also that Andrews's bill might be taxed and moderated, and that the sum of 208*l.* which had been charged by Andrews as a poundage of 5*l.* per cent. on the rents collected, might be disallowed. The bill contained several charges relating to the misconduct i[illegible] managing the estates, particularly the pulling down a mansion-house called Dewes Hall and selling the materials. It appeared from the statements contained in both the answers, that Abdy had retained Andrews as his attorney. Various items were entered and charged [illegible] Andrews's books as against the plaintiff; and the evidence, which was drawn chiefly from the letters which passed between the plaintiff and defendants during the agency, shewed that Andrews had prepared the power of attorney, and had various interviews with the plaintiff, and given him advice relating to the management of his affairs. There had never been any regular settlement of the accounts between the plaintiff and Mr. Abdy, but they had been made out and rendered by his solicitor Andrews, and were entitled "The accounts between Andrews and Abdy, as the agent constituted by power of attorney from the plaintiff." It appeared that in all these transactions the defendant Abdy acted as a gratuitous agent, without claiming any remuneration. A banking account was opened with Messrs. Gosling and Co. in the joint names of Abdy and Andrews, into which the plaintiff's rents were paid; but the answers stated that the account was that of Abdy only, and that he alone had the control over it.

Bethel and Wright, for the plaintiff, contended that the accounts were kept in the joint names of Abdy and Andrews, and that both the correspondence and entries proved them to have acted as joint agents of the plaintiff.

Stuart and Prior, for the defendant Abdy, insisted that a bill for an account cannot be sustained against an agent and sub-agent employed by him, unless there were fraud and collusion proved between them. That in the present case Abdy was alone the constituted agent of the plaintiff, and that Abdy was alone responsible for the misconduct of Andrews—for between Andrews and the plaintiff there existed no such privity as gave him a right to file a bill for an account against both the defendants. That the mischief of allowing such a bill would be to extend the principle not only to solicitors employed by a trustee, but even to a banker into whose name the trust property might be paid. That the principle would, if allowed, deprive the agent or trustee of part of his most valuable evidence, namely, the persons acting under him, if the latter could be made co-defendants in a suit for an account.

James Parker and Goodeve, for the defendant Andrews, contended that the answers of both defendants expressly stated that Andrews was retained by Abdy as his attorney and agent, and there appeared nothing to shew that Andrews had been retained for the plaintiff. That the entries in Andrews's books, and those parts of the correspondence relied upon, had all been explained by the circumstance that although Andrews acted under Abdy and was responsible to him alone, yet the transactions related to the plaintiff's affairs, but that there was no privity between him and Andrews.

Bethel, in reply.

Cases cited: Beaumont v. Boultbee (11 Ves. 358); Atwood v. Small (6 Clark & Fin. 232); Stephens v. Badcock (3 Bar. & Adol. 354).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—With regard to the general question which this case involves, it seems to me a very important one. The suit is commenced by Mr. Lockwood against Mr. Abdy, who was appointed by the former gentleman his agent, under a power of attorney, which contained an express authority to appoint some agent to assist him, of which authority the plaintiff was made acquainted by means of certain letters that had passed between them prior to the execution of the power of attorney. The general question upon which the Court has to decide is, whether a party appointing another to act for him, and who was empowered by him to appoint an assistant agent, has a right to file a bill against them both in relation to that which, strictly speaking, is only the agency of one. But this question is of itself capable of branching out into a variety of ways, since, in those cases wherein gentlemen are appointed as trustees, they must of necessity employ attorneys, agents, receivers, &c. in their various capacities; but is it to be inferred that, because the trustee is answerable to his cestui que trust, that the latter shall have a right to file a bill jointly against not only the trustee, but against every other individual who is necessarily employed by the trustee to assist him in the discharge of his fiduciary duties, upon the ground that the subordinate agent in that capacity has received money (undoubtedly of the principal) and has applied it according to the direction of the chief agent? To insist upon such a proposition in the abstract would be to involve consequences the most fearful. I admit that where a case is brought before the court in which it is distinctly proved that the trustee and his agent have acted corruptly and abused the power which the employer vested in the trustee or his agent, this Court will interfere; but in the present case there does not exist the slightest evidence that Mr. Abdy has either acted corruptly or that he has ever sanctioned any corrupt proceeding on the part of his own agent or any other person. And indeed I cannot but lament, having regard to the letters of Mr. Lockwood, that this suit has proceeded to such a stage as it has done; since the letters in question are replete with the most forcible language that can well be expressed to shew his early attachment, his continued affection, and his gratitude to Mr. Abdy for the manner in which the latter had all along administered his affairs, and in one of his letters regrets that the suit had ever been instituted. He ought not in fact to have suffered himself to remain so long in ignorance with respect to his own affairs as to have suffered matters to proceed to the present state of the suit. This, however, is nothing to the general question which alone I have to consider. It is quite clear, from the evidence itself, that the defendant Abdy was appointed the plaintiff's general agent, and had an express authority to appoint a subordinate one. It is quite evident also, that not only was Mr. Andrews proposed to act as the attorney, but that he was so in reality, and was retained to act as the solicitor of Mr. Abdy, and all the circumstances shew that (in the absence of the slightest proof of corruption) Andrews is alone responsible to Mr. Abdy. Now it must be admitted that the plaintiff's case has been argued with great ingenuity and ability, and the first exclamation made by any person upon a primâ facie perusal of the letters, without knowing what the real state of the case was, would doubtless be the following—" Why, how can Mr. Andrews refuse to account?" My opinion, however, is this, that notwithstanding an individual may have said in a letter, " I will submit my accounts," this places him under no legal obligation to do so, unless you can prove him to be in a position at law to compel him to submit his accounts. Now, my experience has often led me to see the upshot of a lengthened correspondence, and my idea is, that a person's mind may be as effectually mesmerised by a long correspondence as by the actual process itself; for the course of such correspondence is capable of being conducted in such a dexterous manner, and accompanied with such obscure and puzzling questions, that rather than continue this course of communication a man may be brought to admit almost any thing against himself, and consent to do any thing. It is literally the fact; for if you look at the correspondence, it is quite clear that Messrs. Marris and Hicks, who were represented to be the agents of the Lockwood family, state that they should like to become acquainted with all the business. [His Honour here read and commented upon the correspondence between Messrs. Marris and Hicks and Mr. Andrews, in which that firm endeavoured to fix him as agent for Lockwood, and his liability to account, until, as his Honour expressed it, Mr. Andrews, finding himself in a measure entangled in the meshes of this tedious correspondence, writes thus in his letter of the 19th September :—" It appears quite clear we cannot understand each other, or that it is determined not to understand me."] Then follows the usual consequence of a long correspondence, an immense Chancery bill, containing in it all kinds of accusations against parties, but more particularly against Mr. Andrews, not one particle of which has been proved; neither is there the slightest evidence whatever, although, if the facts would have warranted it, there might have been the clearest proof that Abdy and Andrews had so acted as to raise a case of joint liability. I cannot, sitting here, enter into the abstract question whether the accounts are fair and proper, and whether, had they been proposed in a proper shape, as between Lockwood himself and Andrews, the Court would not at once have said such an item ought to be disallowed. I must here decide the preliminary question: Must I enter into the accounts at all in this suit? Upon the broad grounds to which I have before alluded, my notion is that this suit cannot be sustained, and the bill must therefore be dismissed against both defendants, with costs.

Power of sale by executor—Title—Costs.

Certain leaseholds being sold by an executor, and the title being disputed, it was agreed to refer the matter to a conveyancer, who decided against the title and in favour of the purchaser. The Attorney-General having brought the parties before the Court to have payment of duty to the Crown, the purchaser was held entitled to his costs.

The whole question in this case was one of costs. In 1823, Potter, the surviving executor, and husband of one of the residuary legatees under the will of Admiral Phillips, put up for sale certain leasehold premises, which were purchased by Dr. Bowie, who immediately entered into possession. Difficulties arose as to the title, it being doubtful whether Potter alone could make a title, or whether it required the parties beneficially interested to join. Mr. Walters, in 1833, pronounced against the title as made by Potter, while Mr. Preston, on the other hand, for the executor, said it was good. They then agreed to take the opinion of Mr. Harrison, at their joint expense, which confirmed Mr. Walters's. So the matter rested till the Attorney-General, in 1836, brought the parties into court to obtain payment of the duty to the Crown. In 1838 there was a decree, referring the title to the Master, who reported against it, in 1842, by a separate report, which was excepted to, and the exceptions allowed, and that allowance confirmed, on appeal, in 1844. The title being thus established, the question now was as to costs between the estate and Dr. Bowie.

Turner, Lloyd, Cole, Roupell, Twiss, and Maule, for the several parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The justice of the case requires that costs should be given to Dr. Bowie. He entered into possession, and so remained without complaint till the information was filed. In 1833, Mr. Walters gave an opinion upon the title unfavourable to Mr. Potter's power to make a good title, of which it is enough to say that it has turned out to be an erroneous opinion, and that Mr. Preston's is the correct opinion. On the 16th November, 1833, Dr. Bowie's solicitor proposed to Potter to take Mr. Harrison's opinion at their joint expense, which he agreed to do. On the 27th November a statement is laid before Mr. Harrison, who said a title could not be made without the concurrence of other persons. Here is nothing to shew that that concurrence could not have been obtained; on the contrary, the parties thought to overcome the difficulty, if any. Dr. Bowie wished to have the contract carried out; so did Potter. What passed after the opinion of Mr. Harrison was taken is only to be ascertained from presumption. It is a strong circumstance, however, as to their minds, that from the time Mr. Harrison's opinion was obtained, the parties took no step to put an end to the contract; they lived on in hope. The demand of the Attorney-General on the estate not being satisfied, a bill is filed for the duties, making both Potter and Bowie parties. The Crown would not wait, and the parties must settle their disputes among themselves. Bowie, by his answer, consents to complete his purchase if a good title can be made, but does not state the circumstances between him and Potter; neither does Potter; and so it remained between the parties till the hearing. The decree declares the property liable to the Attorney-General, and refers the title to the Master. No account is given of the arrangement as to taking Mr. Harrison's opinion, but the Master finds in accordance with that opinion. That finding was reversed, and the title held good. According to the arrangement in regard to taking Mr. Harrison's opinion, Bowie had a right to the title thereby stated to be good, or to be released from the contract. They both came here; Potter to get rid of a duty and a contract which he was obliged by Harrison's view to make good; and Bowie was forced to come here and take a title different from that pointed out by Harrison. Dr. Bowie is therefore entitled to his costs.

Ex parte BURR, Re GAITSKELL.

Taxation—Stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37—Delivery of bill of costs.

Sending a packet containing a bill of costs by coach, which is afterwards sworn to as being received, a sufficient delivery within the Act, especially wh referred to by the solicitor in a letter afterwards his bill of costs. The old practice as to signing not done away with.

The common order to tax is sufficient, even though obtained two months after the bill has been delivered.

Special applications for orders to tax are not required by the Act; all that is required is the with special directions.

These special directions need not be applied for; they are given generally for all such cases to the Secretary at the Rolls.

The directions thus generally given in the order are, that the Master may report in a month, or the order shall be void.

This was an application to discharge an order as of course for taxation of a bill of costs. The petitioner, William Senhouse Gaitskell, was employed by his relative, Mr. Burr, to dispose of certain property in various parts of the country. Mr. Gaitskell put up the property accordingly for sale in 72 lots, and it was sold for upwards of 30,000*l.* Mr. Burr at the time expressed himself satisfied with the care and attention of Mr. Gaitskell. A packet containing a bill of costs was sent to Mr. Burr by coach, which h swore he received, and afterwards another packet, in which there was a letter which alluded to " my bill of costs." The bill of costs amounted to 1,957*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*, which Mr. Gaitskell swore contained several omissions, and had been made out small, without a view to taxation, and that he should be at great [illegible] if it were taxed. He objected to taxation; first, because the bill was not proved to have been delivered, and secondly, as the order was obtained two months after the delivery, it was not of course, but should have been on special application; and he therefore sought to have the order discharged.

Millar, for Mr. Gaitskell.—There is an affidavit by Mr. Burr, that he received the packet, but the bill of costs should be signed to satisfy the requisitions of the statute, either itself, or by a letter accompanying it. What is now wanted is to add the omitted items. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Why not make a special application?] We could not till this order was disposed of. [The MASTER of the ROLLS. No doubt if you made out a case for it you might.] Mr. Gaitskell says in his letter, " my bills amount to 1,957*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*" and the question is, could he maintain an action for a bill so sent? [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Delivering bills is to be a tentative process; you will try how much you can get, without binding yourself. How was it under the old law? Did it require signing?] No; but the case here is—I have made out my bill favourably to you because of our relationship to me, and it is fair you should pay, therefore, without taxation. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—That is, if you pay the charge of 2,000*l.*, well; if not, I'll see if I cannot charge you another 1,000*l.*] The bill was not made out formally with a view to taxation. Again, the Act says the reference, in such a case, is to be made with special directions from the Court, made on special application. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You are not aware that the case is decided already; it is not necessary to come here on a special application.] In re Beck and Flower there were special directions. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The common order contains special directions; there is no use for a special application; you only apply for special directions, and they are already given. There are no such words as " special application " in the Act; you have misread it, it is only special directions.] Well, I fall back on the first point, as to non-delivery.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The bill of costs was clearly delivered so as to satisfy the Act; and I do not accede to the proposition that the letter was necessary. The order is not irregular, for the letter says clearly, " that is my bill." If Mr. Gaitskell wishes, he can apply on a special case for special directions; but I cannot allow a solicitor, who may notwithstanding be a very honourable man, to send a bill, and then, if not paid, to get out of taxation by a plea of non-delivery. I dismiss the petition with costs, but without prejudice to his presenting a petition, making such special application to the Court as he may be advised. The bill may be taxed after a month from the delivery, without coming here for special directions,(a) as they are given generally for such cases to the secretary without asking the Court.

DUKE OF ST. ALBANS v. SKIPWORTH.

Ancient pasture—Patron and rector—Conversion into tillage—Amelioration of the glebe.

A rector has a right to plough up ancient meadow or pasture land for the purpose of cleansing it from moss and weeds, and otherwise ameliorating it; and the patron cannot restrain him by injunction.

The plaintiff in this case is the patron of the living of Skipworth in Lincolnshire, of which the defendant is the rector. The glebe consists, among others, of three closes of ancient pasture land, which no person could be found able to say had been ploughed up within the last seventy years, though the defendant alleged that the marks of the plough were visible in two of them, and he believed they had been ploughed within seventy years. The defendant, with a view of removing the moss and weeds with which the grass of two of the closes was intermixed, and of improving the soil, determined, on the advice of experienced agriculturists, to plough them up, and the plaintiff filed his bill to prevent him, and obtained an injunction. The defendant now moved to dissolve the injunction.

Kindersley and Glasse, for the motion.—The rector represents the fee for many purposes, and the patron has only the right of presentation. The case, as put by the plaintiff, would effectually prevent any alteration of the land ever being made if kept in a particular way for a given time. There is no case of restraining the incumbent, however, from ploughing up for the purpose of improvement. The cases of tenant for life and remainderman do not apply. They cited Countess of Rutland's case (1 Lev. 107); Goring v. Goring (3 Swanst. 661).

Turner and Amphlett, contrà.—If there be a question whether it is ancient pasture the Court will not entertain it on motion; and the onus rests on the other side to shew it is not ancient pasture. The case of Knight v. Moseley (Ambler, 176) shews they can only dig the land for repairs. The case of Martin v. Coggan (1 Hog. Rep. 120) is also in point. There can be no alteration but in the character of repairs.

Kindersley, in reply, cited Bird v. Relph (4 B. & Ad. 826), and the statute 35 Edw. 1, s. 2.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It would be going very far to decide as the plaintiff contends, for by so doing the incumbent would be prevented from making a garden, orchard, &c. on any ground not shewn to have been so applied before. I am struck with a proposition leading to such consequences, but if such be the law, of course it must be so decided.

March 17.—The MASTER of the ROLLS, after stating the case, and having cited and commented on Simmons v. Norton (7 Bing. 640; 5 M. & P. 645); Hoskins v. Featherstone (2 Bro. C.C. 552); and Co. Litt. 664, said that, considering the position as to the ploughing up the ground, and that there were no authorities on the subject, and also considering that the cases of tenant for life and remainderman did not apply, and that it would be injurious to the rectory to prevent the intended course of husbandry, he would dissolve the injunction.

Re BRACEY.

Bill of costs—Taxation—Application to refer specially.

William Merrick was the executor of a Mrs. Lewis, and a bill for the administration of her estate was filed against him as such executor by infants called Smith. In this suit he employed Mr. Bracey as his solicitor. After Mr. Merrick's death, Mr. Bracey, on the 3rd December, 1844, delivered four bills of costs to his executors amounting to 393*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*; one of these was a general bill of costs; another against the plaintiffs in the suit; a third against the defendant, Mr. Merrick; and a fourth against a Mr. Otway,

(a) These special directions are that the Master may report in a month, or the order to be void.

the heir-at-law of Mrs. Smith. The bills were all headed "The executors of William Merrick." The executors, the petitioners, did not object to pay the general bill, nor the bill against their testator, but they did object to the other two, to which they considered their testator's estate not liable. Mr. Bracey, in his affidavit, stated that the retainer for all parties was given by Merrick, and that he acted for him and the plaintiffs and Otway. After delivery of the bill no step was taken till the 18th of January, when Mr. Bracey brought an action to recover the amount of them. The petitioners now sought to distinguish the costs to which the testator's estate was liable; and it was argued that the taxing master could only tax and moderate the items (Williams v. Nichols, 1 Dowl. C. P. N. S. 924), but had no right to adjudicate as to the liability.

Kindersley and Wright, for the petitioners.

Turner, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made an order for taxation of the bills in the usual form.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

April 18, 19, 21, and 22.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MONRO and OTHERS.

Mortmain Act—Construction of deed.

Where two persons in whom there was a joint power of appointment, with a power of appointment in the survivor, executed their power in favour of a charity, and one of them died within a twelvemonth, the Court refused, under the circumstances, to treat the deed as void in the absence of the survivor of the appointors.

Whether a clergyman of the Established Church of Scotland, who has been deprived of his license by the Presbytery of Edinburgh, is still a minister in connection and full communion with the Established Church of Scotland, quære?

By an indenture, dated the 4th of April, 1832, a certain piece of land situate in St. Peter's-square, Manchester, was conveyed to Daniel Grant and others, for the purpose of erecting, preserving, and maintaining in all time coming suitable and convenient buildings in that town "for the worship and service of Almighty God in connection with and according to the forms and usages of the Established Church of Scotland." By the same indenture the trusts were declared to be out of certain voluntary subscriptions to be raised as thereinafter mentioned to build a church or place of worship, with a session-house and other requisite buildings, "for the suitable and convenient observance of the worship and service of God according to the rites and usages of the Established Church of Scotland," and after its erection to use or permit the same to be used "for the purposes of divine worship and service in connection with and according to the rites, forms, and usages of the Established Church of Scotland, and in no other religious connection, and according to no other rites, forms, or usages whatsoever, and for the preaching and expounding of God's most holy word according to the doctrine and tenets of the same Church of Scotland," as set forth and contained in the Confession of Faith agreed on at Westminster in 1647, and ratified by the Act of Parliament in 1690; "the said divine worship and service to be conducted by a minister or ministers belonging to and in full communion with the said Established Church of Scotland." The indenture then provided for the election and choosing of the minister, and it declared "that if a licentiate or probationer of the said Church of Scotland shall at any of the said elections be chosen as and for the minister of the said church, he shall procure himself to be regularly ordained, or set apart, to the office of the holy ministry by the Presbytery of Edinburgh before entering on the discharge of his clerical functions as the minister of the said church; and if an ordained minister shall be chosen, then he shall be admitted by and with the consent of his Presbytery." The indenture then provided that all disputes, &c. as to the conduct, &c. of the minister, should be referred by both parties to the arbitration of the Moderator of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, the senior Professor of Divinity in that university, the Procurator of the Church of Scotland, and the principal Clerk of the General Assembly of the said Church, whose decision, or the decision of such of them as would consent to arbitrate, was to be final, and whether or not the party complained of should concur in the application; and the reference was to be made a rule of the Court of King's Bench, and it was provided, "that in the event of the incumbent minister of the said church incurring such sentence, decision, or enactment, of or by any ecclesiastical court in Scotland, having authority or jurisdiction in that behalf, as in the case of his being resident in Scotland would be equivalent to deposition or deprivation, such minister should cease to be the incumbent of the said church, and should thenceforward be deprived of all power, right, or title to officiate therein, or to receive any benefit or emolument as the minister thereof." The indenture then, after other provisoes, directed that each minister should sign a copy of the deed, to signify his assent thereto, "and particularly his consent and submission to the reference hereinbefore provided and agreed to be made in the event of a misunderstanding or cause of offence occurring between minister and the congregation as aforesaid." The indenture then concluded with a proviso, that it should not be competent for the said managers, or any of them, or any future trustees or managers, or any of them, either with or without the concurrence of the communicants, or any number of them, to alter, disannul, vary, or make void any of the provisoes, stipulations, agreements, or declarations thereinbefore contained, whereby the aforesaid building and premises were connected with, and solely appropriated to the use of, the congregation belonging to the aforesaid Established Church of Scotland, or whereby the worship therein was appointed to be observed and performed according to the rites and usages, and conformably to the doctrines and tenets of the said Church of Scotland, and by a minister belonging to and in full communion with the aforesaid Church of Scotland; such last-mentioned provisoes, stipulations, and declarations being thereby declared to be for ever unalterable. Mr. Monro and the greater part of his congregation having by several overt acts declared their sympathy with, and concurrence in the views, of the Free Church of Scotland, Mr. Monro was deprived of his license by the Presbytery of Edinburgh; and this information was filed at the instance of some of his congregation, who did not concur in the views which he had adopted. The original indenture not having been enrolled within a proper time, the grantors, who had a joint power of appointment during their lives, and a power of appointment in the survivor, executed another indenture at the instance of some of the defendants, which was duly enrolled; but one of the appointors died within a twelvemonth after the execution of the appointment.

Russell and Little now moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from the use of the church, &c. except according to the provisions of the indenture of 1832, alleging that Mr. Monro had forfeited his right to officiate as a minister of the church.

Rolt, Wigram, and Selwyn, for the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that as some of the defendants had exercised their undoubted right in setting up the statute of Geo. 2, it became necessary to dispose of that point. It had been said that a deed, material to the title, had not been enrolled, none having been enrolled prior to that of the 4th of April, 1832, which deed directed the purposes to which the property purchased was to be devoted. It had been argued, that because some earlier deeds, executed with a view to this deed, had not been enrolled, therefore this deed, though duly enrolled, must fail of effect by reason of the non-enrolment of the others. That was a proposition to which he could not accede. Assuming that the earlier deeds were void, were they so for the reasons alleged? If so, it would have the effect of preventing any legal estate being, at the date of the deed of the 4th of April, in any of the parties to that deed, so far at least as the greater part of the property was concerned, namely, that bought of Mr. and Mrs. Brown. He must, however, view this deed standing by itself, and on the assumption of the invalidity of the former ones, as a contract for valuable consideration between the parties to it, and that the property conveyed by it should be dedicated to certain particular specified purposes. There might have been some outstanding legal interest capable of being enforced against them; but he did not for a moment hesitate to say that all the parties to that deed were among themselves, and, as to their several interests in the property, bound by it. To that deed the subscribers who contributed the money were not parties. It was assumed by the argument that they had not merely a right to receive back their money, but that they had a lien on the land itself for the proportionate amount of their several subscriptions. On either of those points he declined to give any opinion whatsoever. They had, he would assume, an equitable interest in respect of their shares. What, however, was done? For many years large sums of money had been expended on the land, on the faith of the deed; liabilities had been incurred by parties connected with the institution; and their interests were in various ways affected by what had been transacted on the faith of that deed. On the materials, therefore, before the Court, it was its duty to hold that the subscribers so witnessing, sanctioning, and encouraging these acts, having full and entire knowledge of the acts, and of the objects and intentions with which those acts were done, could not be heard on any principle of justice to raise an adverse title. The question of enrolment had nothing whatever to do with a case like this. An outstanding interest had been alleged to be in Mrs. Brown, which had been conveyed to two of the defendants, and it had been said that they had a right to set it up and avail themselves of it in the same way as that lady could do if she were here. Fortunately for the interests of justice and for the cause of honesty and truth, that doctrine could not for one moment be allowed to prevail here. The recitals in the deed by which Mr. and Mrs. Brown made the conveyance shewed that those parties expressly apprehended the defect, and as plainly and expressly stated their intention not to take any advantage of it; and by that deed they fully released and gave up all their rights in the land. With such circumstances before it, it was scarcely possible for the Court to view the point with that calmness becoming the judicial bench. It was amply proved that the deed was obtained with the full concurrence of all necessary parties, and the persons to whom the interest was conveyed were trustees for the vendors if the purposes had failed; and as they had not failed, they were equally trustees for the purchasers. No such defence could be allowed to prevail. That such transactions should arise on a question even in a case merely civil, would excite surprise and regret; but that they should have taken place upon a question of advancement of religion, must cause much stronger observation. His opinion was, that this ground of defence had entirely and signally failed; still the Court ought to be careful not to allow such a line of defence to unduly prejudice any other which might be fairly and honestly taken. Then followed the question as to the construction of the deed of the 4th of April, 1832. In this case the Established Church of Scotland and the Church of Scotland must be taken to mean the same thing; they both meant that system of religious doctrine, of ecclesiastical discipline, and ecclesiastical jurisdiction, which in a particular state was not only tolerated, not merely protected, but was recognized, sanctioned, and maintained by the legislative and executive power of the state, and embraced by it as a part of the national institution. There could be no doubt, also, and it was admitted, that in this instrument the words "in connection with" must be read as if the words "the Established Church of Scotland" immediately followed; thus,—"for the purposes of divine worship and service in connection with the Established Church of Scotland, and according to the rites, forms, and usages of the Established Church of Scotland." The minister was required to be a minister to and in full communion with the Established Church of Scotland. The dispute which had arisen between the parties rendered it necessary, or would do so, to come to some conclusion on the meaning of these words. Some help towards an explanation was afforded by that clause of the deed relating to the deposition of ministers. That clause seemed to infer that there might be some ecclesiastical court in Scotland which would have authority, spiritual at least, over the incumbent minister of this church; but what ecclesiastical court, what jurisdiction, and how exercised, was not explained. Persons learned in this particular subject did not appear to agree as to the exposition of the words "connection," "communion," or "belonging to." What was being in connection with the Established Church of Scotland? What was being in full communion with that church? What was belonging to that church? It was much easier to say what was not, than to define what they meant. But this motion did not call on the Court to define the precise meaning of these phrases, except that there was the sentence of deprivation pronounced on the 30th of January, 1844, by the Presbytery of Edinburgh; and were he satisfied that that body was competent, and being so competent, had regularly and duly exercised that competent jurisdiction, he probably should be able to say that that did shew a case of connection ceasing, and of communion being at an end. But two persons, both learned on the subject, differed on the grounds to which he had referred, and before he acted at this stage of the cause upon the notion that the sentence did have the effect of severing the bond between Mr. Monro and the Church of Scotland, and which ought to have the effect of excommunication, he ought to be clearly satisfied that it did have that effect. He was not clearly satisfied it did. It would be premature now to give any opinion on the subject; it was sufficient to reserve the point for subsequent decision. He was therefore of opinion, on the materials before him, that it was a matter of reasonable doubt whether this particular jurisdiction in Scotland was competent, and also of reasonable doubt whether, if competent for the purpose, it had duly and validly exercised its competent jurisdiction. He did not decide either point, and he repeated that he was not satisfied on the evidence on either of those points. He was bound, therefore, for the present purpose, and on the present occasion, to lay that sentence aside. Yet he was still called on to say that the connection, the communion, had ceased. Connection was a very general expression: what did it mean? It might infer identity of doctrine, of rites, of external forms, or similarity of discipline: but in none of these respects had there been any infringements. What did it infer beyond? did it infer spiritual jurisdiction? If so, then of what nature, by whom to be exercised, and subject to what appeal? If he were not to regulate himself by the sentence of the Edinburgh Presbytery, he ought to be able to define what jurisdiction was meant. He was not able to do so; he was obliged to come to the same conclusion as to the other words, namely, "communion with," and "belonging to," looking at the language of the other document, called the Overture, and at its time, 1844, to which Mr. Monro was an actively consenting party. If he were asked in a general and popular sense, and not as a judge or a lawyer, he should say that the connection between Mr. Monro and the Established Church of Scotland had ceased. But he was not at liberty at the present stage to decide a question of such nicety and importance. Considering that the morality of Mr. Monro was unquestioned; that the correctness of his theology, according to the views of the Church of Scotland, was undisputed; that his mode of administering the rites and forms of that religion was unimpeached; it would not be safe on the present occasion, especially as in addition to these reasons there existed a reasonable expectation that the suit might be prosecuted and brought to a hearing on evidence regularly taken within a very short period, he therefore thought that he ought not now to make any order to the full extent of the notice of motion. The order would be, that James Burt the elder, &c. be restrained from permitting or allowing the buildings to be used for any other purpose but for divine worship, according to the rites, forms, and usages of the Established Church of Scotland, by a minister or licentiate who had been ordained or licensed according to the doctrines and rules, and under the authority of the Established Church of Scotland, and from doing or procuring any act by which the same might become liable to be used for any other purpose than those of the deed of 1832; and that the defendants Burt and Stewart be restrained from conveying any interest they took under the deed of 1844, in any other manner than to give effect to the trusts of the deed of 1832.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

LUND v. BLANCHARD.
Tuesday, May 6.
Company—Injunction—Contempt.

Plaintiffs suing on behalf of themselves and the other shareholders of a company, obtained an injunction restraining the defendants from taking proceedings at law. The defendants issued execution against some of the shareholders not named as plaintiffs.

Held, that this was not a contempt, or breach of the injunction, but that, on the plaintiff's shewing that the parties proceeded against stood in the same situation as themselves, the Court will extend the benefit of the injunction to them.

JUDGMENT.

The bill in this cause had been filed by the plaintiff and two others, on behalf of themselves and all other the shareholders of the Yorkshire Agricultural and Commercial Banking Company, against the London and Westminster Bank. The answers had not been put in, but an injunction had been granted, in pursuance of the prayer of the bill, against the defendants, restraining them from proceeding at law against the plaintiffs. Notwithstanding the injunction, the London and Westminster Bank took out execution, upon a judgment obtained by them, against certain shareholders of the Yorkshire Banking Company not named as plaintiffs in the bill, upon the ground that the injunction affected those only who were named upon the record as plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, therefore, moved that the defendants should be committed for contempt of court, or that a special injunction should be granted restraining the legal proceedings against such of the shareholders as were not named as plaintiffs, and it was upon this motion that his Honour now gave judgment. In these cases his Honour said, the Court permitted some of the shareholders to sue on behalf of themselves and all the other shareholders, or in other words, a company might sue by a few of its members, as representing the whole; and in this instance there appeared to be two considerations, first, whether the injunction had been broken, and if not, whether, secondly, there was any mode of protecting those shareholders who were represented by the plaintiffs? If there was not, there would be a denial of justice. Companies were allowed to sue in this form for their own benefit, but not to the prejudice of the defendants. Now the defendants urged, first, that there had been no breach of the injunction; secondly, that a separate bill must be filed by each party, not upon the record, who was proceeded against at law; thirdly, in the event of the last proposition failing, that a special application by the plaintiffs was the proper mode of proceeding; and fourthly, that such special application must be considered upon the evidence of its merits. As to the first proposition, he must decide that there had been no breach of the injunction, which was against suing those three plaintiffs alone; but as the Court allowed them to represent the company, he must assume that they could do all that was necessary to protect those they represented. The second proposition he could not accede to, as that would deprive a company of the benefit of the rule allowed them by the Court.

As to the third proposition, he thought that inasmuch as by holding that the injunction did not extend to restrain proceedings against any except the three shareholders named as plaintiffs, he did, in effect, decide that the onus of shewing that the proceedings against other shareholders ought to be restrained, was thrown upon the plaintiffs. The fourth question was, what case must be shewn by the plaintiffs in order to induce the Court to restrain proceedings against those parties represented and not named as plaintiffs? He held, that there must be a special application, and that the onus of it must rest upon the plaintiffs, but upon what evidence must it be founded? He thought the practice of the Court must stand thus: the Court granted the injunction upon the application of those named as plaintiffs, and it was no breach of such injunction to sue those shareholders who were not named; and it appeared to him to be a question of form in what mode the plaintiffs might have the benefit of that application. Upon the present frame of the bill he thought it was sufficient for the plaintiffs to shew that the parties they represented stood in exactly the same situation as themselves; and therefore the defendants must shew such a case as in the opinion of the Court might be thought sufficient to induce the Court not to extend the benefit of the injunction to such parties. But it would not be necessary that the merits of the case should be gone into as they were gone into in the answer, the answer not having come in, and the company who were allowed to sue in this form had not the benefit of the answer by which to try whether the injunction ought to be continued till the hearing. He was of opinion, upon the whole, that the plaintiffs had shewn that the parties proceeded against stood in the same situation as themselves; and therefore that upon this motion the defendants ought to be restrained.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Re DOWNEY.
Wednesday, May 7.

A bench warrant under 43 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 1, must state the amount of bail and before whom the prisoner is to be brought to be bound over.

Peacock shewed cause against a rule obtained by Jerris, Q. C. (suprà, p. 37), why Thomas Downey, now in the gaol of Liverpool, should not be discharged out of custody upon a bench warrant. A true bill for conspiracy had been found against him and one Jones, at the sessions, and before any certificate of indictment filed, a bench warrant had been issued under 43 Geo. 3, c. 56; and therefore that Act does not apply; and it is that Act alone which requires the amount of bail.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The objections are, that it does not state before whom he was to be brought, or the amount of bail. Rule absolute.

BUSINESS OF THE COURTS.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—As there are a considerable number of enlarged rules, which have been standing over a long time, we propose to make a peremptory paper of such rules for the Bail Court for the ensuing Term. Two of the pending rules will be placed in the paper, to be taken after motions upon the first day of Term; and two, or some other small number, will be called on every other day before motions. Particular cases will be named beforehand for particular days, in order that the gentlemen engaged in those rules may have notice that they are to be taken. In this (the full Court), all the time, except the first and last four days and the regular paper days, will be given to the new trial paper, to which the Court always has recourse upon the failure of other business. As the new trial paper is, in effect, the peremptory paper of this Court, no other peremptory paper will be made here.

LLOYDS v. ROBINSON.

Attorneys cannot attest warrants of attorney who act for both parties.

This was a rule to shew cause why a warrant of attorney and execution should not be set aside, the attorney having subscribed himself thus: "I subscribe myself to be attorney."

Watson, Q.C. shewed cause, and held this to be sufficient, though the attorney might have been employed by both parties. (Jarvis v. Smith, 1 D. & L. 962.)

Crompton, contrà, was stopped by the Court.

PATTESON, J. (Lord Denman, C.J. having left the court).—It is quite clear that the party signing was attorney for both parties, and that, therefore, the transaction was not regular. Rule absolute.

LEVI v. LEVI and ANOTHER.

The Reg. Gen. H. T. 2 W. 4, r. 79, applies to all writs of sci. fa. when the judgment is more than ten years old, and an appearance entered without authority is no waiver of the objection that that rule has not been complied with.

Humfrey, Q.C. and Archbold shewed cause against a rule calling on the executrix of the plaintiff to shew cause why the writ of sci. fa. issued in this action should not be set aside, and why she, or her attorney, should not pay the costs of the sci. fa. and of the present application. In October 1832, judgment was signed by the plaintiff upon a warrant of attorney; and execution issued within the year. In 1843, the plaintiff died, and the writ of sci. fa. was sued out for the purpose of making his executrix a party to the record. The defeazance of the warrant of attorney contained a proviso that, notwithstanding the death of the defendants, or that execution should not be issued within a year and a day, the defendants would take no means to defeat or impeach the judgment, or delay or impede execution. Upon the issuing of the sci. fa. Messrs. Pontifex and Moginie entered an appearance for both the defendants; but the affidavits upon which the rule was obtained denied that they had any authority to do so for one of the defendants, and charged collusion with the plaintiff; that charge, however, was most distinctly denied in the affidavits on the other side. The principal objection was, that the sci. fa. had been issued without any rule; but the answer was, that in this case a rule was not necessary; the Reg. Gen. H. T. 2 Wm. 4, r. 79, applying only to writs of sci. fa. to revive a judgment, and not to writs of sci. fa. for the purpose of introducing new parties into the record. Besides, all objections were waived; 1st, by the defeazance, which rendered a sci. fa. altogether unnecessary (Morris v. King, 9 L. Jour. Q. B. 320; Morgan v. Burgess, 1 Dowl. N. S. 850; Hiscocks v. Kemp, 3 Ad. & E. 676); and, 2ndly, by appearing to the sci. fa.; for both parties were bound by the appearance entered for them. (Anon. Salk. 88.)

Watson, Q. C. in support of the rule.—Every writ of sci. fa. is a writ to revive the judgment; and the rule of Hilary Term, 2 Wm. 4, applies; the writ is in all cases couched in the same form. [WIGHTMAN, J.—The effect of it is to revive the judgment.] Then the fi. fa. ought to have been returned, and is not; where there has been a part levy, a plaintiff cannot have a sci. fa. without returning the writ of execution (Wilson v. Kingston, 2 Chitt. Rep. 203); and, thirdly, the judgment-roll ought to be carried in, in order to enable the plaintiff to bring debt or sci. fa. on the judgment. (1 Chit. Archb. Pract. 337.) Neither is there any waiver. The defeazance does not apply to this case, and the appearance was entered without authority from the party making the present application, and he therefore is not bound by it; and in fact, that appearance was afterwards withdrawn, and notice of that withdrawal given to the plaintiff.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is quite clear that Messrs. Pontifex had no authority to appear for this party. The question is, has he by agreement waived the necessity for a motion according to the R. G. 2 Wm. 4? Now the defeazance applies to a case which has not occurred, viz. the death of the defendant, and not to the death of the plaintiff, which has rendered this sci. fa. necessary.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Rule absolute.

CROFTS v. BROWN.

The affidavit in support of a rule for a distringas must state not only that the calls were made at the defendant's house, but where that house is situate; and a statement made by the defendant that he should upset the distringas, because the summons was served on his brother, and not on himself, is not a sufficient admission that the writ of summons had come to his knowledge to dispense with that necessity.

A rule nisi had been obtained to rescind an order of Rolfe, B. granting a distringas, on the ground of defects in the affidavit. That affidavit stated, that on the 12th of March last "the deponent called at the residence of the defendant," and that a person came into the passage and stated that he was the defendant's brother; it then proceeded to specify the several appointments and calls, and concluded with a declaration of the deponent's belief that the defendant was keeping out of the way to avoid service of the said writ of summons. The affidavit in support of the present rule described the defendant as of 6, Kennington-green, in the county of Surrey; and the affidavits in opposition stated that that was the place at which the calls had been made and the summons left; and further, that the defendant had said that he would upset the distringas, because the writ had been left with his brother, and not himself.

Petersdorff now shewed cause.—First, it is objected that the affidavit is insufficient in not stating where the knowledge. At all events, the facts are now supplied by the fresh affidavits, and that is sufficient to support a judge's order. Lastly, the application is too late; this rule not being obtained till the 18th, and the execution of the distringas having been on the 8th.

Watson, Q. C. in support of the rule.—The affidavit must state the locality of the residence. (Halton v. White, 2 M. & G. 295.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We have no doubt of that, but what do you say as to the admission?] It is not sufficient; only part of a conversation is given, and the supposed admission was probably made in answer to a statement that the distringas had been obtained, and that the writ had been served upon the brother. He was then stopped by the Court.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is certainly very likely that the defendant was told of what had taken place, and I do not think that his declaration amounts to an admission of the receipt of the writ. The rule must therefore be absolute, with costs.

Rule absolute accordingly.

REG. v. HULL DOCK COMPANY.

Hilary Term, Jan. 22, 30.

The Hull Dock Company are entitled, under their several Acts of Parliament, to take certain tolls or dues from all vessels lading or unlading within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, whether they enter the docks or basin of the company or not. These tolls are collected at the Queen's Custom House, at a distance from the docks. The company have no property in the harbour or haven. Held, on appeal from the sessions, that the company were not rateable in respect of the dues paid by vessels discharging their cargoes in the river Humber, without entering the harbour-entrance, basin, or docks; or in respect of the dues paid by vessels discharging their cargoes in the Old Harbour, without entering the docks or basin; but that they were rateable in respect of the other dues.

This was an appeal, by the Hull Dock Company against an order made at the Hull Borough Sessions, confirming certain rates upon the company, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench. The material facts stated in the case were these:—

That the docks of the company had been made under 14 Geo. 3, c. 56; 42 Geo. 3, c. 91; 45 Geo. 3, c. 42; 5 Geo. 4, c. 13. That by 14 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 42, tolls were granted to the company for ships coming into or going out of the said harbour, basin, or docks within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, or unlading or putting on shore, or lading or taking on board, any of their cargo, or any goods, wares, or merchandize, within the said port. After this Act, the Old Dock was built by the appellants, and also the Humber Dock, with the lockpit and entrance-basin; and after the 42 Geo. 3, the Junction Dock was built. The three docks communicate, and there is an entrance into the Humber Dock from the Humber. The Old Dock has an entrance from the harbour or river Hull, which falls into and is entered from the Humber, and the Old Dock communicates with the Humber Dock by means of the Junction Dock. The company have no right of property in this harbour or haven, or in the Humber, and only occupy the entrance-basin of the Humber Dock. The port of Hull, in its more confined sense, includes the river Humber, to the midstream; and all vessels frequenting the docks or harbour pass through that portion of the stream within the port. Some load and discharge in the Humber without entering the harbour, entrance-basin, or docks; others load and unload in the entrance-basin, without entering the docks or the harbour; others load and unload in the Old Harbour, and discharge and load some on the east and some on the west side thereof, but without entering any of the docks or basins of the company; others enter the harbour and discharge their cargoes either in the Old Dock, or in the Junction or Humber Dock; and others enter by the entrance-basin of the Humber Dock, and proceed through it to the Humber Dock, or the Old Dock, or the Junction Dock. All of these classes pay tonnage due to the company, which, however, are collected at the Queen's Custom House, without reference to the position or destination of the the vessels.

The company was rated for all these several tonnage dues. The Court of Quarter Sessions held the company liable in respect of dues. 1st, for those ships using the entrance-basin, without going into the docks; 2nd, for those passing through the Old Harbour to the Old Dock, and using that or the other docks; 3rd, for those passing the entrance-basin into the Humber Dock and using that or the other docks; but not liable for the dues paid by those discharging their cargoes in the river Humber without entering the harbour, entrance-basin, or docks, or by those which discharge their cargoes in the Old Harbour, either on the west or east side thereof, without entering the docks or basin.

The question for the Court was, whether the company were liable for all or any of the above dues. There was no dispute as to the amount of deductions.

The case was argued in Hilary Term, Jan. [illegible] and Jan. 30.

M. D. Hill, Q.C. Archbold, and Raines, for the rate.—It is for the first time contended, after numerous decisions in the mode of rating the company, that they are not rateable at all. A uniform course of proceeding ought not to be lightly altered. (Rex v. Coke, 5 B. & C. 805.) These decisions are, R. v. Hull Dock Company (1 T. R. 219, 3 B. & C. 516; 5 M. & S. 394); Hull Dock Company v. Browne (2 B. & Ad. 43). The appellants rely on Reg. v. Bristol Dock Company ([illegible] B. 535). But [illegible] very distinguishable. Here there is no provision at all in the statutes as to rating the company, and the general law therefore applies. The profits are here earned by the docks, and are within the principle of R. v. Aire and Calder Navigation Company (3 B. & Ad. 533). There is benefit even to ships not entering the dock. The question is, what earned the dues, and they are given in respect of and for the docks. (R. v. Barnes, 9 B. & C. 810; R. v. New River Company, 1 M. & S. 503.) It is different from the case of a lighthouse, for there the privilege of putting up a lighthouse is a personal privilege, and the profits made are not in respect of the house or land where the lighthouse is. (R. v. Coke, 5 B. & C. 797.) All the dues are here received in respect of the land where the docks are. (R. v. M'Donald, 12 East, 324; R. v. Marquis of [illegible]idge [illegible]

Martin, Q.C. and Bain).—What is rateable or not must be determined by the statute. These tolls are not payments in respect of land, but payments in gross in respect of certain benefits arising from expenditure by the company. In canals and other similar cases, it is the actual use of the land that produces the profits. Tolls per se are not rateable. (R. v. Tynemouth, 12 East, 47; R. v. Coke, 5 B. & C. 797.) As to the ships which discharge in the Humber, they never use the docks at all. The recitals in the statute shew that the company ought not to have been rated at all. The dues would be payable although the docks became useless by the act of God. The docks might be let to a tenant, and the company retain the dues. Dues are by the 42nd section of the Act a duty in gross. (Reg. v. South Western Railway Company, 1 Q. B. 515; R. v. Thomas, 9 B. & C. 114; Hull Dock Company v. Lamonte, 8 B. & C. 42, were also cited.)

JUDGMENT.

DENMAN, C. J.—This case was argued in the last Term, and arose out of a decision in Reg. v. The Bristol Dock Company (1 Q. B. 535). Many cases have been decided and reported as to the mode of rating the Hull Dock Company, but it is now for the first time contended that they are not rateable. We do not mention this as in itself an objection, but in order to shew what the real question is, that if the company are within the principle of that case, they are not rateable at all; or if they be within the principle as to parcel of their tolls, they are not rateable as to that parcel. The Bristol Dock Company's case was a very peculiar one: the company there were empowered to convert a large portion of the river Avon into a floating harbour, and to construct a new channel for the river itself; the great point of resemblance in which is, that certain dues were granted to them on every ship entering the port of Bristol. That port extended to a great distance, and many ships would enter it, but they would have no occasion to use the floating harbour, and yet would be liable to pay the dues under the Act of Parliament. In that respect the present case is very similar, for there are many vessels liable to pay dues to the company which never used their docks at all. But in the Bristol case the floating harbour was not the property of the company before it was converted into a floating harbour; it was part of the river Avon and the port of Bristol, the property in which was vested in the corporation; and there are no words in the Act of Parliament vesting the property in the company. But it was sought to rate them in respect of entering the floating harbour, called Cumberland Basin, because that, or at least part of it, was the property of the company. That basin consisted of a portion of the old river and the additions which were made to it by excavating several acres of land; those additions appear to have been the property of the company. But the Act of Parliament provided that the company, in respect of those additions, should be rated in a particular manner; and the Court thought that the company should be rated only in the manner provided by the Act, and that the dues or tolls could not be said to be profits arising from the basin in the parish in which it was situated. Here the docks are the property of the company, and were excavated from land granted to the company, and made entirely de novo by them. The occupiers of the land from which the docks were constructed were rateable for them; and if the docks yielded any profits out of the land to those who constructed them, the company surely must, in the absence of any enactment to the contrary, be liable to be rated in respect of such profits. In the Bristol case, inasmuch as the company could not be rated in respect of the principal subject-matter of the floating harbour for which the dues were granted and received, the Court held that they could not be rated for the mere entrance-basin. In the present case, the company can be rated in respect of the principal subject-matter; that is, the docks themselves. It is said, that tolls in this are not given to them for the use of the docks, because ships must pay, whether they use them or not; and so, because the ships that do not enter the docks cannot be said to pay for the use of them, it is argued that those which do enter the docks and use them, cannot be said to pay for the use of them. This argument is ingenious, but we do not think it conclusive, nor did it prevail in the Bristol case. The Court did not there say the tolls were not granted for the use of the floating harbour, but that the company could not be rated in respect of those tolls, because they were not the owners of the floating harbour. But it is said further, these tolls are due on a ship the moment it enters the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, whether it proceeds into the dock or not; therefore, as the dues are attached before their arrival in the docks, they cannot be said to be earned by the company in the dock. The lan-[illegible] liament, [illegible] loading goods in such port." The harbour there may probably mean harbour or basin; but, whatever it means, the distinction is between coming into the docks, and loading or unloading, or coming within the port. It is sufficient to shew that the tolls do not attach on ships on the moment of coming into port. The fact, therefore, on which this argument rests, is not as stated, and, it appears to us, is not convincing. A ship that comes into and uses the dock is not the less benefited by it because the tolls must have been paid even if it had not come in, and the benefit conferred by the use of the docks is not alone meritorious cause of the toll, because other ships pay it where the meritorious cause does not apply. To those that come into the docks, benefit is conferred by the docks, and therefore the tolls paid for that benefit must be held to be earned there in the docks, and to be profits arising there: and as to those ships that do not come into the docks, which never are the property of the company at all, the case is very different. The toll given to the company, and which such ships are subject to pay, is doubtless given in respect of the company having made the docks; but still it does not arise from the use of the docks. It is a naked toll, as much as tolls paid by vessels passing lighthouses, and similar cases. On the whole, we are of opinion that the learned Recorder was right in the view which he took of this case, and that the order of sessions must be confirmed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Thursday, May 8.

WALKER v. PETCHELL.

Devise to S. W. for her life, and after her decease to such one or more of her child or children, for such estates and interests as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment unto her children, if more than one, equally, and to their several and respective heirs. But in case the said S. W. should happen to depart this life without leaving lawful issue, as aforesaid, then unto and to the use of the heirs of the said S. W. for ever. Held, that the word "issue" meant "children," and that therefore the limitation over to S. W. in fee was not void on the ground of remoteness.

Feigned issue.—In pursuance of an order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Erskine, made on the 16th of May, 1844, by consent, the parties stated for the opinion of the Court the following

SPECIAL CASE.

The plaintiff is the widow of the above-mentioned J. S. Walker, deceased, who before and at the time of his decease, and also at the time of the making and publishing of his last will and testament hereinafter mentioned, was seized in his demesne as of fee, of, in, and among other premises, the premises mentioned in the declaration in this cause, being a certain estate situate in the parish of Matlock, in the county of Derby aforesaid, called the Cuckoo-stone Dale estate, and also a close, piece, or parcel of land called the Short Butts, situate in the same parish and county. The said J. S. Walker being seized as aforesaid, on the 14th day of October, A.D. 1833, duly made and published his last will and testament in writing, duly executed and attested, so as to pass real estates by devise, and thereby gave and devised the premises mentioned in the said declaration (together with other real and also personal property), as follows; and by the following description; that is to say,—

"I give, devise, and bequeath unto my friend Charles Else, of Matlock aforesaid, publican, and my wife's father, Richard Lill, of Doncaster, in the county of York, flax-dresser, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, all and every my messuages, cottages, farm, closes, lands, tenements, hereditaments, and real and leasehold estates whatsoever, ate, lying, and being in the several counties of by, York, and Lincoln, or elsewhere in the kingdom of Great Britain, with their rights, members, and appurtenances, and also all my money and securities for money, and all other my personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature or kind soever, not hereinbefore specifically bequeathed to my said wife (meaning the said Sarah Walker, the plaintiff), to hold the same unto and to the use of the said Charles Else and Richard Lill, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon the trusts and for the ends, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to the powers, provisoes, and declarations hereinafter expressed concerning the same (that is to say)."

And the said J. S. Walker then, by his said will, and in the subsequent part thereof, after creating certain trusts not material to the present question, declared and directed as follows; that is to say,—

"And as to all the real residue and remainder of my said real estates (which residue included and comprised the said premises mentioned in the said declaration), and also as to my said leasehold and personal estates, I direct that they, my said trustees (meaning the said Charles Else and Richard Lill), or the survivor of them, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, shall and do stand possessed thereof and interested therein, in trust, from and immediately after my said daughter (meaning one Betsy Walker, in the said will mentioned) shall attain her said age of twenty-one years as aforesaid; or in case of her death before that age, then from and immediately after that event to pay unto or permit and suffer my said wife, Sarah Walker, or her assigns, to receive and take the rents, issues, profits, interest, and proceeds thereof, as the same shall from time to time become payable, for her own use and benefit during the term of her natural life; and from and immediately after her decease, then that my said trustees (meaning the said Charles Else and Richard Lill), or the survivor of them, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, shall and do stand possessed of the same real, leasehold, and personal estates, in trust for all and every or such one or more of the child or children, whether male or female, of her, my said wife, lawfully begotten, for such estate and estates, interest and interests, and in such parts, shares, and proportions, manner and form, and subject to such charges and payments to any one or more of such child or children, and with and under such restrictions, limitations, and powers, with or without power of revocation, as she, my said wife, whether sole or covert, and notwithstanding her coverture, at any time or times during her life, by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses, or by her last will and testament, or any codicil or codicils thereto, or any writing or writings purporting to be, or in the nature of, her last will and testament, or codicil or codicils, to be by her signed and published in the presence of, and attested by, three or more credible witnesses, shall direct, limit, or appoint, or give, devise, or bequeath the same; and in default of such direction, limitation, or appointment, gift, devise, bequest, then in trust for all and every the child and children of her my said wife; if more than one, in equal shares, as tenants in common, and to their several and respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever. But in case my said wife, Sarah Walker, shall happen to depart this life without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid, then I give, devise, and bequeath the said residue of my said real estates (which residue included and comprised the said premises mentioned in the said declaration), and also my said leasehold and personal estates, unto and to the use of the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of my said wife (meaning of the said Sarah Walker, the plaintiff) for ever."

The said J. S. Walker, after making his said will, died, seized as aforesaid, on the 8th day of Nov. A.D. 1833, without having altered or revoked his said will.

The said Betsy Walker, the said testator's daughter, attained the age of sixteen years on the 19th day of February, 1844.

The said plaintiff, Sarah Walker, is the same Sarah Walker as is mentioned in the said will as the wife of the said testator.

The premises mentioned in the said declaration were and are comprised in and part of the said residue of the said real estates of the said testator.

The appendix to this case contains a copy of the whole of the said will; and it is hereby provided and agreed, that such copy shall be considered as incorporated in, and constituting a part of, this case, and shall and may, by the Court, counsel, and all parties, be referred to, used, and treated accordingly.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the said Sarah Walker, the plaintiff, on the 23rd day of April, 1844, was entitled, under and by virtue of the said will of the said J. S. Walker, to an estate in fee-simple, subjected to be defeated only in the event of having a legitimate child, of and in the premises mentioned in the said declaration, and called respectively the Cuckoo-stone Dale Estate, and the the Short Butts.

If the Court shall be of opinion in the affirmative, then the defendant agrees that a judgment by confession of 10*l.* damages, or otherwise as the Court may think fit, shall and may be entered for the plaintiff immediately after the decision of this Court; but if the Court shall be of a contrary opinion, then the plaintiff agrees that a judgment of nolle prosequi, or otherwise as the Court may think fit, shall and may be entered against her immediately after the decision of this case, and in either event, judgment shall be entered up accordingly.

The case was argued in Michaelmas Term last, by Kinglake, Serjt. (with him Fitzgerald), for the plaintiff, and by Channell, Serjt. (with him Willes), for the defendant; when the following authorities were cited: For the plaintiff, Crump v. Norwood (7 Taunt. 362); Rex v. Marquis of Stafford (7 East, 521), Doe v. Perryn (3 T. R. 484); Doe dem. Herbert v. Selby (2 B. & C. 926); Fearne, Conting. Rem. 8th edit. 373. For the defendant, Doe dem. Todd v. Duesbury (8 M. & W. 514). Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—The question before us in this case arises upon the will of John Sybray Walker, whereby he devised all his real estate to trustees and their heirs, to the use of them and their heirs, upon trust, as to the purposes mentioned in the special case, after a particular devise, on which no question arises, to permit and suffer his wife Sarah, the plaintiff, to receive the rents and profits for her own use, for the term of her natural life, and after her decease, in trust for all and every such one or more of her child or children, for such estates and interests as she should by deed or will appoint. And in default of appointment, in trust for the children of his wife, if more than one, equally, and to their several and respective heirs; and in case his said wife should die without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid, then he devised the said real estates unto and to the use of the heirs of his said wife for ever. As the trustees took a legal estate under this devise we are placed under some difficulty by reason of the established rule of the Courts of Westminster Hall, as to giving our opinion on a question which relates to the equitable estate; and it is only in consequence of the urgency of the counsel on both sides, and their consent that the case should be considered as if actually amended by stating a devise of the legal estate unto the devisees of the same quantity as those given to them in equity, that we proceed to give our judgment herein. The question stated in this special case for our consideration is, whether Sarah Walker, the plaintiff, is entitled to an estate in fee-simple, subject to be defeated only in the event of her having a child; and the whole argument before us has proceeded upon the question whether the event on which the limitation of the remainder in fee to Sarah Walker depends is or is not too remote; it being con[illegible]ded on both sides, that if that limitation depends on an indefinite failure of issue in Sarah Walker, the plaintiff, it would be considered as being too remote, whereas if it depends on her dying without leaving issue at the time of her death, it would be a good limitation. The general rule of construction of wills, as established by a long course of decided cases, is, that the words "dying without leaving issue," unless they are qualified or controlled by other words, must be taken to refer to an indefinite failure of issue. So in an executory devise over, which is made to depend on general failure of issue, it would be on the ground of being too remote. The point to be considered, therefore, is, whether the testator has shewn on the face of the will an intention that those words should receive a more qualified construction. The testator gives by his will an estate for life to his widow, with a contingent remainder in fee to her children, in case she has any, and immediately afterwards proceeds to make the provision in question, in case she should die without leaving lawful issue, "as aforesaid." And we think those words of reference, "as aforesaid," do manifestly shew an intention of the testator that the general word "issue" should be construed to mean children; for the words aforesaid," must necessarily refer to some description of issue which has been already mentioned in the will; and as the only mention in the will of any issue of the wife has been the mention of the children of the wife, we think that the necessary inference is, that the testator, by the word "issue," meant children. If the limitation over depends on the wife dying without leaving children, then, consequently, there can be no objection to it on the ground of remoteness. It may not, perhaps, be altogether correct to state the question in the precise form in which it has been stated in this case, namely, whether the wife took an estate in fee-simple, subject to be limited only in the event of her leaving a child; for, provided the wife had any children, the remainder would go to the children, and the remainder over to the wife in fee would seem to be a contingent remainder, and consequently the estate of the wife would not only be liable to be defeated by the vesting of the remainder in the children, but also by any act of the tenant of a particular estate, which would defeat the contingent remainder; and after a child is born, the devise over to the wife would be an executory devise, according to the doctrine laid down in Doe dem. Herbert v. Selby (2 B. & C. 926), which in its facts very much resembles the present. This consideration, however, does not affect the determination of this case. Upon the grounds we have stated, we give judgment for the plaintiff for 10*l.* according to what we were given to understand in the course of the argument was intended to be the agreement between the parties.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

CONWAY and OTHERS v. NALL.

The "notice of a prior act of bankruptcy," required by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, is not of an act which is likely to be committed, but of one which has been committed. A notice, therefore, of a declaration of insolvency having been signed is not sufficient.

Quære, if a general notice of an act of bankruptcy having been committed will satisfy the statute?

In this cause a feigned issue was directed under the Interpleader Act, to be tried, in which issue Mason and others, assignees of the defendant John Nall, a bankrupt, were made plaintiffs, and Conway and others, the above-named plaintiffs, were made defendants, and in which the question was, whether the defendants in such issue were or not entitled to the proceeds, or any part thereof, of the sale of certain goods and chattels which were formerly the goods, chattels, and property of the said John Nall, and which were theretofore taken in execution at the suit of the defendants in such issue, under a judgment against the said John Nall.

At the trial of such issue before Tindal, C. J. at the London sittings after Michaelmas Term last, the following facts appeared:—

The plaintiffs, being defendants in such issue, had commenced an action against Nall for the recovery of a debt due to them of 135*l.* 12s. 1d. in which action a judge's order had been made, by consent, for payment of the debt, interest, and costs within a certain time, and in case of default, the plaintiffs were to be at liberty to sign final judgment. On the 28th March, 1844, final judgment was signed on this order for 146*l.* 2s. (being the amount of debt, interest, and costs), default having been made in payment thereof according to the terms of the order. On the 2nd April following, a writ of fi. fa. was received by the undersheriff at Derby, and in the afternoon about one o'clock of the 3rd April, the officer at Chesterfield entered and levied thereunder on the goods of Nall. It appeared also, that Nall, the bankrupt, being pressed for money by Messrs. Robertson, of Chesterfield, his bankers, signed on the 1st April a declaration of insolvency, which was filed in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary, at eleven o'clock in the morning of the 3rd April (being at the opening of the office), on which day a docket was struck, and a fiat in bankruptcy issued thereon against Nall on the following day.

On the 2nd April, Mr. Gillet, the solicitor of Messrs. Robertson, wrote to the plaintiffs the following letter:—

"Chesterfield, April 2, 1844.

Gentlemen,—To save you expense, I think it right to inform you that Mr. John Nall, of this place, grocer, has committed an act of bankruptcy. He signed a declaration of insolvency yesterday; my clients, Messrs. Robinson and Brodhurst, bankers, here, are the principal creditors, and are in possession of all his property, for the equal benefit of creditors. Nall will be declared bankrupt immediately; I have sent for a fiat. I am afraid he is deeply in debt, and that his estate will produce but a small dividend. He, however, states otherwise. I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant, "JOHN GILLET."

"To Messrs. Conway and Co."

The letter reached town on the 3rd April, early in the morning, at nine o'clock, but there was no distinct evidence at what time the plaintiffs received it. The sheriff having sold under the execution, the question at the trial of the issue was, whether the above letter was sufficient notice of an act of bankruptcy, within the meaning of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29. A verdict was found for the plaintiffs, the assignees, with 1s. damages, leave being reserved to the defendants in such issue to move to enter a verdict for themselves.

Sir Tho[illegible] Wilde having in Hilary Term last obtained a rule nisi accordingly,

Talfourd, Serjt. now shewed cause.—1st. As to whether the execution had been effectually executed, or levied before the fiat, the s[illegible]t having taken place till afterwards. Whitmore v. Robertson (8 M. & W. 463) shews that the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29 has not repealed the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, sec. 108. [CRESSWELL, J.—You must have to contend that a judgment founded on a judge's order, is in the same position as a judgment obtained by nil dicit, which you will find rather difficult.] Then, secondly, as to the sufficiency of the notice. It may be doubtful whether the letter means to give notice of a specific act of bankruptcy which is in progress, and has not been completed, or whether it does not give a general notice of an act of bankruptcy having been committed, and which may therefore be satisfied by proof of any prior act of bankruptcy. It is however admitted that the letter conveyed sufficient information to put the plaintiffs on their guard. Spratt v. Hobhouse (4 Bing. 173 & 182), where Gaselee, J. says:—"If they had good reason to believe that he was a bankrupt, they ought to have acted on it; it was not necessary that they should be absolutely certain of the fact, for notice does not mean knowledge. The point has been raised, but never expressly determined, whether a general notice of an act of bankruptcy is sufficient. It came before the Court of Exchequer in Rounsey v. Elton (10 M. & W. 22) and Hocking v. Acraman (12 M. & W. 170), in the last of which Parke, B. says—"I do not think we are called on to decide whether notice should be given of some specific act of bankruptcy. It might happen that the party was aware of some act of bankruptcy, and if he knew that an act of bankruptcy had been committed, I am not prepared to say that would not be deemed sufficient." Here, if the notice referred to a specific act of bankruptcy then already in progress, it was at least complete at the time, as far as the bankrupt himself was concerned, and it was in fact completed before the sheriff entered.

Sir Thomas Wilde (Bovill with him), in support of the rule.—The course of the law and the intention of the legislature of late years have been to relax the rule which formerly prevailed in favour of acts of bankruptcy, to the destruction of the securities of particular creditors. The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29 is to make valid all executions bona fide executed or levied before the date of the fiat, unless the person at whose suit such execution issued had at the time notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed. It is submitted that the word "any" cannot be satisfied by a general notice of bankruptcy. The notice should be such as to enable the creditor at the moment to decide whether he is to act on it or not. It ought to be something more than what would set a person upon a course of inquiry. But the question does not arise here, for the notice in this letter points to a specific act of bankruptcy. [Tindal, C. J.—Yes, you may take it as conceded that this notice applies to that particular act of bankruptcy which was then in progress. The question will therefore only be, what is the effect of such notice?] It was inoperative, because the declaration of insolvency had not then been filed, and there was therefore at that time no act of bankruptcy at all. It can never be said that a person had notice of an act of bankruptcy because he had notice of a paper having been signed which might or not become an act of bankruptcy.

Tindal, C. J.—The question in the present case turns upon the proper construction to be put on the statute 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, s. 1, the proviso in which is that the persons so dealing with such bankrupt, or at whose suit such execution shall have issued, had not at the time of such dealing, or at the time of executing or levying such execution, notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed. The meaning of this appears to me to be that the party is to have notice of an act of bankruptcy complete in itself. Let us now see whether any act of bankruptcy, as described in the present notice, comes within such meaning of a prior act of bankruptcy. The 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 6, enacts that "if any such trader shall file in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts a declaration in writing signed by such trader, and attested by an attorney or solicitor, that he is insolvent or unable to meet his engagements, the said secretary of bankrupts or his deputy shall sign a memorandum that such declaration hath been filed, which memorandum shall be authority for the printer of the London Gazette to insert an advertisement of such declaration therein." There are, therefore, two steps to be taken before the declaration of insolvency is an act of bankruptcy; first, it is to be filed; when filed, it is no doubt a complete act of bankruptcy as far as the bankrupt is himself concerned; but next the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, or his deputy is to sign the memorandum as an authority for its being gazetted, before the act of bankruptcy can be complete. Here the notice is only that Nall had signed a declaration of insolvency. It is, therefore, only something in fieri, which might or might not afterwards become an act of bankruptcy, according to the steps which might be taken. The utmost is, that a party receiving such notice might infer that an act of bankruptcy was about being committed. Now I do not find that the words of the Act are that an act of bankruptcy is likely to be committed; but they are, "notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed." The notice in this case ought therefore to be made absolute.

Coltman, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems that there was an act of bankruptcy committed before the execution was levied, but that is not sufficient to vest the property in the assignees, unless the creditor had at the time of execution notice of an act of bankruptcy. Now it appears here, all that the creditor had was notice of its being likely that an act of bankruptcy would be committed; and it does not appear that he had any knowledge of any act of bankruptcy which had been completed; the clause in the statute is not, therefore, satisfied.

Cresswell, J.—There were two points raised in behalf of the assignees. The first one, which was as to the fiat being before the sale, is, I think, settled, the execution creditor being entitled to the proceeds if the levy is before the fiat, unless the creditor had at the time such notice as is required by the statute. Then it was said that the notice was sufficient, and that a general notice of an act of bankruptcy would satisfy the statute. The words of the statute are, "any prior act of bankruptcy," not, notice that he has become a bankrupt. If the words had been so, then indeed the argument in favour of a general notice of bankruptcy being sufficient would have been stronger than it is. However, it is not necessary to determine now that point, as the letter here points to something which is specific. I agree with the rest of the Court in thinking that that notice is not sufficient; it may be only requisite that the party should have such notice as that it may be inferred he necessarily knew that an act of bankruptcy must be committed when certain acts were done; but this is by no means the effect of this letter.

Erle, J. concurred. Rule absolute.

Wednesday, May 7.

Doe dem. Wyatt v. Byron.

A sub-lessee may stay proceedings in ejectment, upon payment of rent, &c. under the statute 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 4.

This was a rule obtained this Term by Byles, Serjt. calling on the defendant to shew cause why the order made by Maule, J. of the 24th April, 1845, should not be rescinded. That order was, that on payment to the lessor of the plaintiff of the rent of the premises in respect of which the action in ejectment was brought, together with the costs, the proceedings therein should be stayed, with liberty for the lessor of the plaintiff to proceed on any other title.

The premises in respect of which the action was brought were held by Wyatt, the lessor of the plaintiff, under a lease from the Bishop of London. Wyatt had subdemised the property to a person of the name of Steel, and Steel had again subdemised the same to the defendant and other persons, as trustees, for the benefit of themselves and the rest of the creditors of Steel. The ejectment was brought for a breach of covenant in the non-payment of rent, and the question was, whether the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 4 extended to cases where the rent and costs were tendered by a sub-lessee.

Talfourd, Serjt. (Addison with him) now shewed cause.—Downes v. Turner (Salk. 597) is an authority that, before the statute 4 Geo. 2, the Court would stay proceedings upon payment of rent: so also is Smith v. Parkes (10 Mod. 383). Since the statute, the Court will not, after a trial, grant the application, as by the statute it is expressly required that the payment or tender should be before the trial. (Roe d. West v. Davis, 7 East, 363; Doe dem. Harris v. Masters, 2 B. & C. 490.) But it is submitted that there is nothing in the statute to otherwise deprive the Court of the discretionary power it before possessed of staying proceedings in the action on payment of the rent in arrear. The 4th section must apply to under-lessee as well as to assignee. The word "tenant" is a word of signification large enough for that purpose.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule.—There is no case or precedent where the Courts have interfered at law to stay the proceedings, except where the application has been made by a party liable on the covenants in the lease. The word "tenant" is not to be read as the tenant in possession, but the lessee, as appears from the language of the second section, where it says "in all cases between landlord and tenant," and afterwards goes on to say, "landlord or lessor." In that second section, where the legislature intended to provide for the case of sub-lessees, the language is very different from the language in the fourth section, where it may therefore be presumed the legislature did not intend it should so extend. In the second section it is, "in case the lessee or lessees, his, her, or their assignee or assignees, or other person or persons claiming or deriving under the said leases;" but in the fourth section it is only provided "the tenant or tenants, his, her, or their assignee or assignees, do or shall at any time before the trial," &c. The latter part too of the fourth section enacts, "if such lessee or lessees, his, her, or their executors, administrators, or assigns," &c. This would seem to confine the meaning of the word "tenant" to that of lessee.

Tindal, C. J.—I do not decide this on any of the particular circumstances of the case under which it would appear that the original lessor has got himself in some difficulty on account of the peculiar construction of the lease by which there is no right of entry except for breach of covenant to pay rent;—that was the fault of the landlord himself, which he might have prevented, either by providing that the right of entry should be extended to the breach of all the covenants, or by preventing the power to underlet except upon terms. The question turns upon the construction to be put on the 4th section of this Act; and, in construing it, one must not be confined to that 4th section, but must see whether any other part of the Act will give effect to it. If we compare the 4th with the 3rd section, the result ought to be that the former comprehends an underlessee. The word "tenant" is sufficient to include a person who may be an underlessee. The 2nd clause of the Act is clearly in favour of landlords, and bars and forecloses all relief in law or equity where judgment has been recovered in ejectment without paying the rent in arrear within a certain time. The words there used are, "in case the lessee or lessees, his, her, or their assignee or assignees, or other person or persons claiming or deriving under the said leases;" it is therefore clear that the persons there contemplated are persons in possession of the land, either as lessees, assignees, or sub-lessees. Now the 4th section is to give benefit to tenants, and one would expect that it has reference to a class of persons who, by the Act would otherwise be barred from claiming such remedy; the words there are "if the tenant or tenants, his, her, or their assignee or assignees, do or shall at any time before the trial in such ejectment, pay or tender to the lessor or landlord," &c. "or pay into court," &c. "all the rent and arrears, together with the costs, then and in such case all further proceedings on the said ejectment shall cease and be discontinued." It would be singular if the Court should give a stricter meaning to the word "tenant," in this 4th section than is given to it in the 2nd section, where it bars the person answering the description of tenant from his claim, and where it is shewn to extend not only to lessee but under-lessee. The 4th section there says that nevertheless, if the rent be paid, the proceedings shall be stayed; therefore I think that means if the payment is made by one who derives a title to the property. The 4th section is a remedial one, and should not be narrowed in its construction.

Coltman, Cresswell, and Erle, JJ. delivered similar judgments. Rule discharged.

Brooks v. Roberts.

Where an appearance has been irregularly entered by the plaintiff for the defendant, the motion by the defendant should be to set the same aside, and not only to set aside the declaration and subsequent proceedings.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the declaration which had been filed in this cause, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside for irregularity, and why the plaintiff should not pay to the defendant his costs occasioned by the same. The objection on the part of the defendant to the proceedings, was that he had never been served with a copy of the writ of summons, nor had had any notice of the same until after an appearance had been entered for him by the plaintiff under the statute. It was now urged that the present rule was informal; it should have been to have set aside the appearance, if the same had been improperly entered, for if the appearance remained unimpeached, the filing of the declaration and other subsequent proceedings were regular.

Shee, Serjt. contrà.—The appearance was a nullity, unless done in conformity with the requisites of the Act, which requires that there should be an affidavit of personal service. The declaration cannot be regularly filed unless the appearance has been properly entered, which cannot be, for want of personal service.

Tindal, C.J.—I think that this rule should be discharged, on the ground of the informal manner in which it has been moved. It seeks to set aside the declaration which has been filed, for irregularity; but, in fact, there appears no objection to that. The rule should have been to have set aside the appearance to the process on which the subsequent proceedings have been founded. In Hasker v. Jermaine (1 C. & M. 408), where the writ was irregular, but the service was regular, and the defendant moved to set aside the service for irregularity, the Court discharged the rule, Bayley, B. saying, "You might have moved to set aside the writ and the service. We cannot say that the proceedings are more irregular than you state them to be. We cannot get at the writ to say whether it is regular or irregular." And in Edwards v. Danks (4 Dowl. 357), where proceedings were taken on a bail bond before default in the original action, it was held, that the mode of taking the objection was by moving to set aside the writ itself, and not the service of it. Lord Abinger there said, "The motion should have been to set aside the writ itself. This motion supposes a defect in the service which does not exist." So here, this motion supposes a defect in the declaration which does not exist, and therefore we cannot set it aside,—the motion should have gone higher.

Rule discharged.

MURRAY v. SILVER.

A rule for a discontinuance is a violation of a rule which is drawn up with a stay of proceedings.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the rule obtained by the plaintiff should not be set aside. The rule by the plaintiff was to discontinue the action, and the same had been obtained on the 23rd April last. On the 19th of that month the defendant had obtained a rule for a judgment in case of a nonsuit, which had been drawn up with a stay of proceedings. The 23rd April, the day on which the plaintiff obtained his rule to discontinue, was the day on which the defendant's rule was drawn up for, but the defendant was not entitled to have made his rule absolute until the following day, the 24th. The question was, whether the rule to discontinue was a proceeding in the cause within the meaning of the rule staying proceedings. It was submitted on the part of the plaintiff, that it was not, as the rule meant only something done in furtherance of the cause.

Dowling, Serjt. contrà, relied on Lowe v. Peacock (Barnes, 316). [CRESSWELL, J.—That was calling upon the other party to shew cause in that cause, and was therefore requiring them to do something in the cause. Here all the plaintiff does is to discontinue.] The plaintiff has no right to discontinue without the leave of the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—It is very difficult to say that a discontinuance is not a step in the cause, because in order to perfect it the plaintiff must go on to get the defendant's costs taxed, which would manifestly be a step in the cause. I, therefore, should rather have been inclined to have considered it a step in the cause, and as there is a case for saying so, that of Lowe v. Peacock, and I do not see any thing to dispute the authority of that case.

The rule must be absolute.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

Wednesday, April 30.

WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.

BAXTER, Appellant—NEWMAN, Respondent.

County voter—Shares conferring interest in realty.

Freehold land and premises purchased out of partnership funds, subscribed by various shareholders for the carrying on of a partnership trade, were 'ed in trustees for the benefit of the shareholders, . part of the partnership stock in trade, with a declaration of trust that the land and premises should be considered in the nature of personal and not real estate.

Held, that inasmuch as the trusts were only regulations for the better carrying on of the joint trade by means of such land and premises, and were not inconsistent with an equitable seizin of the freehold in the copartnership, each of the shareholders had a vote for the county, provided the amount of shares of each was sufficient in value to confer one.

The material facts set forth in this case were the following:—The qualification in respect of which Jonas Bateman and several other persons claimed to vote for the West Riding, consisted of freehold shares in a mill, houses, and land situate in the township of Pudsey, in the polling district of Bradford. The claimants, together with other persons, subscribed several sums of money, for the purpose of carrying on a partnership trade in a fulling-mill, out of which money freehold lands were bought and conveyed to certain trustees in fee, and a mill and premises were built on these lands. A deed of partnership was executed between the parties, by which deed the trusts of the land and of the mill, premises, and machinery were declared to be, among others, that the joint concern, trade, and business should be carried on in the names of the trustees; that the estates and property of the partnership should be vested in the trustees, who should at all times stand seized and possessed thereof, upon trust, for the benefit of themselves and their partners, as part of the partnership joint stock in trade; and that the lands so purchased, and the mill and premises then intended to be built thereon, should be considered as or in the nature of personal estate, and not real estate. The mill was built according to the terms of the deed of partnership, and the concern was managed by a committee of the shareholders, the committee being in the occupation of the mill and premises, and employing servants to work it. The shareholders did not carry on the trade jointly, but each shareholder brought his own cloth to be fulled at the mill. If any other person who was not a shareholder brought cloth to be fulled he was charged a certain sum for the use of the mill, which was paid to the committee, and every shareholder who brought cloth to the mill to be fulled was debited with the same sum so charged for what was fulled, and the amount was carried to his debit in the general account made up at the annual settlement of the profits arising from the use of the mills. The trustees had borrowed money on their bonds, for the purposes of the partnership, but the trust property was not pledged as a security for its repayment. The amount of shares possessed by each of the claimants was sufficient to confer a vote, provided the interest acquired by such shares could be considered as an interest in real property. The revising barrister allowed the votes. The questions for the opinion of the Court were, whether the shares could be considered as a legal or equitable interest in real property, and also whether the money borrowed was to be considered as a mortgage of the shares. If the Court should be of opinion that the shares under the deed of partnership could not be considered either as a legal or equitable interest in real property, or that the money so borrowed ought to be a charge on the shares, then the votes were to be disallowed; otherwise to remain.

The case was argued last Hilary Term by Hildyard, Q.C. for the appellant, and by Martin, Q. C. for the respondent, when the following authorities were cited: Bligh v. Brent (2 Y. & C. 268); Bradley v. Holdsworth (3 M. & W. 422); Barker v. May (9 B. & C. 194); Ex parte Lancashire Canal Company (1 Mont. & Bli. 94); and Attorney-General v. Mangles (5 M. & W. 120). Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—In this case there were thirty-seven persons who claimed the right of voting for the West Riding of York, in respect of the qualification described in a list of freehold shares in a mill, houses, and lands. The revising barrister found that the amount of the share possessed by each of the claimants in the real property in the company was sufficient to confer a vote, provided the interest acquired by such share could be considered as an interest in the real property. The objection taken before him was, that the interest acquired by the several claimants as the owners of such shares, was an interest in personalty only, and not in land; but the revising barrister overruled this objection, as well as another which applied solely to the cases of two of the claimants, Bateman and Brookbank, to which objection we shall afterwards advert, and he allowed the votes of all the other claimants. We are of opinion the revising barrister was right in his decision, and that the votes of the several claimants ought to be allowed. That the claimants took no legal interest in the real property is placed beyond doubt. The freehold land was purchased with the money contributed by the several claimants and by other shareholders, and conveyed to trustees, unto and to the use of the their heirs and assigns, absolutely, the trusts subject to which the trustees were seized being declared by the copartnership deed subsequently executed by the trustees, and the several members of the copartnership thereby created. The only question therefore is, whether these claimants state such equitable interest in the realty as will by law give them a right to vote; for under the provisions of the 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, and the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, a person seized in equity shall have the same right to vote as if he had a seizin in law of a freehold estate of the value of 40s. by the year, according to the provisions of the statute 5 Hen. 6. And the ground on which we consider these claimants ought to have such right is this, that the property of which the trustees are seized in trust for the benefit of the shareholders, who form the copartnership, is freehold land, and that the copartnership by the committee are in possession thereof: that the trusts declared by the deed are no more than agreements or regulations entered into between the copartners for the better carrying on their joint trade by the means of such land and the mill erected thereon, and are not trusts which are inconsistent with an equitable seizin of the freehold in the copartnership; and, lastly, that it is found by the revising barrister that the amount of the shares of each of the claimants in the real property in the company is sufficient in value to confer a vote. It is undoubtedly true, as was urged at the bar, that the trusts declared by the copartnership deed are such, that a court of equity would deal with the real property as personalty, so far as it was necessary to carry the intention of this trading copartnership into execution. In general there can be no question that, for all purposes necessary to effectuate the intention of the parties, personal estate may be considered as real, and real estate as personal, by a court of equity, as in the ordinary instance of money agreed or directed to be laid out in land; so, in the instance of a real estate under an absolute trust and direction to sell; and against this general rule our decision in the present case will not in any manner militate; but, notwithstanding this acknowledged doctrine of the Court of Equity, no one can deny that the land still remains land, and nothing else, and there is no authority or decision that, for the collateral purpose of giving a vote, which has no bearing on, or reference whatever to, the subject, the legal deed of copartnership, or the right of the cestui que trust, should not remain just as they would have been without such declaration of trusts. For as to the declaration by the copartners in the deed, that the lands and buildings should be deemed and considered as of the nature of personal estate, and not real estate, we think the generality of these words must necessarily be limited by the subject-matter of the trusts declared by the deed, and that they can extend no further than the object and purposes that the deed required. And further, we think it may be considered to be a very doubtful question, whether the private agreement of parties, or any authority short of an Act of Parliament, can deprive the owner of a freehold of the right of voting for a member of Parliament, which is a right inherent in the owner of the freehold, not for his own benefit, but for the community of which he forms a part. But however that may be, it appears to us such right is left altogether untouched by the objects and purposes for which the trusts of the deed now under consideration are created and declared. This deed declares no trust whatever of the freehold. If, as it at the same time appears by the statement of the case, the land was purchased with the money of the shareholders, it follows that, under the present deed, there was a resulting trust as to the fee-simple of inheritance for their profit, so that each of them would be entitled to a share in the beneficial interest therein, proportioned to his share of the purchase-money. The copartnership deed does not alter the proportions in which the partners are interested, nor does it confer upon a stranger any portion of the interest in the land; it only regulates the mode in which the property shall be managed and enjoyed, according to the quantity of interest that each shareholder has therein of the estate. To use the language of Lord Eldon, in Crawshay v. Maule (1 Swanston, 521), when speaking of a freehold estate purchased by a partnership for trading purposes, "the estate, though personal in enjoyment, is freehold in nature and quality;" and it is to the nature and quality of the estate we are to look, and not to the mode of enjoyment, when we have to decide whether it confers a vote. It was objected on the part of the appellant, that the case of Bligh v. Brent (2 Y. & Col.) was an authority against the claimants, inasmuch as it proved that the shares of a company, the profits whereof were derivable from land, would be personal property, not real. But we think it sufficient to advert to the broad ground of distinction between that case and the present. In the case referred to, the company (that of the Chelsea Water Works) was a corporation created by an Act of Parliament, and chartered by the Crown, of which the individual shareholders were coproprietors; the whole of the real property was vested in the corporation aggregate, which had the sole management and control thereof, having the power to convert it into personalty, and back again into realty, at their pleasure, the individual corporators having, as individuals, no more interest the freehold than a perfect stranger, and no interest in the surplus profits of the concern until they were actually earned. In the present case, the freehold is tate for the benefit of the individual copartners, ... trade managed and conducted by a committee appointed by themselves. In many other cases of shareholders in joint-stock companies, where the company has been incorporated by Act of Parliament, the legislature has expressly declared that the shares shall be deemed personal estate, and transmissible as such, and not of the nature of real property. Such was the case of The Vauxhall Bridge Company, The Lancaster Canal Company, and others, in which cases it may be well conceded there could be no freehold interest in the several shareholders so as to entitle them to vote; whereas in the case before us there is no other than a voluntary declaration by the parties themselves that the real estate shall be considered as personal. Upon the principle, therefore, that lands and mills built thereon are the basis and subject-matter of the declaration out of which the profits arise which are to be distributed amongst the shareholders; that the trusts related only to the management and conduct of the land and mill, and the trade carried on by means of the same; that there is no trust declared which is inconsistent with an equitable interest in the respective copartners; that the copartners are, by their committee, in possession; and, lastly, that the amount of each man's shares is sufficient to enable him to vote, we think the shareholders had an equitable seizin in a sufficient estate to enable them to vote for the county. As to the objection raised against the right of the two claimants, Bateman and Brookbank, we see no ground whatever for considering the money borrowed by the trustees on bonds and notes as having the effect of a mortgage upon their shares, and indeed such objection was little relied upon in argument. On the whole, we think the decision is right, and ought to be affirmed. Decision affirmed.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, May 7.

MARRIOTT v. THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Notice to set aside an award.

In this case, Wortley, Q.C. moved to set aside the award, on the ground that the refusal of evidence by the arbitrators, and that two of them (there being three) had proceeded with the award in the absence of the third. Rule nisi.

STEEL v. BENHAM and ANOTHER.

Semble, in order to render a plea an issuable one, it is not necessary that it should constitute an absolute defence if proved, but it is sufficient if it raises a fair and arguable question.

This was an action brought by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against two of three acceptors thereof. The defendants pleaded, amongst other pleas, that the drawer of the said bill had waived his remedy against one of the acceptors of the bill, by certain circumstances set out in the plea, of all of which it was alleged the plaintiff had notice, and that thereby the other acceptors were discharged. The plaintiff signed judgment, on the ground that the plea was not issuable.

A rule having been obtained by Jervis, Q.C. to set aside the judgment,

Martin, Q.C. now shewed cause.—The parties were under terms to plead issuably. Now it cannot be contended that this is an issuable plea, for even if true, it is no answer to the action.

Jervis, Q.C. in support of the rule.—Waiver of acceptance is a good plea. The real question that will arise on this plea is whether one of three acceptors can, after the bill has been returned to his hands for a valuable consideration, pass it to another person, who may sue the other two acceptors. Now, it is contended that he cannot.

POLLOCK, C.B.—Surely, if a bill gets into the hands of a firm, one of whom may be one of the acceptors of a bill, the firm may pass that bill away.

Jervis.—Even that may be very doubtful; but if so, that is not the case here. The facts are, that a bill is drawn by one Wood, who is also the payee, on Harmer, Benham, and Leyton. Harmer takes the bill from Wood before maturity, giving a valuable consideration for it, and then hands it over to Steel, the present plaintiff. These facts are set out in the plea, and are, it is contended, a good defence, it being alleged that the plaintiff had notice; at all events, the plea raises a fair question, and is not so bad as to justify the plaintiff in signing judgment.

Cases cited: Watley v. Tricker (1 Camp. 36); Foster v. Barker (Peak. 249); Richards v. Richards (2 B. & Ad. 447); Freakly v. Fox (9 B. & C. 130).

ALDERSON, B.—I think the plea is an issuable one, although perhaps it does not raise a good defence; still it is a fair arguable question. The rest of the Court concurring, Rule absolute to set aside the judgment.

HARRISON v. LAKE.

Where there has been an agreement between parties to deal as by way of barter, the party in whose favour there is a balance cannot maintain his action for such balance unless there has been an agreement that the balance shall be paid in money. Semble, that no lapse of time will alter the nature of this contract.

This was a rule obtained by Bain, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict in this case should not be set aside, and a nonsuit should not be entered.

The action was in debt, for goods sold and delivered, and was brought to recover the sum of 21*l.* 11*s.*, being the price of certain ochre, credit being given for 10*l.*

The defence was, that the agreement between the parties was to barter; and it appeared, that in 1841 a letter had been written by the plaintiff to the defendant, in which he said, "I have no objection to take 10 tons of ochre, if you will take paint, or other articles, from my shop in exchange." This was accepted by the defendant, who was thereupon supplied with goods by the plaintiff to the amount of about 21*l.* and about 10*l.* worth of ochre was sent to the plaintiff by the defendant. Soon after this, a letter was written by the plaintiff to the defendant, wherein he said, "When am I to expect some ochre to balance our account?" Soon after which ochre was sent to the plaintiff by the defendant to the value of 30*l.* This the plaintiff refused to accept, as being more than he wanted, and did not receive it, and the present action was brought for the balance remaining due for the paint, &c. after giving credit for the 10*l.* for the ochre first supplied. At the trial, after these facts had been proved for the defence, the jury, by the direction of the judge, found a verdict for the plaintiff, and leave was given to the defendant to move for a nonsuit, on the ground that the agreement between the parties was one of barter.

Archbold now shewed cause, and contended that there having been a statement of account between the parties, the plaintiff had a right to resort to the original consideration for the goods sold and delivered (Ingram v. Shirley, 1 Star. 185), particularly as he had waited from 1841 to 1845. [ALDERSON, B.—I do not see how time can alter the nature of the original contract. PARKE, B.—There is a contract here for barter, which has not been altered by any agreement to pay by money; that is the distinction between this case and Ingram v. Shirley. You should have paid yourself out of the ochre sent, and returned the rest.] Then there is no contract for barter at all. There is merely a proposition on one side, not expressly accepted by the other. [ALDERSON, B.—What do you say to the letter requesting the balance in ochre?]

Bain, contrà, was not called on by the Court.

By the COURT.—

Rule absolute to enter a nonsuit.

Re W. COBBETT.

Rescind motion to an order of this Court where the party against whom it is made has not been heard by counsel—Practice where it is on a habeas corpus—Costs.

Pashley moved in this case to rescind the order made herein, on the ground that it had issued improvidently. It appeared that the petitioner, who had been brought up by habeas corpus, had been remanded, and adjudged to pay costs. [PARKE, B.—You have been heard once; we cannot enter into this matter again.] No counsel was instructed in the matter when brought before the Court, and I wish to refer the Court to some authorities on the point which the petitioner was not acquainted with.

PARKE, B.—You can go to another court in which you have not been heard. I believe this matter has been heard in the Queen's Bench as well as here, but as it is an application for a habeas corpus, you are entitled to the judgment of each Court and of each judge; and therefore you may go to the Court of Common Pleas. If this was the only court in which you could be heard we might then, perhaps, under the circumstances, rehear the case.] Then the order is too large; it gives costs, which the Court has no power to do. Rule nisi on the latter point only.

Thursday, May 8.

CORNISH v. DAYKIN.

The affidavits of jurymen are not in general receivable to impugn or support a verdict, or even to explain the circumstances under which it was given; but when a rule has been obtained for a new trial, upon affidavits imputing misconduct to the jury, their affidavits may be received so far as they go to exculpate them and explain or deny the charges.

Crowder, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Hayward, Q.C. for a new trial, on the ground that the jury had tossed up for their verdict. The affidavits in support of the rule were made by persons who swore that they had seen one of the jury toss up a piece of coin; that several others of the jury were looking on, and that they then immediately turned round and delivered their verdict.

In answer to this were produced the affidavits of ten of the jurymen, which, among other matter, absolutely denied the charge made against themselves.

Hayward (Greenwood with him) objected to their reception, upon the ground that the affidavits of jurymen are in no case to be received to shew the circumstances under which their verdict was given. They cited Straker v. Graham (4 M. & W. 721); Bryan v. Parker (1 Keble, 811); and Owen v. Warburton (1 New Rep.).

Crowder and Barstow, contrà, admitted that generally the affidavits of jurymen were not receivable; but contended that they might be read for the purpose of contradicting imputations made upon the conduct or character of the jurymen themselves. They cited Standwicke v. Hopkins (14 L. J. Q. B. 16).

After hearing the case upon the facts, the Court delivered judgment as follows upon the question of the admissibility of the affidavits:—

POLLOCK, C.B.—It appears to me that this rule ought to be discharged. When a charge of this nature is made against the jury themselves, they ought to be permitted to answer it. None of us has any doubt at all about this, and we find our view confirmed by my brother Patteson on a very recent occasion in the case cited at the bar of Standiwicke v. Hopkins. There is also a case of Bays v. Delaval, in the first Term Reports, which is to the same effect. The rule will be discharged. Rule discharged.

EARL OF STAMFORD AND WARRINGTON v. DUNBAR and OTHERS.

As a general rule, the Court will always give costs to the successful party in an issue under the Tithe Act, unless he has disentitled himself by some misconduct of his own.

Whatelmest, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cowling to shew cause why the defendant, who had been the unsuccessful party in an issue under the Tithe Act, should not pay the costs to the plaintiff. The issue had been taken upon the award of the commissioner, which was in favour of the defendant, and the opinion of the commissioner was overruled by the Court. It was contended that, by analogy to the cases of new trials and writs of error, where costs are never granted where the opinion of the Court or judge below has been wrong, the Court in its discretion would not grant them in this case.

POLLOCK, C. B.—The rule we are disposed to lay down is, that in all cases the successful party shall have the costs, unless he is disentitled to them by some misconduct or some other act of his own. In all other cases we should give costs.

Rule absolute.

WILLIAMS and WIFE v. WATERS.

Demurrer.

Construction of words in a marriage settlement under the Statute of Uses.

This was a demurrer to a plea, and the question for the Court was the construction that was to be put upon certain words contained in a marriage settlement which were set out in the plea; the words were as follow: "To have and to hold the said messuages, &c. &c. unto the said W. R. Howell and John Williams, and their heirs, to the only proper use and behoof of the said W. R. Howell and John Williams, for the use of the said Ann Jones, her heirs and assigns, until the said intended marriage, and after the solemnization thereof, in trust for the said Ann Jones, for the term of her natural life, for her own sole use, independent of the said Hugh Williams, her intended husband, his debts, control, or engagements; and from and immediately after her decease, to the use of the said Hugh Williams, his heirs and assigns, for ever."

The question for the Court was whether these words created a use, and thereby the legal estate passed under the Statute of Uses to the wife, or whether it was a special trust, and the legal estate was in the trustees.

T. W. Smith, in support of the plea.—It is clear that it was the intention of the parties to create a special trust, and if the Court can ascertain what the intention of the parties was, they will give effect to that intention. Now it was clear here that the parties did not intend the statute to take effect. The wife's receipt is mentioned as to be the discharge of the trustees, which would go to shew that the manifest intention of the parties was that the trustees should have the legal estate.

Cases cited: Neville v. Saunders (1 Ver. 415); Jones v. Saye and Seal (2 W. Saun. 11 B; 1 Equity Cas. 303); Harton v. Harton (7 Term. R. 652); Barker v. Greenwood (4 M. & W. 421); Biscoe v. Parkes (Ves. & Bea. 585); Keene v. Deardon (8 East, 248).

E. W. Williams, contrà.—My friend's argument is, that it was the intention of the parties that the Statute of Uses should not take effect. Now this cannot be so held; for it is submitted that the parties cannot prevent the operation of the statute even directly. [PARKE, B.—The only question is, whether you can construe this to be an active trust.] There are no functions here for the trustees. Perhaps it might be held that these words would be sufficient in the case of a will; but even that, it is contended, is very doubtful; but certainly not so in a deed. Now here is a trust for A and his heirs, for the use of B, and there is nothing to be done by the trustees, who have no functions, so as to turn this into an active trust.

Cases cited: Doe v. Woodruffe (1 M. & W.; Burton's Comp. 123); Doe v. Bartop (5 Taun. 382); Brunton v. Langley (2 Ld. Raym. 873; 2 Sal. 679); Polemore v. Tindal (2 Young. & Jer. 605).

PARKE, B.—It really comes to this; what is the meaning of the words "to have and to hold to the use of A and her heirs, independent of the debts, control, or engagements of her husband?" Now, do these words intend to convey an active trust? I think they are not sufficient to do so, or to give to the trustees the legal estate, I think that the legal estate is in Mrs. Williams.

ALDERSON, B.—This case seems to me to come within the very words of the Statute of Uses.

ROLFE, B.—There is nothing in these words to stay the operation of the statute. Now, it is perfectly clear here, that even in equity the wife would take the legal estate at the death of her husband; if, therefore, we were to hold that the legal estate is in the trustees, the wife, after the death of her husband, would have to take a conveyance from the trustees.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

DAVIS v. THOMPSON.

In a plea of abatement, it is not sufficient to pray "that the declaration be quashed." The plea must pray that the declaration and also the writ be quashed. Semble, if a writ be against several defendants, and the plaintiff elect to declare against one only, this abates the writ against the others who are not declared against.

This was a demurrer to a plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of a partner. The ground of demurrer was, that the plea concluded wrongly, by praying judgment of the declaration only, and not of the writ.

Peacock, in support of the demurrer.—The plea is ill; it should have prayed that the writ be quashed. [PARKE, B.—But this is the form of plea given by my brother Stephen, in his valuable book on pleading.] The foundation of a plea in abatement is, that it gives the plaintiff a better writ; now here, if the declaration only be quashed, the writ remains. (Duppa v. Mayo, 1 Saun. 284, note 4.) [PARKE, B.—Yes, but since the new rules my brother Stephen seems to think it is always proper to plead to the declaration; besides, you may have a writ against four, and declare against one. Now the writ may be right here, as it may be against both the partners.] But what then would be the judgment? [PARKE, B.—That the declaration be quashed.] The usual judgment has been Capeter Billa. [PARKE, B.—Yes, but this is since the Uniformity of Process Act, and I doubt if we can quash the writ, as we have no means of knowing whether it is right or not.] The plea ought to shew that. [PARKE, B.—The defendant has no means of doing that, as he cannot have oyer of the writ.] Then the Court will assume that the declaration follows the writ. All the old judgments in Com. Dig. pray judgment of the writ. [PARKE, B.—But there the proceedings were commenced by original writ; now this is a kind of anomalous proceeding under the statute.] Suppose the writ remains, and is only against one, we cannot issue another writ and declare against both; for if we do, one will plead the pendency of the writ against him. Now it is contended that the defendant must pray that the writ, as well as the declaration, be quashed; for as to the point put by the Court, that the writ may be against both, it is submitted, that even if it be so, the plaintiff, by electing to declare against one, has, in fact, abated it against the other; and that is really the way to solve the apparent difficulty. (Stopped by the Court, who called on Jervis, Q.C. to support the plea.)

Jervis, Q.C. (Hurrell with him).—The plea is good; if we were to pray judgment of the writ, they would reply that the writ was good; now we cannot pray oyer of the writ, and it may be that it is against both; and so we are in this difficulty, and could not plead in any other way. [PARKE, B.—The argument of Mr. Peacock has got rid of the difficulty I felt at first; if you explain the writ by the declaration, the point is made clear, and it must be, that if the writ be against several, by electing to declare against one, you, in fact, abate the writ against the others; if so, then, of course, you must pray judgment of both declaration and writ. You had better amend. ALDERSON, B.—You certainly ought to get rid of the whole suit, which can only be done by praying judgment of the writ as well as the declaration.]

Jerris elected to amend, on which the other party consented to declare against the other parties; the attorney for the defendant undertaking to apppear for him. Rule accordingly.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ON ERRORS FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

(Argued February 1, 1845; Determined May 9, 1845.)
(Before TINDAL, C.J., PARKE, ALDERSON, ROLFE, and PLATT, BB. and CRESSWELL and COLTMAN, JJ.)

KING v. SIMMONS.

1. A writ of error does not lie on a feigned issue under the Interpleader Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58.
2. Such a writ was quashed, on motion, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber.

In this case Pashley, on behalf of the plaintiff in error, had obtained a rule on the 26th November to shew cause why an order of Mr. Baron Gurney, directing the case to be put down in the paper, should not be set aside, and why defendant's second joinder in error should not be set aside for irregularity, with costs, and why defendant in error should not pay the costs of this application. It appeared from the affi-davit upon which he moved, that the joinder in error by the defendant was delivered on the 19th of November, and on the 20th he obtained an order of Mr. Baron Gurney to set down the case for argument. On the 21st the defendant delivered an amended joinder in error. Pashley now submitted that the judge had no power to make any such order, and that the defendant in error could not amend the joinder in error without the leave of the Court. At the same time, Watson, for the defendant in error, obtained a cross-rule to quash the whole proceedings, on the ground that no writ of error lies on a feigned issue, and the writ had only been brought by collusion and by delay to keep the plaintiff out of his money, of which he had been defrauded by the defendant through a gross conspiracy. It was arranged that both rules should stand over for argument together, and accordingly on the 1st of February Pashley appeared to shew cause against Watson's motion, and Watson and Cleasby in support of it.

Pashley.—In this case an issue was directed under the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58. The defendant was an execution creditor and the plaintiffs were assignees of a bankrupt. A bill of exceptions was tendered to the direction of the judge. The Court below have given a formal judgment. Whenever a Court below has given a formal judgment, there may be ground for a writ of error, but it cannot be quashed on motion. The question raised is, whether a writ of error lies at all in such a case? The 1 & 2 Wm. 4 was passed to protect sheriffs; the sixth sec. reciting that "difficulties arise in the execution of process against goods and chattels by reason of claims made to such goods, &c. by assignees of bankrupts and other persons not being the parties against whom such process has issued; whereby sheriffs and other officers are exposed to the hazard and expense of action, and it is reasonable to afford relief and protection in such cases to such sheriffs and officers." And the Act (sec. 1) provides two courses, one of a summary proceeding, by consent of the parties, and the other a proceeding in invitum before a jury. The Act (sec. 1) empowers "the Court or any judge to order the third party claiming the goods to make himself defendant in the same or some other action, or to proceed to trial on one or more feigned issue or issues, and to direct which of the parties shall be plaintiff or defendant at such trial;" but it never can have intended to authorize a judge to deprive the party of his writ of error. [TINDAL, C.J.—Could there be a writ of error when the court of equity directs an issue?] No. [ALDERSON, B.—But what is the difference? You might, in this case, get a new trial.] The writ of error is matter of legal right and not of discretion. A new trial is merely within the discretion of the Court, without any power of review. But the distinction between this issue and one directed by a court of equity is, that in that court there would be no judgment, and that here there must be a judgment signed. In O'Connor v. Malone (6 Clark & Finn. 597) Lord Cottenham said, "There can be no judgment obtained on a verdict given on an issue directed by the Court of Chancery." But here a judgment must be entered up. Cooper v. Lead Smelting Company (9 Bing. 634), where it was held that the successful party on an interpleader issue is not entitled to take out the money paid into court to abide the event till judgment has been signed. The power of compelling parties to interplead existed at common law, but only within certain narrow limits. It was confined to cases of detinue for the finding of a chattel. (Story on Bailments, ss. 110 to 112, and Equity Jurisp. s. 801.) The object of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, was to extend the common law power to all legal rights. It treats an action and an issue as identical. The second section enacts that "the judgment in any such action or issue as may be directed, and the decision, in a summary manner, shall be final and conclusive against the parties." No distinction is made between the action and the issue. But it may be argued on the other side that the words "final and conclusive" shew that the Legislature intended that there should be no power of reviewing the judgment. That clause, however, must be construed to mean that it shall be conclusive, subject to the legal remedies at common law. Thus in Rex v. Allen (15 East, 333) it was held that a writ of certiorari to review the decisions of the Quarter Sessions is not taken away merely by an enactment that such decisions shall be conclusive;" and in R. v. Jukes (8 T. R. 542) the same principle is held where the statute had authorized the Sessions to hear and finally determine the matter. Hartley v. Hooker (Cowp. 523) and Rex v. Wadley (4 M. & S. 514) are both to the same effect. The common law privileges of the subject can only be taken away by express words. The stat. West. 2, c. 31, which gives the bill of exceptions, directs it to be allowed in every case where a party is impleaded. All the cases on this statute have gone on the principle that it must receive a most liberal construction. Sir Edward Coke (2nd Inst. 427) says, "It is an excellent law, made for advancement of justice and right;" and in commenting on the words of the Act, cum aliquis implacitatur, he says, that "regularly it extendeth not to a stranger to the record, which is not to come in lieu of the tenant, yet one that offereth to be received and is denied, albeit he be none of the parties to the suit, because he is privy in estate, and to be in loco tenentis, he shall have the benefit of this Act." In Strother v. Hutchinson (4 Bing. N. C. 83) the Act was held to extend to cases of nonsuit, and to the judge of a county court; Tindal, C. J. deciding the case on the commentary of Lord Coke, extending the words of the statute; and though in Rex v. Preston (Cas. t. Hardw. 249) it was held that the bill of exceptions did not lie on summary proceedings there, there was no judgment entered. Magna Charta gives the writ of error, and it cannot be taken away unless by express words, like the writ of habeas corpus or certiorari. (R. v. Hanson, 4 B. & Ald. 521, per Patteson, J.; Reg. v. Stock, 8 Ad. & Ell. 412.) Error lies from every court of record. (Com. Dig. Plead. 3 B. 7; Co. Litt. 117б.) Here there is a formal judgment. In Roll Ab. Error F. pl. 2, it is laid down that "if a man bring a writ of false judgment in banco on a judgment given in ancient demesne, and reverse the judgment, then a writ of error lies on that judgment, for it is matter of record." (Pashley also referred to 4 Inst. 105.) Error would lie in Parliament as a matter of right at common law. (4 Ins. 21.) Lord Canterbury v. Attorney General (1 Phil. 306-7), Com. Dig. Parl. L. 1. The 27 Eliz. c. 8, which first constituted the Exchequer Chamber, made it optional in the parties in certain cases to come to this court before appealing to Parliament. The Court, as at present constituted, derives its power from the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, s. 8, by which it is directed to hear writs of error upon any judgment of the superior courts. [ALDERSON, B.—Suppose an action brought in the Court of Queen's Bench by A against B, and B wishes to interplead, on the ground that C claims; the Queen's Bench stay the proceedings, and direct an issue to be tried between A and C. A bill of exceptions is tendered, and goes at once to the Court of Error and the House of Lords. Suppose C succeeds, it must go back to the Queen's Bench; but what is to prevent the Queen's Bench from giving A a new trial? Is not that an absurdity? The Act says "the decision shall be final and conclusive," and you say it is not. The case must end somewhere.] The House of Lords is the last tribunal. The words "final and conclusive" are not to be construed in one way when applied to one court and in another when applied to a different court. The same argument, if good at all, would have been applicable to the sessions cases. [ALDERSON, B.—The Act makes the decision as to the direction of the issue final. Why should the decision be final for some purposes and not all?] It might have been reasonable for the Legislature to take away the remedy of reviewing the opinions of the judges; but unless it clearly appears, by express words, that such was their intention, the common law right of appeal remains. Patteson, J. in this very cause, in the court below, said it was a parliamentary issue, in invitum, and the parties might wish to go to the House of Lords. The authority relied on by the other side would be Snook v. Mattocks, 5 Ad. & Ell. 239, where on a feigned issue to try the existence of certain customs in a manor, the Court of Exchequer Chamber quashed the writ of error, as it did not lie on such an issue. But that was a case of mandamus, where the Court has no power to direct an issue, except by the consent of the parties. It is an equitable jurisdiction, like that exercised under the stat. of W. 3 upon awards. The writ of error in Snook v. Mattocks was on the form of the issue, which could not be allowed after an agreement by the parties. But PARKE, B. said (p. 212), "We have entertained a bill of exceptions on such an issue. [Watson said that Parke, B. then referred to Lewis v. Armstrong, which was an issue out of Chancery, and was by consent. 3 Mylne & K. 45.] Consent cannot give jurisdiction, Lawrence v. Willcock (11 Ad. & Ell. 941); where it was held that the consent of the parties could not permit a case to be tried before the sheriff, which was not within the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, s. 17. So in cases of arbitration. Lord Eldon said (14 Vesey, 267) that "before the statute, when persons were out of court, they could not, by any agreement, bring themselves into court, and create a jurisdiction to issue process of contempt." In Snook v. Mattock, Littledale, J. said it was unnecessary to decide the question, and Patteson, J. that it was doubtful. But secondly, this Court has no jurisdiction to quash the writ on motion. Its powers are conferred by the statute before referred to, the 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 70. s. 8, and are limited to a review of the proceedings. In Cro. Cas. 142 (Lord Say and Seal v. Stephens) where it was held that a writ of error could not lie on an action of scan. mag. Croke, J. says, "I conceived it more proper to have the question disputed in the Exchequer Chamber, when the writ of error shall be returned, as it hath been in other cases where a writ of error hath been brought on a scire facias, and been adjudged that it lies not, than for us to dispute it being a matter of our own judging." The proper course is to apply to the House of Lords or the Lord Chancellor to grant the writ, quia improvidè emanavit. In Davis v. Lowndes (1 Philips, 328), the Lord Chancellor refused to interfere to quash the writ on motion, as it would thereby deprive the party of his appeal. And in Jones v. De Lisle (3 Bing. 125), the Court of Common Pleas adopted a similar course.

So here, the Court ought not on summary application to dispose of the very important point of their own jurisdiction.

Watson, contra.—To begin with the last point. All the cases shew that when the writ of error does not lie, the proper course is for the Court at once to quash it. The Court can only determine errors properly assigned. Mr. Tidd (vol. 2, p. 1162) lays down the rule. "The general ground of quashing a writ of error is, some fault or defect therein, not amendable by the statute; and the application to quash it ought to be made either to the Court of Chancery from whence it issues, or to the court wherein it is returnable." The 4 Anne, c. s. 25, "For the preventing great vexation from ... ing out defective writs of error," enacts that, up ... the quashing any writ of error to be sued out for variance from the original record, or other defect, the defendant shall recover, against the plaintiff issuing out such writ, his costs." In Lloyd v. Skutt (1 Doug. 336), it was objected that a writ of error did not lie on an action of debt on the statute of usury, from whose judgment there had been error into the Court of Queen's Bench; the Exchequer Chamber held they were not the proper tribunal to be appealed to, but that the application to quash the writ ought to be made either to Chancery or the Exchequer Chamber. Snook v. Mattock (5 Ad. & Ell.) has settled the question. Besides, the Court is bound to award costs. Now, suppose costs were given on the affirmance or reversal of the judgment, and no writ of error lay, how could they be enforced? All parties acting on such a judgment of costs would be trespassers. Secondly, does the writ lie? The 27 Eliz. c. 8, gives the party wronged a writ "on any judgment in any action or suit." Both lord Coke and Rolle expressly say there must be an action. "Issue" and "feigned issue" are terms well known to the courts. The court has a power to inform its conscience. In Reg. v. Marriott (12 Ad. & Ell. 35), the Court of Queen's Bench adopted this course. Under the Interpleader Act, two courses may be followed: either the action may be continued or another action brought, or secondly, an issue may be directed. In Whitmore v. Robinson, an action was directed instead of an issue, to give the parties all the benefit of it. [ALDERSON, B.—When the judge directs an issue, as he is authorized to do, he takes away all the right of demurring. ROLFE, B.—The judge is to decide "finally" whether or not it is a case of interpleader. Lord Cottenham has adverted to that as a great extension of power, as the judge is substituted for the Court of Chancery without appeal. In Chancery it would be a matter of decree, and might be taken to the House of Lords. CRESSWELL, J.—What is to prevent the Court of Queen's Bench from ordering that the money may be paid out either before or after judgment? ALDERSON, B.—What power of restitution is there, if they do so order?] Suppose a feigned issue, drawn up without any breach assigned, could the Court go into that question of irregularity? [ALDERSON, B.—Do not these absurdities and inconsistencies shew that the decision must be for all purposes "final and conclusive?" TINDAL, C. J.—The machinery that governs the writ of error is not applicable to this proceeding.] In Clayton v. Lord Nugent (8 Jur. 870), in reference to the case of Lewis v. Armstrong, which was cited to shew that a bill of exceptions had been carried to a court of error, in such a case as this, the Vice-Chancellor Bruce said, "Was that an action or an issue?" It makes all the difference. The motion for the new trial is made on one side of Westminister Hall in the one case, and on the other in the other case. The bill of exceptions, without a suit of error, is a nullity. It only lies when the parties have been impleaded. Here they have not. The writ of error is therefore a nullity, and the bill of exceptions and the writ must be quashed.

Cleasby (on the same side).—First, the writ of error is brought to review a judgment, and rectify error in it; and the question, whether it ought to be brought, is necessarily a preliminary one, before the Court can proceed to look at the judgment. They cannot affirm or reverse the judgment till it is decided whether the proceedings are properly before them. The ... course is to quash the writ if it is improperly brought. It is no answer that the objection appears on the face of the record. The com... case put by the statute of Anne is of a variance, and which appears by comparison between the writ and the record. There is a variance here. The writ of error alleges an action which is not on the record. [ALDERSON, B.—When the Court has no jurisdiction, what is to be done but quash the writ?] ... Ricketts v. Lewis (2 C. & J. ...) the Court ordered ... to be struck out of the papers in such a case. Then, secondly, the writ of error does not lie. It is nugatory, and ends in nothing. The issue is not brought to recover any thing, but merely to ascertain a fact. The judgment is entered up, in pursuance of the directions of the statute; but all is a fiction. [ALDERSON, B.—It would be quite sufficient to find the issue, without any damages or costs.] The 7th sec. of the Interpleader Act, directs the rules to have the force of a judgment. Surely all of them could not be subject to a writ of error. The case of Cooper v. Lead Smelting Company was the case of a stakeholder. This is a sheriff's case, and the judgment could not be entered as in an action. If so, it would be irregular, and might be set aside. (Dickens v. Eyre, 7 Dowl. P. C. 721.) There is no cause here. The defendant in error has all protection; there is no writ in error, and no costs for delay of execution. It would be, therefore, a great injustice to hold that the writ lies in such a case.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 9.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court of Error. On the motion of Mr. Watson to quash the writ of error in this case, two questions arise, both of them deserving of consideration: the first, whether any writ of error lies on a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench on a feigned issue directed under the Interpleader Act (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. ...); the second, whether this Court, if the writ of error does not lie, has the power to quash it. The first question is of considerable importance and some difficulty, and depends upon the construction of the Act. It was argued, and with great appearance of reason, by Mr. Pashley, that it could not be supposed to be the intention of the legislature to deprive either of the litigant parties of the rights to which they would respectively have been entitled if it had been an action; in which case they would have been enabled to tender bills of exception and sue out writs of error; consequently, it must be supposed the Act intended that both rights should be retained where the proceeding was by an action on a feigned issue, and that the judgment on a feigned issue may have been conjectured to have been required by the 71st section, for this very purpose, it not being usual to enter up any judgment on an ordinary feigned issue directed by the Court of Chancery or a court of common law. It is impossible to deny that there is a great deal of weight in this argument; but, on the other hand, it is clear the statute does not proceed upon the principle that the rights of the litigant parties should remain unimpaired, for it unquestionably does deprive them of some which they would have had if there had been no Interpleader Act. For instance, they cannot, on a judgment of that description, have such costs as otherwise the parties would have been entitled to according to the event. The rules and orders may undoubtedly be made both with regard to an action or an issue joined and conducted in a different way from that which these parties would have been entitled to insist on at common law, and issues which under compulsory prov... may be required, and where matters which are inadmissible in these actions ought to be received in evidence if the justice of the case should appear to require such a course. All these are pro tanto infringements on the strict rights of the parties which the legislature sanctions for the sake of giving a speedy and less costly remedy than by a bill in equity, and which it recites in the preamble is attended with expense and delay, and therefore to require a remedy. With this view the decision of a judge in a court of common law often becomes of considerable ...ety, where the case is one in which the interpleader ought to be allowed as final; whereas, in a similar case, before the statute cited, the parties would have had the right of appeal to the House of Lords. These considerations lead us to think that it was not the intention of the legislature, in requiring the judgment to be entered on a feigned issue, to give the litigant parties the power of bringing a writ of error. Had it been meant that the judgment should be capable of being removed by a court of error, it would have been provided that it should resemble an ordinary judgment in an action. A judgment without that right would have been an anomaly, if it had been meant to be subject to a writ of error. The probability of this was averted by the second section to avoid the doubt which would have arisen if the statute had provided that the verdict should be final, and then it would have been questionable if the Court had any power to remove it or set it aside; but had the Court given judgment, the verdict would be satisfactory, and the case finally disposed of. In effect, a feigned issue and the judgment thereon, is no more than an interlocutory proceeding in another suit in the nature of an interlocutory judgment, wherein the Court have power subsequently to act in disposition of the rights of the parties, and it has been already decided that the judgment mentioned in the second section is not a judgment to be entered on record in the ordinary way, but in the particular manner pointed out in the 7th section. We cannot, therefore, conclude that the legislature intended that a feigned issue under the Act should have been other than the ordinary feigned issue directed by a court of equity or law, on which issue it is provided there can be no writ of error, and consequently no bill of exceptions. The object of the Act was to save trouble and expense in cases in which an interpleader is usually allowed; for the purpose of a more speedy and less costly decision of disputed rights, an equitable jurisdiction is given to some one judge, and a large discretion is vested in him, which is necessarily attended with some sacrifice of the strict rights of litigant parties. We think, for these reasons no writ of error will lie on the judgment signed in this cause which does not resemble a judgment in an ordinary action. The only precedent that has been cited to the contrary is Lewis v. Armstrong, being a proceeding by consent of the parties. The other question is, whether this Court has power to quash a writ in error? The argument for the plaintiff in error is, that the Court of Chancery has the power to quash a writ of error for any defect on the face of it; in fact, if it improperly issued, to remove the record which ought not to have been received. The court of error has no power to quash a writ of error except for some fault on the face of the writ itself; as where it appears that the name of one of several defendants appears where all ought to have joined, as in the case in Carthew on Lord Raymond, one where it is to remove it to a court of limited jurisdiction, as to the Exchequer Chamber, under the 27th Elizabeth, the action appearing on the face of the writ not to be that on which it is brought, being against an agent to recover wrongful ejectment against the principal. On the other hand, it is contended that the writ may be quashed, not only for the want of authority as looking at the writ only, but also for some defect whereby it appears on a comparison of the writ and the record sent up in pursuance of it, as, for instance, where it appears there is no judgment corresponding with that stated in the writ, which the court of error has the right first to examine; and we are of opinion that this position is well defended. The Act 4 Anne, c. 16, recognizes the power to quash for a variance from the original record, and gives costs to the defendant in error. This shews that the original record may be compared with that specified in the writ, for which Hartup v. Holt (5 Mod. 229) is a precedent, of such a judgment where the record sent up differed from that mentioned in the writ in the names of the justices of the Common Pleas, before whom the plea was heard. The principle appears, that a power is given to quash the writ as useless where they find the record sent up is not one which, with the commission conferred in the court of error, they have the power to examine; and this applies as much to the case where the record sent up is not a judgment which is to be examined at all; and such is the present case. It does appear the record is one which varies in the names of the parties or in ordinary particulars: besides, there is a variance in these particular names in this particular instance. Here the writ of error is to examine an error in an alleged judgment on an action between the parties, and the judgment produced is not a judgment in an action; and, consequently, as the Court has no power without this commission to decide whether there is any error or not, the proper course is to apply to quash the writ, as giving nothing to operate upon, and being idle and useless. This principle is acted upon in Tolson v. Kay (7 Scott, N.P. 222), in which the writ of error was quashed where there was no final judgment on the original record returned, and so nothing for the writ to operate upon. In Snook v. Mattock (5 A. & E. 239) there was a similar judgment, but it appeared the judgment was one in which no writ of error lay. It is true that in that case the Court of Queen's Bench have expressed a doubt as to the propriety of the decision; but it was probably on the ground that on the face of the record it did not appear that the issue was feigned. In this record as amended it does so appear, and the objection that has been so strongly urged against deciding this question on summary application, and thereby depriving the party of his appeal to a higher Court, is not well founded; for there can be no doubt but that a writ of error will lie on the judgment pronounced by this Court, which will be that the writ of error be quashed; therefore the rule is absolute, and the judgment must be that the writ of error be quashed.

Pashley then referred the Court to his own rule, which was discharged; but, like the other rule, without costs.

REG. v. ROWLEY.

On judgment for the relator in a writ of error on an information quo warranto, he is not entitled to costs.

In this case judgment had been given for the relator in an information quo warranto, for usurping the office of town councillor (a), and the master had proceeded to tax the costs as due to the relator. Whereupon Gray obtained (1st February) a rule to shew cause why the taxation should not be set aside, and the judgment amended by striking out the judgment for costs. He contended that no statute, by which alone the relator could be entitled to them, conferred any right upon him. The first statute on the subject is the 3 Hen. 7, c. 10, which, reciting that ofttime the plaintiff or demandant be delayed of execution, for that the defendant or tenant against whom judgment has been given, or other that has been bound by the said judgment, such a writ of error, &c. enacts that the said person or persons against whom the writ is sued shall recover his costs by direction of the justice before whom, &c. This statute only applies to real action and civil cases; and the expression "other bound," means merely the representative of the party suing in error. The next statute, 3 Jac. 1, c. 8, applies only to actions for rent or on contract. The 13 Car. 2, st. 2, c. 2, s. 9, extends the powers of the 3 Jac. 1, c. 8 to actions fo. not setting out tithes, or on promises, or on trover, covenant, detinue, or trespass. The 8 & 9 Wm. 3 c. 11, s. 2, gives costs to the defendant or tenan against the plaintiff or demandant in any act, plaint or suit. The 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 25, provides that on the quashing of any writ of error for variance from the record, costs shall be given to the defendant i. error as he would have had in affirmance of the judg ment. The provision is not applicable here. The 9 Anne, c. 20, which introduced the present mode o proceeding by information in the nature of quo war ranto, gives the costs of prosecuting the same. Bu that only applies to the original information, and no to any ulterior proceeding by error. The recen statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 2, gives costs in case of mandamus as in personal actions, but no provision exists for informations of quo warranto. A rule to shew cause was granted, which came on for argument on the 9th May, when

J. W. Smith shewed cause against the rule. It ha been the invariable practice of the Crown office to allow costs to the petition, and is so stated in the recent work of Mr. Corner on the Crown-office Prac tice, p. 107. The 13 Car. 2, st. 2, c. 2, s. 7, expressly provides that the double costs given by the act shall not extend to informations, which seems to shew that the legislature contemplated that the language of th statute would otherwise have clearly extended to informations. By the 9 Anne, c. 20, a private party was, for the first time, made a party to the pro ceeding by quo warranto. The question is whether the relator is in the position of a private plaintiff, so that the statute of Henry VII. may be applied to him? No express authority on the subject can be found, and the question must therefore be determined by the words of the statute. The officers of the Court have acted on this supposition: that by the 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, sec. 8 (Sir James Scarlett's Act), which remodels this Court, the judgment of the Court is a new judgment, substituted for the judgment below and that the same costs ought to be given as the relator would have been entitled to, if the origina judgment had been in his favour. In The Queen v. Humphrey, and The Queen v. Langham (not reported), the costs have been allowed by the Crown-office.

Alderson, B.—The statute of Anne empowers the Court of Queen's Bench to give costs.

Tindal, C. J.—You must make out your title expressly, which you cannot do by the statutes. These costs must be disallowed: and accordingly the Court, without hearing Gray in support of the rule, at once made it absolute.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Monday, May 12.
(Before Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.)
Ex parte GOODE, re STROUSBERG.

In an affidavit of debt (under the 11th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122) by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, it must be stated that the note was made payable to order.

Where a summons under the above section is dismissed on a technical ground, it is in the discretion of the Court to allow to or refuse the defendant the costs of attending the summons.

This was a summons under the 11th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, requiring Bethel Henry Strousberg, a trader, to appear before the Court of Bankruptcy in Basinghall-street, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he admitted the demand of Thomas Smith Goode, who claimed of him the sum of 80*l*. 10s. for a debt.

The affidavit on which the summons was founded stated, that Bethel Henry Strousberg "was indebted to Thos. Smith Goode, in the sum of 80*l*. 10s. upon and by virtue of a promissory note made by the said Bethel Henry Strousberg in favour of Edward Bowyer, dated Jan. 15, 1845, payable three months after date, for the sum of 80*l*. 10s. and indorsed by the said Edward Bowyer, to one George Greenwell, and by the said George Greenwell to the deponent, Thos. Smith Goode."

Sturgeon, on behalf of Strousberg, applied under the 33rd of the Rules and Orders in Bankruptcy, of the 12th November, 1842, to have the summons dismissed, on the ground that the affidavit on which it was founded was not in compliance with the 25th rule. The 25th rule directs that "every affidavit for summoning a trader, under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 11, shall state the nature of the debt with the same degree of certainty and precision as is now required in an affidavit to hold to bail by order of a judge in the superior courts at Westminster." This affidavit would not be sufficient for such purpose. It does not shew on the face of it that Strousberg was under any legal liability to Goode on the note. The affidavit states that the note was made "in favour of Bowyer," and indorsed by him; even if that is a sufficient description of Bowyer as payee of the note, the affidavit does not go far enough, it does not shew that Bowyer had power to indorse the note, or that the note was a negotiable instrument. To make the note negotiable it should have been made payable to Bowyer or order; and if so made, it should have been so set out in the affidavit. In the affidavit given in Mr. Tidd's forms, it is so set out. In the case of Hodson v. Daniels, before Lord Lyndhurst, C. B. at chambers, in Trinity vacation, 1833, an affidavit which stated that Daniels was indebted to Hodson, upon a bill payable to Sylvester, and by him indorsed to Hodson, was held insufficient, for want of the allegation that the bill was payable to Sylvester or order.

The cases of Lewis v. Gompertz (C. & J. 352, and 1 Dow. 319); Woolley v. Escudier (2 M. & Scott, 392), and McTaggart v. Ellice (1 Bing. 114), are authorities to .... that it must appear with certainty on the face of the affidavit, how the liability of the defendant arises.

Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.—The affidavit is not correct in form, it should certainly be stated that the note was payable to Bowyer or order.

Sturgeon now applied, under the 18th section of the Act, for the cost of attending the summons. That section left the Court no discretion as to the allowance of costs, but only as to the amount of costs to be allowed.

Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.—By the 33rd of the General Rules and Orders, any want of compliance on the part of the plaintiff (in the affidavit) with the rules and orders, may be waived by the defendant. I think the Court has the power of awarding costs or not in its discretion, and I think, as the defendant stands on a technical objection, he is not entitled to any costs, unless the technical objection be waived. I cannot give any costs.

Summons dismissed without costs.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.)
Wednesday, May 14.
Re HOCKER.

Where an insolvent had omitted to insert in his schedule several debts because he considered them to be illegal, the Court adjourned his examination for fourteen days, for him to ascertain if any of such debts were legal, and to file an account of such of them as should turn out to be legal debts.

Insolvent was opposed by a solicitor for Mr. Sibley, a creditor for 118*l*.

Insolvent had been in the habit of attending race-courses and betting, but had never kept any account of his winnings or losses. He had made a bet about thirteen weeks ago, which, if he lost, he should have no means of paying except out of the proceeds of any other bet he might by chance win in the meantime. The insolvent had some time since a bill of Mr. Hogard's for 26*l*., which he had not inserted in his schedule, because the consideration for the bill was illegal, being for money won on a race in 1840. There were also several sums which the insolvent owed to different persons for bets he had lost to them races, which he had not inserted in his schedule, as he considered them to be illegal.

His HONOUR, under these circumstances, adjourned the examination for fourteen days; insolvent the meantime to ascertain if any of the above debts were legal debts, and to amend his schedule by filing therewith a fresh sheet containing an account of such of the said debts as might turn out to be legal debts.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE amended Bastardy Bill has become law at last; a copy of it will appear among the New Statutes in our next number. The forms have been subjected to considerable alterations; but it will be observed that the Act legalizes all to the like effect, and therefore those of Mr. SYMONS will be equally serviceable and equally safe. Those who possess them need not waste them. The forms prescribed by the Act are in the press, and will be ready in three or four days.

Will any members of the Verulam Society inform us what magistrates' forms would be the most useful and most in request, that we may first proceed with them?

CONFESSIONS OF PRISONERS.

MUCH doubt and conflicting opinion prevail as to the sort of caution which ought to be given to prisoners who, on their arrest or afterwards, make statements. It is well understood that if any thing be said which, partaking either of the nature of threat or bribe, has a tendency to induce the prisoner to make a confession, such confession is inadmissible. The principle of this rule was well stated by LITTLEDALE, J. in the case of Reg. v. Court (7 Car. & Pay. 486):—"The object of the rule is to exclude all confessions which may have been procured by the prisoner being led to suppose that it will be better for him to admit himself to be guilty of an offence which he really never committed." And Mr. Justice COLERIDGE, adopting this rule, has justly said that "the only proper question is, whether the inducement held out to the prisoner is calculated to make his confession an untrue one." This is a golden rule, and the best test of what does or does not exclude.

In order that a statement may be an inducement, it must hold forth a prospect of benefit to the prisoner from confession. Thus to say, "You knave, I will have you taken to prison," or words conveying a mere threat, do not exclude; for here there is no alternative held out—nothing to invite confession, but rather to induce denial. But where the words were, "Unless you give me a more satisfactory account I will take you before a magistrate," there clearly an alternative was held forth, and there was an inducement to confession, and the confession then made was inadmissible. (1 Leach, 291.) A mere exhortation to tell the truth will not exclude the confession; as where the words used were "Be sure you say nothing but the truth, as it will be taken against you," this did not exclude (Reg. v. Holmes, 1 Car. & Kir. 268, per Rolfe, B.), for there no prospect of benefit was held out to say one thing more than another. But wherever what is said implies that what a prisoner says may be used in his favour at his trial, the confession thereupon made is clearly inadmissible, although the prospect of benefit be only hypothetically stated: for there must be no prospect of benefit, or there will be inducement. It matters not whether the words be "may, would, might, shall, or will be used in your favour"; the very word favour is an inducement, and ought never to be used at all.

But the error is generally on the other side, and prisoners are most unnecessarily deterred from making statements which would often, if made, tend to the objects of justice. It is to this silly practice that we wish to direct attention. We venture to lay down a short, strong, and simple rule as to cautions—SAY NOTHING! Why caution the prisoner at all? Where no inducement is held out, there is no need to give a caution. No man will criminate himself of his own accord if he be innocent: if he be guilty, the sooner he confesses, the better for the ends of justice; the law is complied with, so long as there is an absence of inducement. Silence is amply sufficient.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

SOME of the written judgments of the Term appear in this number; but next week will place in the hands of the Profession some very important ones delivered on Thursday, among which will be that in the great case of Howard v. Gossett, in which the judges have ruled unanimously against the privilege claimed by the House of Commons. Each of the judges read a written judgment, and the whole will occupy a very large space in our columns, for which we shall endeavour to provide by a double number; but its great value and interest will make excuses unnecessary, for it will be given verbatim, and probably will be the only authentic report of the case which will be placed in the hands of the Profession for many months. But the crowded state of our columns forbids comment on the many matters of professional interest which will be found in them.

COURT PAPERS.

CIRCUIT OF THE COMMISSIONERS FOR THE RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

HOME SUMMER CIRCUIT, 1845, AS ALTERED.

John Greathed Harris, esq. commissioner, will hold his court for Sussex, at Lewes, on Friday, July 25, and not at Horsham.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Queen has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon John Macpherson Brakenbury, esq. late her Majesty's Consul at Cadiz, Knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order.

The Queen has been also pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon Charles Fellowes, esq. of Russell-square.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Arrindell, esq. to be her Majesty's Attorney-General for the colony of British Guiana.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint E. F. Wylde, esq. to be Clerk of the Peace at Worcester, in the settlement of the Cape of Good Hope.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Benjamin Thomas, of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick; Stephen Pilgrim, of Hinckley, in the county of Leicester; Alfred Fairfax Morgan, of Hockley, in the county of Warwick; Frederick Potts, of the city of Chester; and Edward Corser, of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.—County of Peebles—William Forbes Mackenzie, Esq., of Portmore, one of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

County of Denbigh—Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, of Wynnstay, in the county of Denbigh, bart.

THE NEW CORONER FOR WESTMINSTER.—Mr. Gell, after a very long period of service, has resigned the lucrative office of coroner for Westminster; and Mr. Bedford, the recently-appointed deputy-coroner, has been sworn in in his place.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

JUDICIAL BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—Notwithstanding the very large number of appeal causes disposed of during the present session of Parliament—a number unprecedented in extent—the appeal list contains a great many cases yet to be heard; and petitions for appeals before the committee appointed every session to decide whether the standing orders have been complied with, or whether there is sufficient ground for appealing, are numerous. One day fixed for hearing causes of appeal has been lost, on account of "the parties not being ready," as the phrase runs, or, in other words, counsel not being instructed in time to make themselves masters of the merits of the case. When the House again assembles at the termination of the Whitsuntide holidays, viz. on Friday, their lordships will hear the arguments of counsel in Camberwell v. Sir Colin Campbell, which is appointed for that day, as well as Reddie v. Higginbottom, both Scotch causes. On the 19th of May judgment will be given in Viscount Dungannon v. Smith. The judges will be in attendance in the course of the month to hear the case re-argued by one counsel on a side of Darley v. The Queen (a writ of error from the Exchequer Chamber of Ireland). The appeal case, The Mayor of Newcastle-upon-Tyne v. The Attorney-General, will likewise be heard shortly after the recess. The petition of the appellants, Lady E. R. Hastings and another v. the Marquis of Hastings, has been received by the house, and referred to the Appeal Committee. With respect to divorce bills, which rather belong to the legislative business of Parliament than judicial proceedings, the number is unusually scanty; there having been but two only since Parliament assembled, and at present no more bills of that nature have been introduced. It is thought that Lord Brougham's Divorce (Privy Council) Bill has had some influence in limiting the number, as the parties are waiting to see whether it is likely to pass in sufficient time to afford them a cheaper mode of proceeding, the present being, as many people know, a very expensive one. It may be as well to mention that no day has yet been appointed for the second reading of that bill. As regards peerage cases, the applications for hearing the claims of parties to such titles and honours are likewise few—a smaller number, indeed, than usual. No days have at present been fixed for committees of privileges, but shortly after the holidays arrangements will be made to entertain them.—Times.

NEW VICE-CHANCELLOR.—We understand there is every probability of the government immediately appointing a vice-chancellor for this island, who will, of course, be an English barrister of some standing, in order that the public business of the island may suffer no interruption. The appointment, we learn, will be at the earnest solicitation of the lieutenant-governor himself.—Isle of Man Paper.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT.—We have ascertained, and have much pleasure in informing our readers, that a Bill is in course of active preparation, under the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, and will speedily be introduced, for repealing the whole, or at all events, the obnoxious clauses of this singularly ill-advised measure.

WILL OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE CHARLOTTE DOWAGER-VISCOUNTESS CHETWYND.—The will of the Right Honourable Charlotte Dowager-Viscountess Chetwynd, late of Upper Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, who died on the 7th of April last, aged 73, was proved, on the 5th instant, by her daughter, the Hon. Charlotte Chetwynd, and the Hon. Mary Ann Chetwynd, the joint executrices, to whom the whole of her property is bequeathed, to be equally divided between them. The will is very short, dated the 12th of February, 1840, and signed "Charlotte Chetwynd." The personal estate sworn under 6,000*l*.

WILL OF THE LATE GEN. FREMANTLE.—Probate of the will and codicil of John Fremantle, of Tilney-street, Park-lane, St. George's, Hanover-square, esq. a Major-General in her Majesty's service, who died on the 6th of April last, has just been granted to his widow, Agnes Fremantle, the executrix. A power is reserved to Sir Thomas Fremantle, the executor, to prove hereafter. The personal estate in England sworn under 14,000*l*. He leaves the whole of his property in England and Ireland to be equally divided among his children, the share to each to be paid to them as they respectively attain the age of 21 years. The will is dated March 21, 1843, and the codicil on the day following, appointing his wife and Captain Charles Fremantle, R.N. to be the guardians of the minors.

WILL OF THE BISHOP OF ELY.—Probate of the will of the Right Rev. Joseph Allen, D.D. late Lord Bishop of Ely, who died at Ely, in the county of Cambridge, on the 20th of March last, aged 76, was granted on the 9th inst. to his daughter Ellen Allen, and to his two sons, George J. Allen and William Joseph Allen, esqrs. the executors and trustees, a power being reserved to his widow, Margaret Allen, to prove hereafter. Personal estates sworn under 40,000*l*. Bequeaths to his wife a life interest both in the funded property and landed estates, and directs that she may receive the sum of 500*l*. for immediate use, and leaves to her for her absolute use such furniture, &c., as she may select, the remainder he bequeaths to his children; but such articles as they may not require are to be offered to his successor to the bishopric, at a fair valuation. His books on divinity to be given, with the consent of his wife, to the dean and chapter of the cathedral church of Ely for the library. The property, after the decease of his wife, he bequeaths in the following manner:—His estates at Manchester he gives, devises, and bequeaths to his son, George J. Allen, and to his heirs for ever. Those in or near the county of Chester he bequeaths to his son, Wm. Joseph Allen, and his heirs. The East-India Stock he leaves to his daughter; and the residue of his property to be divided among his children. The will is dated September 23, 1844, signed "J. Ely." Witnessed by his butler and gardener.

WILL OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LUCY ELIZABETH COUNTESS DOWAGER OF BRADFORD—late of Park-lane, Middlesex, who died on the 20th of September last, has just been proved by her son, the Right Hon. George Augustus Frederick Henry Earl of Bradford, the sole executor. Bequeaths her money to her sons and daughter, and appoints the earl residuary legatee. The will is very short, and in her ladyship's handwriting, dated January 6, 1836, signed "Lucy Elizabeth Bradford," but not witnessed.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

General Meeting, April 9, 1845.

Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting (the 12th of March last) were read and confirmed.

The report of the committee on the Law of Property on the following references—

To consider whether it may not be possible to obtain the benefit of some of the common forms used in conveyancing, by reference to Acts passed for that purpose.

To consider the practicability, by means of a legislative enactment, of incorporating the common forms used in ordinary deeds into legal instruments by way of reference.

Was further considered, and was confirmed.

The report of the committee on Common Law on the following proposition,

That all public or official documents purporting to be sealed by the authorized seal, or purporting to be certified by the authorized officer, shall be receivable in evidence without proof respectively of the seal, signature, or official character. That to this Act a proviso should be added, rendering it felony to forge or utter a false seal or signature. See 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 28, s. 11; 2 W. 4, c. 34, s. 9; art. 362, 363, 364, Criminal Consolidation Bill.

Was read, and the further consideration adjourned to the next general meeting.

It was referred to the Committee on the Law of Debtor and Creditor,

To consider the present state of the laws relating to imprisonment for debt, and the means of giving more efficient and complete powers over the property of, and of punishing, fraudulent debtors.

It was referred to the Committee on Equity,

To consider the expediency of establishing a court of trusts in Chancery, with a view to creating a system of public trust; so that any person making a will, or executing a deed for the settlement of property, may not be drawn to the necessity now existing of appointing some private persons executors of the one, or trustees of the other.

It was referred to the Committee on Criminal Law,

To consider the propriety of recommending the entire abolition of the punishment of death.

To consider the propriety of recommending the adoption of the plans of Captain Maconochie, for the management of transported criminals, as detailed in the accompanying papers, A, B, and C.

It was referred to the Committee on the Law of Property,

To consider the propriety of a declaratory or other enactment, relieving settlements and other dispositions of property from all doubt respecting the validity of springing and shifting uses, in surrenders of copyhold estates, the operation of the Statute of Uses upon testamentary limitations of uses, the force of the doctrine respecting limitations depending upon a possibility on a possibility, the distinction between gifts per verba de præsenti and per verba de futuro, and the doctrine of scintilla juris.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BAR AND THE PRESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I cannot refrain from troubling you with a few lines with respect to the "wanton, pitiful, and dastardly outrage" committed by the Times newspaper, as the Law Magazine very properly styles it. I fear much that, if the whole Profession, of which some of the members have been and are thus grievously outraged, does not act in union and energetically, this shameful affair will blow over. The Law Magazine speaks of "the unanimous feeling of disgust." Now, what I want is, to bring this unanimous feeling of disgust to bear in reality against the object of that disgust; and this, I doubt, will not be effected by the members of the Profession merely expressing their disgust at Westminster. A meeting should be called at once of all the members resident in or near London; and by leading members, if they will take the trouble. A resolution, condemnatory of the conduct of the Times, couched in the plainest and strongest terms, should be submitted to the meeting. This should be followed by a resolution, that no member of the Profession should or would thenceforth patronize that paper in any way. Each and every member of the Profession should be required to give a written assent or dissent to the resolution, with his signature attached to it; and it should be incumbent upon every member unable to attend the meeting to send his written vote by a friend or post. The resolutions should, therefore, be printed in the circulars calling the meeting. We should thus get to the bottom of the matter, and make out whether any member or members of the Profession itself is or are in league with the Times. The case is so very clear, that there is no room for quibbling. Each person must say, either "I am a gentleman, and independent of the Times, and will express my sense of this dastardly outrage;" or, "I have some little connection with the matter, and dare not vote for fear of being shewn up by the Times out of spite." Some members of the Bar to whom I have spoken are impressed with the idea, I regret to say, that it is impossible to affect the pecuniary interests of the paper. I differ from them most emphatically. If every member of the Profession as he ought, forbad its being read in his house, his chambers, or his club, that alone would be a heavy blow to it; but, besides this, let the advertisements inserted by the members of the Legal Profession be totally withdrawn, and what becomes of the daily supplement now published? The Times may date its gradual ruin from that day. I do not propose this out of a spirit of revenge, but of justice. It has not condescended to apologize even, or offer the least explanation. If the powerful support of the Legal Profession were withdrawn from the Times, and bestowed unanimously upon some other paper, it would put funds at the disposal of that paper quite sufficient to enable it to compete with the Times in acquiring early and the best intelligence, which constitutes, I believe, the pre-eminent excellence of that paper at present. I have read the Times constantly for some years, till I heard of this gross outrage from a member of the Oxford circuit. Your correspondent of Craven-street says, "He trusts the press will universally stigmatize," &c. I would not leave it to the press. The Profession is, in my humble opinion, imperatively called upon to come forward, defend itself, and display its own strength.

Your very obedient servant,

A BARRISTER.

SALFORD CHARTER.

SIR,—I send you a copy of a letter and a paragraph inserted in the Manchester Courier of the 19th of April last, which will shew the source and explanation of the error in reference to this charter, which the Liverpool Standard and the Law Times have published, as well as the Courier.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

JAMES H. HULME.

1, Bexley-street, Salford, May 8, 1845.

THE SALFORD CHARTER.

To the Editor of the Manchester Courier.

SIR,—A letter, headed as above, signed J. R. Y. having appeared in your paper of last Saturday, the writer requesting to be informed "by what new blunder, and by whom made, it is, that the Mayor of Salford cannot either issue or hear warrants or summonses, some of the county magistrates being in regular attendance each day for that purpose," and such inquiry being thus answered by you, "It is owing to a defect in the charter of incorporation, which does not empower him to do either," permit me, as the solicitor employed in procuring the charter, and as the clerk of the petty sessions held at the Salford town-hall, to endeavour to remove those erroneous impressions under which both of you seem to be labouring.

The Mayor of Salford, by virtue of his office is a justice of the peace during his mayoralty and the year following, and the present mayor does issue warrants and summonses, and adjudicates thereon in all cases arising with the municipal borough; within such limits he has equal powers with county justices; and it is for the transaction of business requiring more than one magistrate, and extending beyond the limits of the borough, that county justices sit with him every Wednesday, and on other days, when necessary. What your correspondent means by a "new blunder," and what you mean by a defect in the charter," it is difficult to conceive. The form used by her Majesty's Privy Council, in the charter granted to Salford, is precisely similar (except as to boundaries, &c.) to that used in the charter granted to Manchester, Birmingham, Sheffield, &c. and contains like powers, immunities, &c.; but allow me to remind you, that it is the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 57, and not the charter, which constitutes the mayor a justice of the peace; the blundering evidently rests with your correspondent and yourself, and for the purpose of remedying it, oblige me by inserting this explanation in your paper of to-morrow.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

J. H. HULME.

1, Bexley-street, Salford, April 18, 1845.

[Mr. Hulme has pointed out where the error has arisen, into which, in the hurry of the moment, we were betrayed.—Ed. of the Courier.]

To Readers and Correspondents.

W. T. R.—We have not heard of a projected new edition of "Sugden on Powers."

AN ARTICLED CLERK.—The letter on legal education is declined for want of room.

Many communications relative to Advertising Attorneys and Sham Lawyers are unavoidably postponed.

E. C. (Stockport)—The letter is much too long for insertion at this season; but he may be assured that it is not contemplated to apply any new scheme of education to Clerks already articled.

J. L. W.—The LAW TIMES does not give gratis opinions.

T. C. A.—There is such a useful book as he inquires about, entitled, "The Lawyer's Common Place Book," published by Spettigue.

P. R. A. must accept the same answer as we have given above to other correspondents on the same subject.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Publisher begs to inform the Subscribers to the LAW TIMES that the subscription for the current half-year should be transmitted in the course of the ensuing week, by those who wish to avail themselves of the advantages of prepayment.

Members of the Verulam Society are requested at the same time to forward their subscriptions for the current year.

The pre-paid subscription for the current half-year of THE CRITIC, henceforth to be published weekly, will be 8s. 6d. only.

The Indices to the fourth volume being now completed, the numbers for binding may be sent, through the post, in parcels open at the ends, with a mark by which they may be known, and of which the Publisher should be advised by letter, as also how, when bound, it is to be returned. If sent by parcel, advantage may be taken of the opportunity to inclose other books for the binder.

The Volumes of the LAW TIMES, handsomely and uniformly bound, at 5s. 6d. each, if forwarded to the Office; with the Solicitor's name and abode lettered on the cover, 1s. extra.

An Alphabetical Index to the Cases in the current Volume of the LAW TIMES always lies at the Office for the purpose of reference.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1845.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

THE number of heavy judgments recently delivered, and the long arrear of reports and other legal intelligence which has accumulated, notwithstanding the supplement of last week, will compel us on Saturday next to adopt the enlarged sheet, and which the completion of the new printing machine will now permit. The next will, therefore, be a double number of the LAW TIMES.

THE NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

THESE voluminous Orders are at length published. They would fill two or three LAW TIMES, and therefore in its columns they can only be published in parts. But inasmuch as, when in operation, they will be indispensable in the office, we have made arrangements with a Chancery barrister to edit a convenient pocket edition of them, with notes pointing out the changes they effect in practice, and a copious index by which ready reference may be made to any topic of which they treat.

This will form one of the publications of the Verulam Society, and it will be brought out with all speed compatible with completeness.

As the new Orders do not come into operation until October, the members and others may wait the appearance of this practical edition of them.

THE BAR AND THE PRESS.

THIS question continues to engage the attention of the Profession and the press. The Times has given no heed to the censures that have been so freely passed upon it in public and in private, nor does it make any sign of repentance or of alteration in its infamous course. So long as the misconduct is continued must rebuke and exposure keep pace with it.

It is fortunate that in the instance it has selected for the display of its malignancy its efforts can be so easily and effectually counteracted. Mr. Serjeant TALFOURD's reputation is already beyond the reach of the Times: to the public his name is familiar and his fame is known. The suppression of that name in law reports cannot harm him with the public. Nor, indeed, was that the design of the managers of the Times. Their aim was and is to injure him in his profession, by leading the attorneys to believe that he has no business, and consequently to induce them to give their briefs elsewhere. But this calculation will be utterly defeated now that the deception is known. The Law Magazine and the LAW TIMES have effectually informed, and will continue to inform, the Profession, why it is that Mr. Serjeant TALFOURD's name does not appear in the newspapers so often as it used to do. The attorneys, therefore, cannot and will not be imposed upon by the falsehoods of the Times. Happily there are few (certainly not one in ten) of all the attorneys in England and Wales who do not see the LAW TIMES, who do not look to it for reports of the legal proceedings of the courts, rather than to the Times, which caters more for the general reader than for the lawyer. Here they will see what the learned Serjeant is really doing; here his name will appear in its proper place; and, knowing that it is the practice of the Times to suppress it, the Profession will not be led by the Times in any of its reports, upon which it is now proved that not the slightest reliance can be placed, but will turn to some less tainted source for their information.

The Morning Chronicle has treated the subject in an article of great power, some parts of which we must lay before our readers:

This grave accusation has now been twelve days before the public. It has been, if we are rightly informed, the subject of indignant comment in the Morning Advertiser, Morning Herald, and Law Times—it has been the subject of daily conversation in Westminster Hall and in the Inns of Court; it has been the theme of alternate wonder and reproach among attorneys and clients; it has puzzled and disgusted the general public, lay as well as professional; and yet the Times, thus publicly charged, thus branded with malignant forgery and fraud, has come forth with no "confession and avoidance," still less with any indignant solemn denial. Although we had ourselves received many communications on the subject, yet we refrained from interfering in the matter so long as there was the slightest ground for hope that the Times might be able to give some explanation of so serious a charge. But our contemporary is still silent. To bully and bluster would not do in such a case, to brazenly back out of the scrape is manifestly impossible, and therefore the Times holds its peace, and suffers judgment to be recorded against it, pretty much in the manner of the sailor, who, when tried and convicted before the late Sir John Silvester of stealing a quadrant, and asked what he had to say why sentence should not be passed on him, exclaimed, "It's a d—d bad business, and the less that's said about it the better."

But though this may be the silent tactique of the Times, all branches of the profession, and all branches of the press, have a common interest in having this scandalous breach of trust—this fraud and deceit—this giving false and mutilated evidence of what occurs in a court of justice—punished, exposed, and held up to the indignant reprobation of every honest man. The consideration of the paltry, mean-minded malice of which an individual is the victim, is but a trifle in comparison with the great public question involved. Though commiseration for the victim of such cowardly and vindictive malice may be enhanced in considering that he is not only a skilful, diligent, faithful, honourable, and highly-gifted advocate—yet, were the individual thus sought to be trampled on as coarse, and unscrupulous, and mean-minded as the most obtrusive, unblushing self-puffer and self-reporter of the day, we should feel it our duty to protest as strongly against this fraudulent system of reporting, were it exercised against the Bettesworth of the bar,(a) as we do now in the case of Mr. Sergeant Talfourd—an amiable man, of genius, eloquence, and professional learning. No mean issue is here at stake. The existence of the public press and the freedom of discussion are alike involved in this question. If it be for a moment tolerated that an irresponsible individual, of whom, perhaps, no human being in any learned profession ever heard—is to have the right, by a mere stroke of his pen, of falsifying the reports of courts of justice, there is an end to the usefulness of the press as an engine of intercommunication, intelligence, and improvement.

The privilege of publishing judicial proceedings is sanctioned by law solely on grounds of public policy and convenience; but it is an indispensable condition to such a privilege that the proceeding shall be fairly, impartially, and truly reported. This condition applies not merely to a misstatement of facts, but to a misstatement of names—not merely to errors of commission, but to errors of omission. This is not merely good sense and good feeling, but good law.

It has been held that the protection afforded by law to the publication of judicial proceedings did not warrant "the least misrepresentation of facts." If any other doctrine were acted on judicially, there is nothing to prevent "The huckster of printed wares, who barters still under the pretence and colour of giving to the public legal reports, from misrepresenting and misstating proceedings, from unduly exalting the reputation of one professional individual who basks in his favour, or from unduly depreciating the talents of another who has the good fortune to incur his dislike. Were such a system submitted to, the deceitful commendation of one man, and the unmerited censure of another, would create for a time a double and intolerable mischief, and the calumny and slander would to many appear the authentic record of what passed in a court of justice. Thus would history be worse than an old almanac, and fact become the most extravagant of fictions.

This is a merely general ground of objection; but when the system is viewed in reference to the character and fortune of individuals, it is a system of irresponsible tyranny, of fraud and oppression and slander, for which we verily believe a legal remedy exists, and for which we are certain a legal remedy ought to exist.

The journalist who seeks to degrade an individual from his place and condition in his profession, by wilful misrepresentation or suppression of his name, is guilty of as great wrong and offence to that individual as he is guilty of an offence against society by attempting to raise, by preposterous praise or commendation, a friend of his own to advantages and honours which he does not deserve. It is obvious, says Mr. Starkie, in his admirable treatise "On the Law of Slander"—

"That where individuals have an interest in being truly represented, in order to enjoy a degree of confidence and esteem proportioned to their merits, the public have a mutual and correlative interest in truly knowing where trust may be safely and beneficially reposed. The right, then, of every man to the character and reputation which his conduct deserves, stands on the same footing with his right to the enjoyment of his life, liberty, health, prosperity, and all the comforts and advantages which pertain to a state of civil society."

The Times, in seeking to exalt one professional man, and to open to him the avenues of prosperity and honour, and to degrade and to disgrace another, is guilty, to use the language of the old common law, "of writing false news," a crime indictable and punishable under the old law, if not under the existing law.

The great professional question is, as we have already indicated, whether, consistently with professional etiquette, aye, and with his personal honour, any Barrister can continue to report for a newspaper which avowedly falsifies his reports for the purpose of injuring his brother Barristers; whether, by permitting himself to be made a tool for such a purpose, he does not in fact become a party to the wrong, and thereby exclude himself from the position of a gentleman and the society of his fellows. This is the grave question which all Barristers reporting for the Times will have to put to themselves; it is one which must be put to them by their fellows in town, by their mess on the circuits. Thus is the affair of Mr. Serjeant Talfourd and the Times one of a very wide professional interest; one upon which every man at the Bar may be called upon to pass judgment; one which every lawyer in the kingdom is bound to treat as an insult and indignity offered to his Profession, and thereby to himself.

And, being thus important, we must return to it.

PATERSON'S JOINT STOCK COMPANIES ACTS.

The second edition of this work, comprising the Companies Clauses Consolidation Acts, just passed, is in the press, and will be published in a few days. This work also will form one of the publications of the Verulam Society.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The 5th number of Criminal Law Cases is published, and the 6th is in the press: they contain full reports of the very important cases reserved on circuit.

The 12th number of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases will be ready on Saturday next, and immediately thereafter the seventh number of Practice Cases, which will commence those in Equity, and the cases in the Common Law Courts during Easter Term.

Two more Practical Forms are now in the press, namely—

No. 70. Notice of Tithe Rent Charge in Arrear, price 1s. 6d. per dozen.
No. 71. Warrant of Distress for Debts, price 1s. 6d. per doz.

Very shortly another attempt will be made to procure the support of the society for some text-books, which every member wants, but in the choice of which they so differ, that a sufficient number to justify publication cannot be obtained to agree upon any one. We propose two Text-books, namely, the Practice of Wills and the Law of Stamps. As each of these works is far advanced, and the subject of each is interesting to every practitioner, it is resolved to submit them to the members, with the hope that where the choice is not diffused among many proposals, they will make an effort to secure a beginning.

It will be seen by the preceding notifications that the new edition of Paterson's Joint Stock Companies Acts, and the practical edition of the New Orders in Chancery, are to be added to the publications of the society, whereby the members will be entitled to them at the society's prices.

SHAM LAWYERS.

The Law Times of April 12, p. 28, contained an advertisement of one William Turner, of Southwold, who announced himself as Law Agent and Auctioneer.

The following letter, signed apparently by the said William Turner, has been forwarded to us, and we commend it and the writer to the vigilant scrutiny of the nearest Law Association.

Sir,—Mr. Rudland, Surgeon, of Southwold, has requested me to make application to you for the payment of the sum of 4*l.* 3s. 11d. due from you to him. Also to inform you that unless the same be paid to me within five days from this date, I am fully authorized to proceed for the recovery thereof. I therefore request you will attend to this application; and, I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

Wangford, 25th April, 1845. Wm. Turner.

To Mr. Saunders.

CHANCERY COMPENSATION JOB.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The Law Times of the 22nd February last directed the attention of its readers to a pamphlet professing to be a statement in support of Mr. Watson's motion for a committee of the Commons to inquire into this most shameless and mysterious affair.

It now appears, from the Accountant-General's annual account, laid on the table of the House of Commons, and printed, that the cost, so far from having decreased, as is intended to be implied, from the fact of the new-fangled functionaries created under the Act having lowered the outrageous and, as it now turns out, wholly unnecessary fees imposed on the suitors to pay the compensations and salaries, has actually increased during the last year; the sums paid for salaries and expenses by the Accountant-General, according to that account, having amounted to 34,037*l.* 9s. 8d.; the compensations to 45,661*l.* 5s. 8d.; together, 79,698*l.* 15s. 4d.

It has been observed by a person whose opinions, from his practice and the situation he afterwards filled in the court, are entitled to weight, that nothing can be more absurd than permitting persons with an income averaging 7,000*l.* a year, in compensation and salary, to be taxing costs. Surely a compensation of 5,000*l.* a year might have enabled them, if their ideas had been moderate, to have retired comfortably. It having been avowed by the Solicitor-General that one of these gentlemen concocted these compensations and the Bill, there is something very insulting to the public, and to the unhappy suitors and practitioners, in having those persons placed immediately under their noses, as a nova progenies of Master, with a salary very nearly double that of a Master in the common law courts.

It is not necessary to adopt the precise description given by Mr. Pemberton Leigh (who was whimsically enough charged by Sir James Graham with being one of the authorities answerable for these compensations) of the duties and services in respect of which they have been awarded; the striking out in the Commons of the names of the Lords of the Treasury, originally inserted as commissioners to award the compensation, is the best measure of the honesty of the transaction, and of the power of the Necromancer "who drew the Bill."

In the last session of Parliament very strong petitions, praying inquiry, were presented in the Commons from the solicitors of Bristol, Brighton, Preston, York, Hull, and Newcastle, where there are Law Associations, and from those places petitions have again already arrived, or will shortly be presented; but neither from Devonshire, Gloucestershire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, Somersetshire, nor Wiltshire, where there are Law Associations, have petitions as yet come in. But their members should bestir themselves while there is yet time. The vote of an Association is not necessary in order to petition Parliament for this inquiry; any number of solicitors, who condemn the job, might pray inquiry, and by forwarding the petition to their friends in the House, and asking their support of it, may render essential service to the public, the suitors, and the Profession. It is only necessary to write the petition upon paper, sign, and forward it in time for Mr. Watson's motion, appointed for Thursday next.

New Books.

The Law of Nisi Prius, Evidence in Civil Actions, and Arbitration and Awards: with an Appendix of the New Rules, the Statutes of Set-off, Interpleader, and Limitation, and the Decisions thereon. By Archibald John Stephens, Barrister-at-Law. In 3 vols. London, Longman and Co.

Our attention was first directed to this elaborate work by the following letter, received from one of the subscribers to the Law Times.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Your notice of the last edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius, in the Law Times, 102, containing a calculation of the number of cases abstracted and arranged in the former, led me to estimate the total number digested in that Compendium of Common Law, The Law of Nisi Prius, Evidence, Arbitration, and Awards, by Archibald John Stephens, esq. which I purchased a few months ago.

The table of "Names of Cases cited" occupies about 96 pages royal octavo, severally divided into three columns. Each page contains, on an average, 184 cases; the whole number, on a fair calculation, amounts to 17,664. You will perceive a great disparity (nearly 10,000 cases) in favour of Stephens.

Stephens's Nisi Prius, unfortunately, did not come out under the patronage of the Law booksellers, having been published by Longman and Co. The table of contents, indices, and arrangement of the mass of information presented are each admirable, and the type excellent. In practice it is a most ready and sure reference.

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

NUMERICUS.

Shrewsbury, April 7, 1845.

We immediately procured the publication, and, as in duty bound to the learned and laborious author, proceed to give to our readers a description of it, similar to that which has been lately presented of Selwyn and Archbold. Thus will they have such a knowledge of the three most recent treatises on the Law of Nisi Prius, from the strictly impartial account of each we have endeavoured to convey, as will enable a choice to be made between them.

Mr. STEPHENS's Nisi Prius is by far the most voluminous of the three. Archbold is compressed into two small volumes of convenient size for circuit. Selwyn extends to two large octavo volumes. But Stephens is expanded into three still more bulky tomes, and each page contains a great deal more type. Hence the fact, discovered by our ingenious correspondent, and which, at first, seems almost impossible, that Stephens should contain nearly ten thousand cases more than Selwyn, while probably Selwyn contains more than Archbold. As a mere compilation of cases, therefore,—a sort of digested index, Stephens would appear to be the most useful for the book-shelf, while his contemporaries, and especially Archbold, are, from their very condensation and compactness, more convenient for carriage.

But it must be admitted that it is not bulk alone, or number of cases collected, that is to test the worth of a law-book. It is not with that as with the brain from which it proceeds, that, cæteris paribus, size is the measure of power. On the contrary, expansion is more easy in legal composition than contraction. The best writer is he who can, when he cites a case, present only the very point decided, and then, from a stream of cases, can deduce, in distinct definition, the principles they establish. Two copies of Harrison and a pair of scissors would enable any man to make up a great book on any given subject, if nothing more were wanting than a gathering of all the cases, good, bad, and indifferent, that bear upon it ever so remotely.

But, on the other hand, it must be borne in mind, that dangers attend the condensing system, unless it be most skilfully conducted. We are then altogether at the mercy of the author; we must take his word for it that such was the purport of the decision, such the gist of the case, such the principle evolved. He does not give us the materials for forming our own judgment or testing his accuracy. If he err, he may lead us into mischiefs we cannot by any sagacity avoid.

Mr. STEPHENS appears to have felt the difficulties that beset him on either side, and to have steered between them with considerable skill. The law of Nisi Prius has received from him the most elaborate treatment to which it has yet been subjected; not only has he collected a greater number of cases bearing upon it, in the proportion, as it seems, calculated by our correspondent, but he has cited those cases at more length; and when he has occasion to set forth statute law, he copies the very words of the legislature. Furthermore, in addition to the usual subjects treated of in all works on Nisi Prius, he has introduced the subjects of evidence in civil actions, and arbitration and awards. There is a copious appendix of the new rules, and the statutes of set-off, interpleader, and limitation, with notes of the cases that have arisen upon them.

Some idea of the vast array of legal lore gathered and classified in this laborious publication may be formed from this; that it consists of three volumes large octavo, closely but clearly printed, with no waste of margin; each volume contains upwards of a thousand such pages; the index fills no less than two hundred and eight pages, and this alone will entitle it to the attention of all who know the incalculable value of a copious and well-digested index to a law-book. The names of the cases cited fill one hundred pages, having three columns in each; and the list of text-authors cited occupies eight columns.

Of course we say nothing, because we know nothing, of the accuracy of the citations, for we do not undertake to follow the author through his law library. But we have heard no complaints on this score from those who have had occasion to resort to the work in the course of their practice. We presume, moreover, that the author has employed the usual precautions to secure accuracy in this respect.

We have been induced to enter upon a more minute description of this work than is our wont, or than, under ordinary circumstances, we should have attempted, because it has been subjected to some very unfair treatment. It was brought out when the Profession did not possess an independent journal; when the only media through which legal intelligence or legal authorship could be conveyed to them were in the hands of interested parties, who used them wholly for their own purposes. Mr. STEPHENS's Nisi Prius was not published by either of those parties; hence it was burked by their organs, or, if noticed at all, only with abuse; the Profession were either kept in ignorance of its existence, or prejudiced against its pretensions. Glad we are to be enabled, however slightly, to remedy the wrong.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

SALES BY AUCTION.

THE vast increase of Sales by Auction, consequent upon the repeal of the auction duty, will be apparent from the pages of the LAW TIMES. From all parts of the country announcements of land sales come crowding into its columns, as the medium adopted for circulating such information among those who are peculiarly the buyers of property, and private communications assure us that the advantages of public competition are already being generally recognized among the Solicitors and others engaged in the selling of estates. Sale by private contract is always a troublesome affair. Each party desires to make the best bargain he can; if a price be named by the vendor, it is seldom the real one, nor is it so deemed by the buyer. Then begins a system of bidding on both sides; each is afraid of the other; each hopes that by standing out he may obtain somewhat better terms; delay often brings with it difficulty, always harass and vexation; and when at last the bargain is struck, it is usually at a sacrifice, which might have been avoided by the more prompt and satisfactory form of public sale. In this latter there can be no disagreement, no complaint, no after-regrets on either side. The property obtains its utmost value, and often more than its value, for the buyer must make up his mind on the instant and bid, or lose for ever the object of his desire. By private contract a seller never can obtain more, and usually he will procure less, than by public auction; and for this reason: a purchaser will of course offer as much at the auction as he would be inclined to do in private; but inasmuch as the limits he has assigned to himself can rarely be known to the other party, the property will usually be parted with at less than the point to which the buyer would have advanced, if compelled to the extent of his intentions by public competition. For these reasons we conceive that it will be the duty of Solicitors henceforth, on all occasions, to sell the property confided to their disposal by public auction. And to aid them in the performance of this duty we are promised a series of articles on the Law of Auctions.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

[From the lately published number of the Law Review we extract the following able essay on the Law relating to Conditions of Sale.]

ART. VI.—ON THE LAW RELATING TO CONDITIONS OF SALE.

NO persons experience more surprise than the owners of landed estates, when they are informed that the property which they have enjoyed for a long course of years, either by descent from an ancestor, or by undisturbed transfer from a former owner, is in point of law totally unmarketable. The general ignorance respecting the nature of titles and the principles of tenure leads such parties to imagine, that estates, of which they are the lawful owners by every moral right, are therefore accompanied by an equally unquestionable legal title. But a long series of decisions in Courts of Equity upon suits for the specific performance of contracts, whether for the sale or for the purchase of lands, has established a contrary conclusion, and rendered it an imperative precaution on the part of every vendor, that his title should undergo a strict technical investigation before he offers his estate for sale. By such means a well-advised vendor is saved from entering into fruitless contracts; while he avoids the still greater disadvantage and probable loss arising from the condemnation of his title by a court of justice, and from the inducements or opportunities thus afforded for the preferment of adverse claims resting upon flaws unadvisedly exposed. He is thus enabled beforehand to impose such restrictions on a purchaser, and to reserve such rights to himself, as shall effectually obviate the difficulties and perils to which we have alluded: or otherwise to refrain from offering his estate for sale with a doubtful or unmarketable title.

Special conditions of sale have hence derived their origin: and when the language in which they are clothed, and the points to which they relate, are carefully digested and selected, the result is of great value to the vendor. Such conditions, however, are often inartificially and illogically drawn; they frequently proceed upon an insufficient knowledge of the title to which they relate, and not seldom exhibit a very limited apprehension of the effects or consequences which will result from the conditions themselves. In point of form they fluctuate as widely as last wills and testaments; and on many occasions they have been productive of so much litigation and mischief, that an unreserved or unconditional sale would probably have been less detrimental to the parties concerned. It appears also, from Sir Edward Sugden's denunciation of the practice, that auctioneers were formerly employed or allowed to prepare the conditions of sale; but that learned writer advises that a vendor should never permit such a course of proceeding, as continual disputes had arisen from the misstatements consequent upon their ignorance of the title. This practice has probably now ceased; but in consequence of the want of fixed precedents applicable with the same facility as common forms in conveyances, great uncertainty has prevailed as to the interpretation of the conditions most frequently used, and the best mode of rectifying the errors which they contain.

Such conditions, however, are not, in our apprehension, necessarily accompanied by all their present dangers and imperfections. The preparation of such conditions in an effectual form is doubtless an exercise of the utmost skill and knowledge of the conveyancer. But the subject will probably be matured by the various decisions of the courts into something like a systematic shape, in the same way as the established forms of conveyancing have acquired their present accuracy and precision; and in the meantime the construction of a well-digested code of conditions applicable to all the ordinary emergencies of vendors and purchasers, and expressed in language of definite legal import, would be a task worthy of the highest learning and attainments in the doctrines of real property.

In Hyde v. Dallaway (4 Beav. 606), Lord Langdale, M.R. observed on the difficulty which the Court sometimes had in dealing with special conditions of sale. "On the one hand it was hard to say that parties should not enter into contracts suited to their convenience and to the exigency of their titles; but, on the other hand, conditions of sale were sometimes of such a nature, that it was scarcely practicable to carry them into execution, consistently with the settled principles of Courts of Equity."

In cases, therefore, of this sort, the leaning of the Courts of Equity is most strongly against the vendor, and every opportunity is taken of remitting a purchaser to his original or ordinary rights as derived from an unconditional contract. "If a vendor," says Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, "means to exclude a purchaser from that which is matter of common right, he is bound to express himself in terms the most clear and unambiguous; and if there be any chance of reasonable doubt, or reasonable misapprehension of his meaning, I think that the construction must be that which is rather favourable to the purchaser than to the vendor." (1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 490.) Vice-Chancellor Wigram has likewise made the following observations on the same subject. "I have no hesitation in saying that I think conditions of sale, like those before me (the meaning of which no purchaser knows, until ex post facto decisions of a court of justice inform him of it), ought to be discouraged, and that I am but offering such discouragement by putting a strict construction upon them in favour of a purchaser, and by holding that they are not to have a construction which might subject purchasers to a great expense and inconvenience at the mere will of a vendor." (2 Hare, 115.)

In some cases the vendors have secured to themselves the most unlimited protection, by expressly selling their estates with such title only as they actually possess; and this condition will be upheld against the purchaser, unless he can shew that the language is ambiguous or otherwise insufficient. Thus in Freme v. Wright (4 Madd. 364), the assignees of a bankrupt contracted to assign his interest in certain property, under such title as he lately held the same, and although the title was defective, the Vice-Chancellor, Sir J. Leach, decreed a specific performance against the purchaser. His Honour said, that "although a party proposing to sell an estate without qualificatio[n] asserts in fact that it is his to sell, and that he has a good title, yet he may, if he thinks fit, contract to sell such title as he has; and the question is whether he did make such a contract."

With vendors who are sui juris, and selling on their own account, it is of course always optional whether they will annex special conditions to their contracts or make an unqualified sale at all hazards. But with some parties, as, for instance, assignees of bankrupts, it is absolutely necessary that they should sell under special conditions; for though Lord Rosslyn in Pope v. Simpson (5 Ves. 145) thought that assignees saying nothing about their title were to be considered as selling only the interest which the bankrupt had; yet Lord Eldon in Dererell v. Bolton (18 Ves. 505, 512), said, "my clear opinion is that advertising to sell a freehold estate, they undertake, whether they say so or not, to make a title."

Again, with respect to lessees selling their leases, it is often highly prudent or expedient to deprive the purchaser of his ordinary right to call for the lessor's title. Sales of leasehold property may be defeated by the vendor's inability to produce the lessor's title: and the only remedy for this difficulty is to annex to the sale a special condition that the vendor shall not be obliged to produce such title, or that the purchaser shall take the lessee's title, notwithstanding the non-production of the lessor's title.

In Ord v. Noel (5 Madd. 438), it was laid down by Sir J. Leach, Vice-Chancellor, that a trustee selling an estate by auction is bound to exercise the same degree of caution as a provident vendor would have used in the sale of his own property. It may therefore be presumed that where a title is in such a state, that if the property were put up to sale without restrictive conditions, the contract could not be carried into effect, unless at the risk of litigation or under the probability of great expense to be occasioned by the requisitions of the purchaser, trustees would not only be justified in imposing special conditions, but would be in danger of being held liable as for a breach of trust, if they abstained from taking such precautions. Such a liability may be obviously prevented by timely investigation of the title previously to the sale.

The repeal of the auction duties is producing a sensible effect upon the trade of auctioneering. Respectable auctioneers are now arranging periodical sales in different places (as may be seen in our advertising columns), and offering their services to dispose of stock at any of the markets and fairs within their range. The plan of disposing of agricultural produce is certain to afford the advantage of competition, and on that account will, no doubt, be extensively adopted. —Worcester Journal.

AUCTION DUTIES.—On Saturday, the Act "to Repeal the Duties of Excise on Sales by Auction, and to impose a New Duty on the License to be taken out by all Auctioneers in the United Kingdom" was printed. The Act received the Royal Assent on Thursday last, when it took effect, but no duty [is] to be charged on sales from the 8th ult. There are nine clauses in the Act. The new duty on auctioneers' licenses is now 10*l.* a year, instead of five guineas. Among the new regulations is the following one in respect to the names and addresses of auctioneers:—"And be it enacted, that every auctioneer, before beginning any auction, shall affix or suspend, or cause to be affixed or suspended, a ticket or board containing his true and full Christian and surname and residence, painted, printed, or written in large letters, publicly visible and legible, in some conspicuous part of the room or place where the [auction is] held, so that all persons may easily read [the s]ame, and shall also keep such ticket or board so affixed or suspended during the whole time of such auction being held; and if any auctioneer begins at any auction, or acts as auctioneer at any auction in any room or place where his name and residence is not so painted or written on a ticket or board so affixed or suspended, and kept affixed or suspended as aforesaid, he shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 20*l.*"

THE STEWARTFIELD ESTATE.—We understand that Lord Campbell has purchased the estate of Stewartfield, which lies in the immediate vicinity of Jedburgh. The exact price which his lordship has paid for it we have not learned, but we believe it to have been between 45,000*l.* and 50,000*l.*—Kelso Paper.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, April 23.

GARCIAS v. RICARDO.

Staying proceedings pending an appeal—Plea—Practice.

Where a plea had been overruled, and the defendants had appealed to the House of Lords, a motion to stay the plaintiff from enforcing an answer pending the appeal was refused, upon the ground that the delay which must occur to the plaintiff in the event of the appeal proving unsuccessful was such an injury to him as could not be repaired, whereas if the appeal was successful, the defendants would have only incurred the costs of putting in their answer: and although the bill sought accounts of pecuniary transactions of considerable extent, and which the defendants alleged involved the production of the whole business accounts of a great mercantile firm, the Court held that the balance of inconvenience was so clearly on the side of the plaintiff, that on appeal the refusal to suspend proceedings was affirmed.
